THE DAWN OF THE NEW YEAR

Finds us all in the turmoil of expectation; of apprehension and query "what shall the new year bring forth?" It was always so; and will remain so to the end of time. King Tut-Enkhamen several thousand years ago saw the same feverish anxiety among his subjects and experienced the same dilemma as we to-day are combatting. We look at the past as an ordeal surmounted and sarch the future with piercing gaze. We would be so happy we think, to read our own horoscope, but this desire is the worst possible human judgment. The most miserable soul on earth is the condemned criminal in his cell awaiting execution. Knowing his fate he rehearses the awful drama and suffers a hundred deaths before the eventful day. The Ruler of the Universe has quite wisely kept this predestination from His people. The publisher of this paper is optimistic for the future of North Adams; he wants to thank you one and all, first for reading the Advocate, which you no doubt did second, for paying for the paper, which most of you have done we know, and third for the good words you have spoken about us to your friends. May Peace and Prosperity be yours for 1926.

Clock One Hundred And Fifty Years Old

Reuben Cooley, of Medina, brought a fine, old clock to Phil Seewald, last week, for some minor repairs. Mr. Seewald, who is well versed with the habits, styles, designs etc., of all of the various members of the watch and clock family extending over a period of many years, pronounced the clock one of a family that must be at least 150 years old and probably even quite a few years beyond that number.

Mr. Cooley states that the clock was brought from Massachusetts to Ohio behind an ox team in 1816 and there is 109, or is it 110 years right there? Later the clock was brought to Michigan.

It is a fine piece of workmanship both as regards the woodwork and the mechanical part and is in fine running condition. On Christmas day at the Cooley family reunion, it occupied its old familiar place and told the happy Christmas gathering when it was time to distribute the Christmas gifts, when it was time for the big Christmas dinner and when it was time to bid goodbye, the same as it has done for the last century and a half.—Hudson Post.

Death of Mrs. Willis Crisp

Mrs. Willis Crisp of Hillsdale, formerly of this village, passed away at the home of her daughter Mrs. Baldauf at Edgarton, Ohio, Thursday morning last week after a short illness. Funeral services were conducted at 2:30 Sunday afternoon and she was interred at Oak Grove cemetery. Mrs. Addie Wyman, Mr. and Mrs. Giles Stevens and Mrs. Francelia Duguid were in attendance at the funeral.

Obituary

Mrs. Fallie Louise Nutten was born in Moscow township May 24, 1869 and passed away at her home Friday night Dec. 25, 1925. Her girlhood days were spent in the vicinity where she was born. She graduated from the North Adams High school and later taught school in the Mumford and Clapp districts.

She was united in marriage to William B. Wells of North Adams September 9 1896. They lived for one year in Lenawee Co. then returned to Moscow township and later to North Adams. About eight years ago they moved to Pittsford where they have since resided. She leaves two daughters Fern Woodard of Hillsdale, Dorothy at home. Two sons Roland of Ann Arbor and Raymond of Hudson. Two grandchildren and one sister Mrs. Alfred Haight besides a host of friends who will miss her kindly deeds and words of comfort.

Funeral services were held at the home at eleven o'clock Tuesday and interment was in the North Adams cemetery. Rev. G. A. Emerich spoke words of consolation to all present.

RESOLUTIONS

On the death of Edgar A. Williams.

WHEREAS: It has pleased the Ruler of the Universe, Whose acts are tempered with Mercy to remove by death, from our midst our brother Edgar A. Williams.

WHEREAS: While we feel the loss keenly of one so valued to our order while the relatives and friends mourn with us, we do not question the divine works of the Most High nor are we conversant with his plans for the welfare of his children on the earth.

RESOLVED: That the membership as a whole of Rural Lodge No. 72 I. O. O. F. hereby voice their regrets and announce their condolences with the relatives of the departed one.

RESOLVED: That the lodge be suitably draped in memory of Brother Williams, and that a copy of these resolutions be printed in the North Adams Advocate and the paper be transmitted to the bereaved family.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President Likely to Accept League's Invitation to Disarmament Parley.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE is desirous of accepting the invitation of the League of Nations to participate in the preliminary discussion of a world disarmament congress, and with that in view he has conferred with congressional leaders, asking whether it is necessary to obtain the permission of congress and an appropriation. Among others, Chairman Borah of the senate foreign relations committee was called to the White House. When he left he said he was in complete accord with the President on the subject, and it was indicated that the Chief Executive intended to submit the matter to congress. Senator Lenroot of Wisconsin also talked with Mr. Coolidge, and he said most of the senate would favor accepting the invitation of the league. Former Secretary of State Hughes was a guest of the President at luncheon and this led to the belief he would be named to head the American delegation to the congress, which was held to be quite fitting since he is given large credit for the Washington armament conference of 1921. Hugh Gibson, minister to Switzerland, will represent America in the preliminaries.

According to information from the White House, the President has considerably modified his idea that the United States might appropriately participate in a conference for the further reduction of naval armament, but that inasmuch as the limitation of land armament is almost solely an European problem America should not take part in the discussion of that matter unless invited in to compose differences of the European nations on the question.

Whether it will be necessary to obtain the consent of congress to acceptance of the league's invitation is a matter still undetermined. The Knox reservation to the Berlin treaty apparently is not applicable, but the act of 1913 forbids acceptance of an invitation to an international conference without specific authority of law. Senator King of Utah has introduced in the senate a resolution authorizing the President to accept the invitation, and Representative Hamilton Fish of New York has introduced a similar resolution in the house. The matter probably must await the reassembling of congress on January 4.

Another matter upon which Mr. Coolidge sought the advice of Mr. Hughes was the appeal by Chile from the decision of General Pershing delaying the Tacna-Arica plebiscite until April 15.

CONGRESS adjourned Wednesday for a 13-day holiday recess. The house had passed the tax reduction bill—which will not have such an easy passage through the senate—and had made ready to take a vote on the treasury-post office supply bill immediately after reconvening. It also adopted a resolution calling for an investigation of the alleged manipulation of crude rubber prices by the British colonial government.

While considering the treasury appropriation measure the representatives found an opportunity to give old John Barleycorn another hard jab. Mr. Tucker of Virginia, a dry, sought to amend the bill so as to restrict the use of funds in the purchase of liquor as evidence of law violation. The proposed appropriation for this purpose is $250,000, and Mr. Tucker's amendment would have provided that no portion of this might be used "to induce any person by fraud, deceit or falsehood to violate the prohibition law." The argument was long and warm, embracing the merits or demerits of prohibition, but when it came to a vote only 17 supported Mr. Tucker, while 139 were against him. This being in the committee of the whole, the votes were not recorded.

COLONEL MITCHELL may well pray to be saved from his friends if those who arose in congress in his behalf are representative of the men who believe in the suspended officer. Nothing could harm his cause more than the action of such men as Blanton of Texas, La Guardia of New York and Tillman of Arkansas, who have been abusing the court-martial and its verdict and seeking ways of undoing what it did. Secretary of War Davis, it is said in Washington, is going to try to restore harmony between the various branches of the army, and at the same time is determined to take drastic measures if necessary to maintain absolute discipline. He knows no reason for delay in bringing the significance of the Mitchell case home to any other branch of the service where there has been evidence of open disagreement with settled departmental or national policies.

Representative Bloom of New York has proposed to Mayor-Elect Walker that Colonel Mitchell be appointed police commissioner of New York city. He said he believed congress would enact any legislation necessary to make the appointment possible.

BRIG. GEN. SMEDLEY D. BUTLER resigned from the marine corps in order to continue as director of public safety of Philadelphia. Mayor Kendrick then, in a stormy interview with Butler, told him he did not want him in his cabinet "as a resigned officer because he did not want any other action misunderstood by President Coolidge," who had refused the general a further leave of absence. He demanded that Butler resign, and this being refused, he dismissed him from his position. It was understood that General Butler's resignation from the marine corps would be withdrawn. Concerning his plans he said:

"I'm going to my home in Overbrook and I'm going to drive there in a car of the United States marine corps. The marines can take care of me, and I'd rather be in the marine corps than in 15,000,000 cities like Philadelphia."

DISSATISFACTION with President Coolidge's farm relief legislation policies was voiced at Des Moines by the executive committee of the American Council of Agriculture and the Corn Belt Committee of Farm Organizations. The joint committee, which claims to represent more than a million farmers of the Middle West, criticized Mr. Coolidge's recent address concerning agriculture, denied that the Fordney-McCumber tariff is of great benefit to agriculture as a whole, and announced that an export measure would be submitted to congress. A resolution adopted notes "with a degree of amusement" that the new measure sponsored by Secretary Jardine is to prove a means of salvation to the farmer by supplying him with an expert fund of information about the "mysteries of co-operative marketing." Farmers, the resolution says, have more information than they need—in fact, have but little else, and need "a fair price rather than more information."

Congress is warned in another section of the joint committee's resolutions that industry "should not blame the farmers if they invoke the principle of self-preservation and declare war on the protective tariff." This "war" is promised if industry insists that it cannot exist without the tariff and refuses to grant agriculture like protection.

High up in the Republican party, too, there are those who believe that the President's plans do not go far enough. Among them are Senator Capper, Former Governor Lowden of Illinois and Vice President Dawes. Mr. Capper has his own program, the main features of which are:

1. Legislation providing machinery for segregating the surplus of any crop, selling it abroad for what it will bring, presumably at a price below that of the home market, and distributing the loss among the producers.

2. Development of co-operative marketing with the assistance of government agencies.

3. Liberalization of the farm loan law and amplification of the farm credit system.

4. Tax relief for the farmer, to be accomplished by rigid economy in national and local governments and by a constitutional amendment prohibiting issuance of tax-free securities, the present and increasing volume of which is becoming an unbearable tax burden to agriculture.

WHAT was characterized as one of the most sensational crop reports in the history of the country was issued Wednesday by the government and caused prices of wheat, corn and oats to skyrocket on the Chicago board of trade. The shorts were forced to cover without being able to force prices back materially. The figures released by the government were its final estimate on the 1925 yield of grains, which showed a downward revision somewhere in the vicinity of 30,000,000 bushels. This indicated that the country had used some 15,000,000 bushels of last year's carry-over. Total yield of all wheat is fixed at 669,365,000 bushels, or a decrease of 193,262,000 bushels, as compared with final figures a year ago.

The total crop and carry-over amount to 756,000,000 bushels. Of this the people consume in bread and seed 640,000,000 bushels, leaving a surplus of 116,000,000 bushels. Exports to December 1 total approximately 50,000,000 bushels, making a 66,000,000-bushel carry-over, or a reduction of 22,000,000 bushels, compared with last year.

ONE of the Middle West's sensational murder trials has ended with a verdict of guilty. John Looney, who used to be called the "king of the underworld" of Rock Island, Ill., and who formerly was editor of the Rock Island News, was convicted of killing William Gabel, a saloonkeeper who, according to the charges of the state, had betrayed Looney and eight others in a blackmail conspiracy. Looney was sentenced to 14 years in the penitentiary.

The Gabel killing was an upshot of vice and factional feud conditions in Rock Island for several years during which Looney's son, Conner, was killed as he sat in an automobile in front of a hotel, and Looney fled to the Southwest and for a long time successfully fought attempts to return him for trial.

AT THE insistence of Prime Minister Baldwin, the British parliament accepted the League of Nations council's award of the Mosul vilayet to Great Britain's mandate state of Irak, before recessing for the holidays. The Labor members protested and left the house in a body. Mr. Baldwin and his cabinet at once opened negotiations with Turkey which it is believed will remove the danger of war over the oil lands. The prime minister held a long conference with Ahmed Ferid Bey, the Turkish ambassador, and it was understood the latter left, pleased with the hope that Turkey would receive compensation for its loss. Paris correspondents assert that in case Turkey should remain recalcitrant and start hostilities, the British have planned for an attack on Turkey by the Greek and Italian armies and a naval demonstration by the British, French, Italian and Greek fleets. The western powers also have been moving to induce Russia to withdraw her support of Turkey.

THERE are signs of early peace in both Morocco and Syria, though some bloody engagements have taken place in recent days. Abd-el-Krim has sent an emissary to France to receive the French and Spanish terms, and the Druses in Syria are inclined to accept the offers of M. Jouvenal, the French high commissioner.

Ali, king of the Hedjaz, has abdicated because the Wahabis under Ibn Saud captured the city of Mecca after defeating the army at Jedda.

THERE was fierce fighting in China last week between the troops of Chang and the people's army, and the victories alternated, if dispatches can be credited The last report at this writing is that the Manchurian has defeated his foes and occupied strong positions. Meanwhile the Japanese forces continue to hold Mukden to protect the city and foreign interests there from the warring factions.

FRANK A. MUNSEY, millionaire publisher of newspapers and magazines, died in New York after an operation for appendicitis. He was a bachelor and left no direct heirs, and the disposition of his estate is a matter of interested speculation. His fortune, including the New York Sun and the Telegram, is variously estimated at from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000.

Advice on How to Use Airplane in Warfare

Dayton, Ohio.—If the United States were to engage in warfare tomorrow, a certain closely guarded book would be rushed to Washington from McCook field.

It would tell government officials how to build airplanes; exactly where to get materials; what aviation principles and ideas were sound and what were obsolete; what airplane parts should be standardized and what could not be used and should be junked.

At the field, which is the engineering division of the army air service, the book, which is not a volume in the strict sense of the word, is known simply as the "War Book." Its resting place is known to only a few and access to it is impossible.

The book consists of four sets of drawings and specifications. The first section contains all projects and problems under experiment. The second lists every item that goes into the construction of an airplane, from the smallest screw to the largest wooden strut. Drawings show how everything is made, where materials may be obtained and all details of procurement to the finished job.

In the third section under the head "obsolete," are listed items of airplane construction which may be used but which are no longer manufactured.

The final chapter is devoted to a description of integral parts of the airplane as well as the airplane as a whole which now are obsolete.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Mancelona—A 12-foot fall into the basement potato pit in his warehouse caused serious injuries to Asa Ball, potato buyer. He is believed to have lain there for 36 hours until friends investigated. It is thought he walked through an open trap door.

Port Huron—Deputy game wardens having jurisdiction in the St. Clair River and Lake St. Clair district have received word from Lansing that a recent law prohibits the spearing of fish through the ice on Lake St. Clair and its tributaries during the months of January, February and March.

Adrian—An outbreak of hog cholera was reported from Deerfield, Mich., where on one farm 24 hogs were discovered suffering from the disease. County Agricultural Agent C. L. Coffen immediately placed the farm under quarantine. It is the first outbreak in the county in considerable time.

Owosso—Rev. F. E. Chamberlain, pastor of the Elsie Methodist church, speaking at the service in his church, declared that "if I had my way, I would have every lawyer acting in a case in court, sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." The minister was discussing the modern jury system.

Adrian—The city commission has announced that it would purchase a new truck to replace the rural fire truck destroyed recently in a grade crossing accident in which Fireman William Vollmer, of the Adrian department was killed. Trucks assigned from the Adrian department will answer rural calls in the meantime.

Port Huron—George C. Watson, of Capac, a state representative, has been appointed by Judge E. F. Law as receiver of the Jeddo State Savings Bank, of Jeddo, Mich. The receiver will endeavor to straighten out the muddled condition of the bank's affairs and determine the shortage of the missing cashier, Squire Laings.

Lansing—The State Administrative Board has ordered the improvement of the last stretch of old road on M-16 between Grand Rapids and Detroit. The State Highway Department was instructed to prepare plans and secure right of way for widening and straightening the trunk line between Fowlerville and Howell. The present pavement is narrow, rough and crooked.

Sturgis—Fred Genbrow, an Indian, and Nelson Abbott, arrested at Three Rivers for collecting money "for disabled soldiers" were each fined $114 50 when they pleaded guilty to obtaining money under false pretenses. Both claim they are from Detroit. Genbrow and Abbott were suspected of complicity in a double safe blowing in Three Rivers recently when they hilariously entertained police, while the yeggs worked.

Muskegon—James A. Cronk, who has been the storm center in complaints made by various motor clubs regarding an alleged speed trap, is going to lose his job as motorcycle officer at North Muskegon. The city has agreed with the Attorney-General not to reappoint Cronk when his term expires Dec. 31. Upon the condition the city fire Cronk, the Attorney-General has withdrawn his demands for the resignation of Justice W. E. Oglesby.

Lansing—A contract for the establishment of a new industry in Jackson prison has been closed by the State Prison commission. The prison will take over the plant of the Cable Cot Co., of Boston, and produce steel cots. The Boston company will move its plant to the prison and give the equipment to the State. In return, the prison will make the cots for the company at a price of about $1.40 each. Orders for more than 200,000 cots are on hand.

Lansing—More than 1,000,000 quarts of whisky, beer, gin, wine, mash and moonshine have been seized by the State Police thus far this year, a report completed by the State Department of Public Safety shows. Much of the illicit liquor came from the Wayne county area where State Police combed the river front and raided numerous blind pigs and road houses. Prohibition violations constituted more than one-third of a total of 4,231 arrests made during the year.

Lansing—James Soper, said by medical authorities to be a typhoid carrier and to whom 21 cases of the disease have been traced at the Eaton Rapids church banquet, is to be isolated for life in a small house on a farm near Laingsburg, Shiawassee county, the state administration board announced. Soper, who is said to have been a typhoid carrier for 25 years, is to be moved to the farm of Harry Drake, where a permanent "Typhoid colony" will be established by the state. Drake will supply him with food.

Ypsilanti—An amendment to the city zoning ordinance designed to prohibit bill boards anywhere in the city except on the property or business which they advertise has been passed to second reading by the city council. The amendment is the outgrowth of a recent attempt on the part of an advertising concern to erect a 100-foot billboard adjacent to the Beyer Memorial Hospital here. Protests from large numbers of citizens and civic organizations were sent to the company at that time and it removed the billboard.

Corunna — The council after considerable discussion and several fruitless efforts to come to a decision between October 19, when first proposed, now finally has adopted a new plan of public lighting proposed in a contract with the Consumers' Power company. The company will rebuild the system completely and take over operation of the entire plant. It is estimated that the cost of operation of the augmented system will be about twice the present cost, but the city will be the best lighted small town in central Michigan.

Saginaw—Oil has been struck in the third of the Saginaw Prospecting company's wells at a depth of 1,834 feet.

Ann Arbor—Fires caused by spontaneous combustion have broken out in the coal bunkers of the University of Michigan heating plant. Because the fires are above the line to which water will reach men are moving the coal.

Greenville—Newsboys of this city will be in mourning on New Year's Day because of the death of John J. Winser, 82 years old, a veteran of Civil War, who had made a habit for the past 15 years of giving the youngsters a New Year's dinner at one of the local hotels.

Lansing—The purchase of the state operative cement plant at Chelsea has been authorized by the state administrative board. Under the terms of an option secured when the plant was taken over the state has been renting for two years at $75,000 a year with a privilege of buying for $500,000. The $150,000 paid in rent will apply on the purchase price.

Pontiac—William E. Carpenter, 76 years old, former state legislator and county supervisor for many years, died here last Saturday after a long illness. He was elected to the legislature in 1882 and again in 1890. For 10 years he represented Waterford township as supervisor and was secretary of the Monitor Insurance company for 13 years. The funeral was held Tuesday.

Saginaw—Fire of undetermined origin last week destroyed the interior of the Boston Store, a small downtown department store, causing damage estimated at close to $100,000. The fire was confined to one building, a three story structure, but several stores and shops in adjoining buildings were damaged by water. A job printing shop on the second floor of the building was destroyed.

Iron Mountain—Ernest G. Struebing, 56 years old said to be the heaviest man in Michigan, is dead at his farm home in Foster City. Struebing weighed 570 pounds and was six feet tall. His coffin will be seven feet in leigth, 38 inches wide and 34 inches high and will be carred by eight pallbearers. Because of its size, it will be impossible to use an ordinary motor hearse and a truck will be utilized instead.

Monroe—Nearly all of the wild ducks which had been resting on Lake Erie for several weeks have left for the southern climate, as the water is frozen a mile and half from shore in many places, according to an old hunter. Water in the creeks and marshes is likewise frozen, making it impossible for the fowl to obtain food. A few small flocks of ducks and geese are seen sometimes in the marshes toward night time.

Monroe—The anchor ice in Lake Erie, which has clogged the intake pipe of the crib in connection with Monroe's municipal waterworks system since last Wednesday, is clearing, and as a result, operations have been resumed at the waterworks pumping station near Lake Erie. It is expected that the reservoir of the filtration plant will soon contain its full quota of 3,000,000 gallons of water and there will be no water shortage for some time to come.

Lansing—The State will seek a permanent injunction to restrain the Detroit Reduction Co. from polluting the Huron River, despite equipment now being installed by the company designed to dispose of all waste matter. Officials of the company testified that evaporators and other equipment would be completed in about 60 days, which will prevent seepage from entering the river. The State decided to proceed with the case regardless. The hearing probably will last several days.

Flint—What is said to be the largest order of automobiles for retail delivery was entered recently at the Flint Motor company's plant when 2,000 machines were ordered for the Automobile Theft Bureau of America, according to an announcement made by factory officials. The Los Angeles Flint branch represented the company in the transaction. The plan of the bureau to curtail the increasing number of automobile thefts includes the use of both receiving and broadcasting radio sets for the automobiles which will patrol various districts in the country.

Owosso—The congregation of the First Congregational church of this city, has unanimously indorsed the stand of Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the University of Michigan, and the decision of the board of regents, that he had a perfect right to voice his opinions as he saw fit. Dr. J. T. Jones, president of the church, said that while "we may not agree with Dr. Little in everything he says, we must concede him the right of free speech just the same as any one else." "I predict," Dr. Jones said, "that Dr. Little will be a greater president than even our beloved Dr. Burton or Dr. Angell."

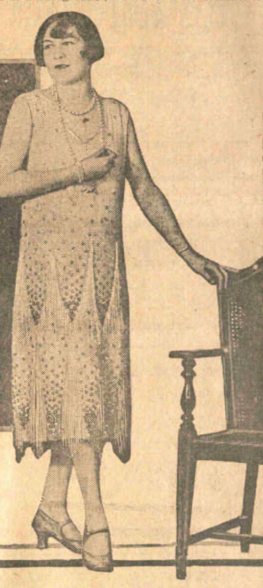
Lake Linden—Among the many and varied Christmas gifts which will come to the White House ~~for the~~ President and Mrs. Coolidge will be one from Lake Linden. A cedar chest of inlaid northern cedar was shipped from Lake Linden to Mrs. Coolidge, the gift of Nicholas Markusic, a carpenter in the stamp mills of the Calumet & Hecla Consolidated Mining company. According to Representative W. Frank James, this is the first Christmas that any one from northern Michigan has sent a present to the First Lady of the Land.

Grand Rapids—George G. Whitworth, nationally known among furniture manufacturers, died suddenly at his home here Sunday. Mr. Whitworth, president of the Consolidated Furniture Companies, had been in failing health for some time, but his death was unexpected. Mr. Whitworth was 75 years old, and after a colorful career as cowboy, clergyman, merchant and manufacturer, became affiliated with the Berkey & Gay Furniture Co. He was president of the National Alliance of Furniture Manufacturers for seven years.

BEADED GOWNS CONTINUE SWAY; OFF-THE-FACE BRIMS IN FAVOR

BEADED frocks continue to flash their glittering beauty across the path of fashion. Through loveliness of coloring and unique design these sheathlike dresses weighted with beads, rhinestones, pearls and paillettes continue to cast their enchantment over resplendent dance, dinner and other formal evening functions.

The most entrancing models are slips of daintiness whose sole purpose seems to be to serve as a background or setting which shall accent the scintillating beauty and intricacies of the beaded design worked thereon.



An Entrancing Model.

Like stars on a summer-night sky do rhinestones express their sparkling way on many a satin or georgette slip. Sometimes the idea is elaborated with pearl and crystal-laden pointed tabs as in the picture herewith. This exquisite frock is typical of the season's beaded modes. It may be pale pink, mauve or rose, for all the pastel tints, also white, are fashionable. Bead fringe embellished this evening frock, for bead fringe is an outstanding item of fashion interest this season.

There is an extensive use of tiny silver or gold beads on the modern-designed evening frock. A very handsome conception covers an almond-green georgette background heavily with design developed in the diminutive gold beads. There is a festooning of gold fringe in tiers about the skirt. This straight-lined frock is worn over a costume slip of gold cloth.

Pale pink and white beaded gowns which bespeak simplicity in their general aspect, but which are really wonderfully constructed, are the preferred models. These are artistically all-over patterned with rhinestones and mother-of-pearl paillettes.

Perhaps no frock more eloquently bespeaks the elegance of evening mode than does the beaded kind.

Returned to fashion's favor are off-the-face brims. It will be seen from the models here pictured that the new shapes bespeak becomingness and lines of beauty through foldings, plaits, indentations and undulations which mark the modish upturning of their brims.

Many of the just-off-the-[illegible] Paris hats are inclined to be medium or large and they have brims of taffeta or silk manipulated after the manner of those in the group herewith, the crowns being in many instances of straw.

This is to be a season of graceful adjustable brims. Even the newer shaded felt gigolo shapes, with tall, curiously creased crowns which are so popular, have brims which may be pulled down or rolled up at a becoming angle.

Captions such as ruffian, sombrero and pirate as applied to advance fashionable millinery suggest that brims are taking on a somewhat reckless yet fascinating freedom of lines. Which fact, however, but bespeaks the exceeding grace and picturesqueness of hats for the immediate future.

A leading material employed in the making of midseason hats is bright-colored silk faille. Soft greens and rose tones find favor for town-wear millinery. There is a tremendous vogue for bois de rose and allied shades. Most charming with the fur coat is either a velours or faille hat in dull rose with a single large flower of match color reposing low on the brim to the right side.

An increasing vogue for velvet ribbon is registered in arriving models. The blending of colors in velvet ribbons is one of the ideas emphasized in a trimming way.

A great deal of importance is ascribed to the subject of belting ribbon. The narrow is used for trimming, the wide for making hats.

Black Satin Hats

The newest hats for wear with fur and fur-trimmed coats are of heavy black satin closely draped to form turbans and ornamented with exquisite jeweled motifs. One is of crystal and brilliants and is in the form of a huge dragonfly.

Shoes Combine Black-Gray

Smart street shoes are made of a combination of gray and black leather and have large cut-steel buckles.

To Keep Crib Smooth

To keep the rubber sheet in baby's crib always in its place, stitch a width of cotton cloth on either side of the rubber sheeting, draw the cloth under the mattress and fasten both sides together with safety pins.

Tweeds in Blue

The new blue tweeds are extremely attractive. The new shade of blue is most becoming and the dresses and suits are both simple and smart.

The GOLDEN RULE in PRACTICE

A series of articles by prominent leaders on the Golden Rule as a guide in International Relations.

PLAIN LIVING AND HIGH THINKING

By CHARLES V. VICKREY

General Secretary of the Near East Relief

THE GOLDEN RULE is a universal creed. Everybody accepts it. Most people try to practice it.

Golden Rule Sunday is examination day—a day of plain living and high thinking; of self-measurement by the Golden Rule to see how big we really are.

Golden Rule Sunday comes midway between the feasts of Thanksgiving and Christmas.

On Thanksgiving Day we satisfy ourselves with good things. We survey our broad acres, bulging granaries, and busy factories. We reappraise our unprecedented and soaring wealth of more than three hundred billion dollars, far transcending anything previously or elsewhere known in all the world. Not least are we thankful for government under which life and property are safe. Truly no people ever had as great reason for gratitude as have we in America on Thanksgiving Day, 1925.

At Christmas we again indulge in feasting and mirth, and share some of our luxuries with relatives and friends, some of whom are sore perplexed to know where to store the gifts that we pour into their well provided homes.

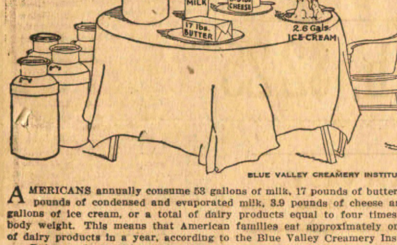
But on Golden Rule Sunday we express our gratitude and practice "pure religion undefiled before God" in a more vital way by considering "the fatherless and widows in their affliction" who, as worthy as we, by the vicissitudes of war, are bereft of everything. They have no lands, no granaries, no bank accounts, no savings, no employment, no homes, no food, except as the Golden Rule proves a vital reality in their lives.

It is proposed that on Golden Rule Sunday, all persons who are disposed to make a practical application of the Golden Rule, provide for their Sunday dinner approximately the same menu that is provided, when funds permit, by Near East Relief for the tens of thousands of orphaned children in its care, most of whom are under twelve years of age.

Having partaken of the orphanage meal and entered into fellowship with the children overseas, we are asked to make such provision for them for the 365 days of the year as we should like to have made for ourselves, or for our children, if conditions were reversed.

Golden Rule Sunday will be observed throughout the United States in December, on behalf of the Near East Relief. This series of articles, by prominent public men who are supporters and spokesmen for this great philanthropy, is designed to call public attention to the background and purpose of the work and its need for general support.

Americans Consume Four Times Their Weight in Dairy Products



BLUE VALLEY CREAMERY INSTITUTE

AMERICANS annually consume 53 gallons of milk, 17 pounds of butter, 13¼ pounds of condensed and evaporated milk, 3.9 pounds of cheese and 2.6 gallons of ice cream, or a total of dairy products equal to four times their body weight. This means that American families eat approximately one ton of dairy products in a year, according to the Blue Valley Creamery Institute.

Dairy products make up a still larger proportion of the diet of people in many other countries. In Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland and Germany whole milk consumption is from 50 to 70 per cent higher than in the United States the Institute survey shows. England's colonies—Canada, Australia and New Zealand—consume 12 to 60 per cent more butter than America. The United States is not nearly as large a consumer of cheese as many of the other nations, but the nutritive value of dairy products is becoming more widely appreciated in the United States, with the result that the per capita consumption is increasing.

Short Courses Open Next Week At M.S.C.

A number of agricultural short courses, planned especially to give practical training for the farmer or the man who intends to take up farming, will open at M. S. C. on Monday, January 4.

The "short courses", which are open to anyone in the state over 16 years of age, prove especially popular with the men who for any reason do not want to take the full four courses in agriculture at the state college, but still want instruction along definite lines of the farming industry. The courses vary in length from two to sixteen weeks.

Among the courses which start on January 5 are General Agriculture, Poultry, Dairy Husbandry (manufactures and production) Horticulture, etc.

Many Snake Myths Baseless

Superstitious fear of snakes has led to persistent belief in various baseless myths about the habits of different species. The hoop snake and "stinging snake" traditions are among these. The hoop snake is credited with the power to form itself into a hoop and roll in pursuit of its victim with race horse speed. If the victim dodges and a tree is struck by the hoop snake, the tree is said to be sure to die. That any snake could place its tail in its mouth and roll along is absurd and anatomically impossible, say biologists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

The stinging snake myth apparently originated more than 200 years ago and was based on the appearance of the horn snake which is harmless. The tail of the snake has the shape of a horn or spike, but it is incapable of piercing or stinging anything. The so-called glass or jointed snake some peoplethink, can break into pieces when struck, and re-assemble itself later if the head has not been captured or destroyed. This animal is in reality a harmless lizard, which like many other lizards, has the power of dropping its tail in escaping a pursuer. Because of its food habits this reptile is of considerable value to agriculture. The myth of snakes sucking cows is entirely untrue. Anyone who has ever milked a cow knows that the pressure required to do this is far greater than any snake could exert.

Striking Painting of "Century" On New York Central Calendar

One of the most striking and impressive train pictures ever painted, is the feature of the 1926 Art Calendar now being distributed nationally by the New York Central Lines, bearing the artist's title "A National Institution."

The painting shows the Twentieth Century Limited, the fastest long distance train in the world, speeding southward along the east bank of the Hudson River, beneath the steel viaduct approach to the "Alfred H. Smith Memorial Bridge across the Hudson River ten miles south of Albany, N. Y., a part of the $25,000,000 "Castleton Cut Off" improvement, which includes also twenty eight miles of connecting double track railroad and large new freight classification yards.

The painting, which is by Walter L. Greene, upon exhibition won high praise for its illusion of thrilling speed and the impressive sense of the power and majesty of locomotive and train conveyed. The reproduction on the calendar is in five colors surrounded by a border semblance of a mahogany and gold frame.

Like the train paintings issued in preceding years, it is adaptable to framing and permanent preservation. The railroads' distribution of the picture includes all newspapers, hotels, banks, large industrial and mercantile establishments commercial and civic organizations public officials and other individuals and agencies having to do directly with transportation.

The Twentieth Century Limited running daily in twenty hours between New York and Chicago in from two to five sections, on June 15th, 1926, will complete its twenty fourth year of continuous service. It transports more passengars each year than all the ocean liners plying between Europe and America carry in their first cabins. Each section of the Century represents an investments in locomotive and car equipment of approximately $575,000

Consumers Power Company

It is rumored that the Consumers Power Co. of Jackson has already sold a large block of stock to parties in and about North Adams which in our opinion indicates two different conditions, viz:

1st—The exceeding prosperity of this particular community has left considerable idle money in the bank which has resulted in a desire to get it out and drawing a little more than 4 per cent interest.

2nd. The bulk of depositors are looking for something which will serve as a safe investment, and is right at home where it can be watched.

We believe this is a right move on the part of our citizens and as far as the stock is concerned, it is a dividend payer and should continue to be as long as it is necessary to build new equipment. When the time arrives that no more extensions are necessary or desired, the dividends will suddenly become obsolete, or irregular. The main guys will then suddenly assume that the line is complete, and the lines of the Consumers company will stretch from Mackinaw to Waldron or some other vanishing point and from Petoskey to Saginaw. We presume that the production of electricity by water power is one of the biggest bonanzas known to man, and it is more than likely somebody is pulling a mighty wad of dough. This is fun for everybody but the faint peeps of the small stockholdors scattered throughout the country will hardly be audible in the blast.

Do you ever stop to think that the price of electricity might fluctuate fiercely. Better far that fifty gigantic combines in the state of Michigan should buck each other than one man control. But someone says "we'll own it ourselves" Ah yes, you'll own the tail of the dog which cannot wag without the head and body. You'll own one 75th of one hundred per cent, the lion's share remaining with the big noises. and by force of necessity you'll be the silent partner, at least your voice will sonnd like a cricket in the caverns of Mammoth Cave. As long as the stock-selling proposition holds good, just so long will new lines be built, and more towns included. The method of selling stock to build more lines is so threadbare it is ragged in spots, yea, it stinketh with old age. By placing the sole electrical production of southern Michigan in the hands of a single combine, we may yet be able to save the goat (for the company) and to pay 15 to 20 cents per kilowatt instead of 10c, as now!

Detroit Automotive Heads Address Transport Meet

With more than a dozen presidents and high executives of American motor car companies appearing as speakers, the second World Motor Transport Congress scheduled in New York, January 11 to 13, presents what is probably the most formidable array of automobile talent ever gathered on a single program. The three general subjects to come before the meetings are "How to Build a Selling Organization," "How to Promote New Business," and "How to Keep Customers Satisfied."

Advice along these lines will be given to 300 foreign delegates by such leaders of the industry as Colonel Charles Clifton, Roy D. Chapin, John H. Willys, Alfred P. Sloan Jr., Walter P. Chrysler, Fred J. Haynes, Alvan Macauley, Charles D. Hastings, H. H. Bassett, George M. Graham, H. M. Jewett, M. L. Pulcher Stewart McDonald, E. V. Rickenbacker and Robert C. Graham

In addition to attending the business sessions, foreign delegates during their stay will visit the New York Show and various banquets held in conjunction with it: will inspect traffic control methods, discuss highway development and automobile financing, and will make a special study of commercial motor transport. Separate business sessions will be devoted to sales organizations, sales promotions, serviceable selling and motor bus operation.

On January 11, after a welcome by President Charles Clifton of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, an address will be made by Charles D. Hastings, president of the Hupp Motor Car Corporation, on "Efficient Sales Administration." H. H. Bassett, president of the Buick Motor Company will speak at the same session on "Developing Capable Salesmanship," following which there will be a discussion of the international aspect of sales organization.

Jerusalem Artichokes-Weeds or Delicacies

In many localities Jerusalem artichokes grow so abundantly that they are regarded as a nuisance, but if the preparation of them for the table were better understood, they might be greatly relished, says the United States Department of Agriculture.

This vegetable does not in the least resemble the French, or globe, artichoke; it is a tuber, dug out of the ground as potatoes are. These tubers are often small and irregular in shape, covered with many knobs, so that they are tedious to pare or scrape. Their flavor, also, is very mild and easily destroyed by overcooking. One good way is to bake the artichokes in their skins, after first scrubbing them well. Another way is to boil them, either peeled or unpeeled. They are served with melted butter with a few drops of onion juice, or in a sauce, in the latter case, after being peeled.

Cold boiled artichokes are delicious in salad, served on lettuce, either alone or in combination with other vegetables. Raw artichokes are also palatable and digestible in salad. In this form they are a valuable addition to the list of vegetables that may be enjoyed raw. They should be pared and sliced very thin or grated if mixed with other grated raw vegetables, such as carrots, turnips or celery.

THE CHANGING NEAR EAST

By JOHN W. MACE

Field Director of the Near East Relief

The observance in December of Golden Rule Sunday on behalf of the overseas work of the Near East Relief, as sponsored by President Coolidge, calls again to public attention the importance and significance of this humanitarian enterprise. In the current number of the Review of Reviews, Mr. Mace reviews what America has done for the people of Bible Lands. This extract is given by special permission of the publishers.

THE Near East is a true topsyturvy land, where things are not what they seem nor as you expect them to be.

Everything that the American thinks he knows about the Near East turns out to be different when he gets there. For example, nothing is more definite to the American mind—before the American leaves home—than the well-established fact that Turkey achieved a tremendous victory over Greece three years ago, crushing the power of the Greek nation utterly and securing to itself an indisputable ascendency in all the Ægean and Anatolian region. But visit the Near East and what is your discovery? There you realize that Greece looks vastly more like a victor, now, than Turkey.

Shabby Constantinople

The Turk holds Constantinople, of course, by virtue of scaring Europe's peace negotiators when he came down to the Bosphorus with the big, insolent army that had driven all Greeks, military and civil, out of Asia Minor. But there is grave question about how much glory there is in holding the Constantinople of today. The city looks meaner and shabbier than it ever did before. Try as one will to wish well to the modernized Turk in his professional reformations, one has to acknowledge that if the appearance of the city of Constantinople is any sign, the Turk is still the sick man of the Orient. And he has lost Syria, Arabia, and Mesopotamia forever.

Prosperous Athens

On the other hand, in startling contrast, Athens is a city on a boom. By the same token the present-day Greek is in lusty health. Greece's comeback since 1922 is amazing. Not only in the capital and in other cities, but in towns and in country districts there abound evidences of a sound and growing prosperity.

All this has happened as the direct result of Greece's great "defeat." The stupidity of the Turks in driving out their Greek-Christian subjects, after their supposed triumph at Smyrna, is proving an incalculable enrichment to Greece. After the fall of Smyrna the Greek nation in Europe, with rare generosity and faith, opened its doors to receive the refugees of Grecian stock who were being expelled from Asia Minor, although it meant the herculean hazard of absorbing a million new inhabitants into a population of five millions on a limited and thin-soiled area.

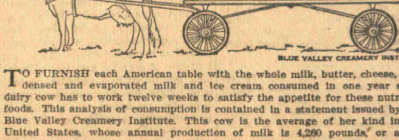
It was a task and risk from which the strongest and richest nation on earth might excusably have shrunk. Huge borrowings and desperate expedients were necessary in order to feed and shelter this horde of fugitives. Inevitably there was great loss of life among the sick, infirm, and aged; only the strongest survived. But today that undesired immigration is fast proving an asset to Greece. It brought into the nation a host of clever, thrifty, enterprising people—the sort especially that had made Smyrna the richest city of its size on earth—a great army of producers and business organizers.

Athens is vibrant with energy, distinctly American in spirit. Its population has doubled since the beginning of the World War.

The pro-American feeling of Athens is not exhausted by its imitative energies; a great spring of gratitude wells out of the national heart. Greece has not forgotten that America, through the medium of the Near East Relief and other benevolent agencies, sent her inestimable assistance in money and in experienced social workers when refugees from across the Ægean three years ago were pouring in on her by hundreds of thousands—sick, hungry and dying.

I took much comfort in thinking of that while I was in Athens, for there is no satifaction deeper than in helping those who help themselves. Watching the crowd, it pleased me to reflect that some, at least, of those happy folk were among the exiles whom America had fed and helped to keep alive until they could stand on their own feet again. And it is pleasant to record that the Greek public authorities never let down any of their own efforts because Americans were there helping. They shouldered the utmost of their own burden, and cooperated besides in everything that the American organizations asked; and it should be remembered that more than half of the wards of the Near East orphanages are Armenian children, with absolutely no claim—except the paramount claim of humanity—for refuge on Greek soil.

Cow Works Twelve Weeks to Deliver Dairy Food to the American Table



Amount of Milk Consumed Per Capita in the U.S.
(12 WEEKS MILK YIELD, AVERAGE COW)
1 BARREL MILK
1 BARREL MILK
1 BARREL MILK
21 GALS MILK

BLUE VALLEY CREAMERY INSTITUTE

TO FURNISH each American table with the whole milk, butter, cheese, condensed and evaporated milk and ice cream consumed in one year some dairy cow has to work twelve weeks to satisfy the appetite for these nutritive foods. This analysis of consumption is contained in a statement issued by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. This cow is the average of her kind in the United States, whose annual production of milk is 4,260 pounds, or about 500 gallons. For the twelve weeks she works for you her production of 998 pounds of milk represents the 53 gallons whole milk, 17 pounds of butter, 3.9 pounds of cheese, 13¼ pounds of condensed and evaporated milk and 2.58 gallons of ice cream you consume each year.

The per capita consumption of milk and dairy products is increasing each year as people become educated to the value of this greatest of all foods.

How Butter Fat in Milk Is Broken Up

Do you know what the word homogenization means?

Fat Globules in Raw Milk.

Ninety-eight out of 100 housewives to whom the question recently was put admitted they couldn't answer. Can you?

But here it is explained by Miss Meta H. Given, food authority doing research work at the University of Chicago.

"Homogenization," says Miss Given, "is the name of the process which breaks up butter fat in evaporated milk into tiny particles so they blend evenly with the solids. Homogenization causes the butter fat globules to adhere to the albumin and the casein of the milk. In the process, milk is forced through countless numbers of openings at a pressure of around 3,500 pounds.

"In addition to preventing a cream and skim milk line, this breaking up of fat contributes to smoothness and perfect blending of foods such as cream sauces, soups, ice cream and in baked products.

"It also has a digestive advantage for those who have difficulty in assimilating milk. Many pediatricians recommend evaporated milk as a baby food, although, like other substitutes for the natural supply, it should not be considered as a food complete in itself. Addition of orange or tomato juice, barley water or lime water are important in providing adequate diet for the infant.

Globules After Homogenization.

"All authorities recognize that normal mother's milk is the best food for infants, but this natural milk is frequently inadequate in quality and quantity. Scientists say cow's milk is the best substitute. But cow's milk must be modified and supplemented with other foods. The fat in mother's milk is in homogeneous suspension and being flocculent forms small curds in the stomach, but the fat in cow's milk is in relatively large globules, forms large tough curds in the stomach and is much harder to digest. In evaporated milk the fat is broken up by homogenization and the curds softened until in size and digestibility they resemble natural infant food."

The GOLDEN RULE in PRACTICE

A series of articles by prominent leaders on the Golden Rule as a guide in International Relations.

FURTHERING WORLD PEACE

By SIR ESME HOWARD

British Ambassador to the United States

PUBLIC opinion in America is rallying to the belief that the nation's own prosperity depends to a great extent on the prosperity of others. By helping the Near East Relief you are laying a great foundation for America's future in foreign lands.

You may think it strange that I, as an Englishman, should rejoice to see American competition growing in these countries of the Near East. I do so not only because as a sincere friend and admirer I am glad to see prosperity in this country, but also because I believe it will bring prosperity to those countries also.

At the time of the Christian exodus from Anatolia, 1,500,000 refugees were received into impoverished Greece. It is estimated that fifty per cent of these people are now able to provide for themselves. The Greek government is spending millions for this purpose, and the refugee commission of the League of Nations is administering a large international loan for the same purpose. I say this to show how impossible it is to expect these overburdened agencies to take over the many thousand children whom the Near East Relief is so generously and magnificently supporting, teaching them to earn their own living and become useful citizens. For the Near East Relief not only gives these children what we generally mean by education, but also teaches them all kinds of trades by which they may become self-supporting as they grow up.

Here is a work in which we all, whatever our faith, can gladly and heartily co-operate. It is a common ground on which we can all join in the service of God and of our fellow men.

Golden Rule Sunday will be observed throughout the United States in December, on behalf of the Near East Relief. This series of articles, by prominent public men who are supporters and spokesmen for this great philanthropy, is designed to call public attention to the background and purpose of the work and its need for general support.

W. C. T. U. Column

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

A Christian's Duty To The Government

I am not here to ask union between the church and the state because I am, as are you, a member of a church that does not believe in the union of the church and the state. I am not here to ask that the members of the church endorse political candidates. But I am here to say to you that there is a vital connection between Christianity and government, and that the Christian has a duty in government as a Christian, not merely as a citizen. I am here to say to you that in my opinion we cannot fulfill our Christian obligations unless we take part actively in government. Because after all the purpose of government is an ethical purpose. Sometimes we forget just what the real purpose of governmsnt is and we look upon it as constituted to build roads and clean the streets and gather up the garbage, but these things are not the real reason for having governments. People do not submit them selves to irksome rules merely to have garbage collected. People come together and unite in a community because they expect to get something worth while, and the thing they have a right to expect is justice and the maintenance of human rights. The purpose of government is to do right and justice. Is there any other adequate test of government than that? We sometimes think that government has carried out this purpose, and yet we find that men who have made great research into government problems question whether govern ment does carry out right and justice.

Chief Justice Taft has said that the seeds of disrespect for law were sown in the country when men and women forgot that they owned the courts, and cared so little about the practice that was developed that they allowed the institutions in this country that were established for the purpose of doing justice, to fall into a sad state of confusion. There is no one who studies our government problems who will not echo these words of Chief Justice Taft.

One thing Christians have to do today is to face facts with regard to government. I shall not soon forget something that I saw in Old England—a murder case tried in Old Bailey and the speed with which a jury was secured. In my court and in Cuyahoga county, some times it takes us a full week to get a jury because under our law a lawyer in the trial court is in such fear of having the decision in his case reversed that he figures it is better to spend time on the trial of the case than to have it sent up to a higher court. And so we have spent a week in court getting a jury in a murder case. In one murder case we spent two weeks. When I went into this English court in Old Bailey I wondered how long it would take to get a jury. I was prepared to see them get a jury in two or three hours. Do you know they got that jury in just four minutes? I asked the prosecutor of the King's counsel how they were able to do it so speedily, and he said: "When we adopted the Practice Act the courts were given the power to prevent a lawyer asking long-winded questions," and then he said: "We do not try out our objections to the jury always before the court. If I have an objection to a prospective juror I do not spend two hours o the court questioning him. I go to the clerk of the court and say, 'I am going to object to John Jones,' and the clerk does not call his name." And I could figure from my own experience as a trial judge that we would save days and weeks of time in our county and that we would be months of time ahead on our court calendar if we had a a practice similar to that in England. Of course delay always makes in favor of the criminal. Delay always helps a crook. If a man wants his trial the next day after he is apprehended it is pretty certain that he is innocent. And just because you and I and the Christian people of this country somehow forgot the supreme institution that was created to do justice in this country, America lags far behind the rest of the civilized world in respect for law. This is a question for you and for me. Disrespect for law grows out of a cause far more ancient than prohibition and you and I have to demonstrate the fallacy of that argument by showing how we can build up respect for all law when we set our courts in working order, when we eliminate delay, and when we make it possible for the courts to do that for which they were created.

In this country weare the state and women now constitute part of the state. Some politicians think they are the state, and some officials regard themselves as the state. But the fact remains that under the Constitution the people are the state.

And so when government fails in this country, when the criminal courts of this country fail, the failure lies at the door of us who are the source of all laws.—The Union Signal.

War Veterans Must Be Taken Care Of

For several thousand orphans of veterans of the World War in the United States, Christmas did not mean much. To them it was just a word and a dream that means joy, happiness, contentment, home an education and a training that will make good citizens for the boys and girls whose fathers did not die from wounds and disease during the World war. Right now in the United States there are 5,000 orphans of World war veterans who need food, clothing, an education and training, and that number is growing every day as 15 World war veterans are dying every 24 hours.

Realizing the destitute condition of many thousand of our own war orphans, and believing it to be its duty to those men who made the Supreme Sacrifice on French battle fields, The American Legion, the great big organization that takes in every World war veteran, be he a private or a major general, decided to take care of these war orphans of the United States.

Past National Commander James A. Drain and his advisors decided a year ago that by raising an endowment fund of $5,000,000 in the United States, and investing it in good securities the income from it would accomplish the purpose of caring for our own war orphans, and give a surplus for the care and assistance of the disabled who do not receive assistance from any other source. Financiers were put to work by Past Commander Drain with a view of determinng just what kind of securities would give the best income from the principal of the endowment fund.

With that end in view campaigns were started in many states and when Mr. Drain relinquished the reins of affairs to Commander John R. McQuigg of Cleveland, at the national convention in Omaha last October, forty states had completed their drives and gone over the top.

Michigan is one of the eight states that has not as yet completed its quota. Detroit and many of the smaller cities in the state have more than raised the quota allotted them, but some of the cities have absolutely failed in raising their quota. Whether it is because of organization or whether it is because the war veterans themselves in these communities have not gone at the job in the proper spirit and with the enthusiasm they went after the soldiers of the Kaiser State Commander J. Joseph Herbert is determined to find out.

"Michigan must raise its quota," said Commander Herbert. "Michigan had more killed and wounded in battle on French battlefields than any other state in the union in proportion to its population, and we have every right to remember our dead heroes and their orphans. Michigan established the first Legion hospital at Battle Creek, Mich. Michigan erected the first Legion Children's Billet at Otter Lake, Mich., which now has more than 60 World war orphans under its care. Michigan has led the country in many things pertaining to its gratitude towards those who fought for the Stars and Stripes so that everyone in this country might enjoy peace and happiness, and it just cannot fail in raising its quota for this endowment fund, that means so much to the orphans of our comrades.

"I appeal to every citizen in Michigan who has not subscribed to this fund to send in his or her contribution to the state headquarters of the Legion, 214 Lincoln Bldg., Detroit, Mich. We have given freely to the orphans of nearly every country under the sun, now let us help our own war orphans to become useful and self supporting men and women of tomorrow. Their fathers, if they had lived, would have given them a home, an education and a chance in life. We owe them at least that much. I hope that Michigan will now come to the front with their contributions, be they large or small, and place this state among the honored states of this nation for the American Legion Endowment Fund."

Granges To Sing At Farm Week Contest

Local Grange singing teams, representing subordinate Granges throughout the state, will compete for honors during Farmers Week at M. S. C., February 1 to 5. It will be the second annual contest held under the community singing fund established at M. S. C. by R. E. Olds, of Lansing, in an effort to stimulate renewed interest in chorus work, particularly in rural sections.

Teams entering the Farmers Week contest must number at least ten, all members of the Grange represented. Each chorus will sing two songs, one of which is prescribed and the other optional. The judges are to be members of music department at the college.

Winning teams will be heard on the general programs of the Farmers Week, and will also probably broadcast over the college radio station, WKAR.

Caloric Requirements of the Child

DIETITIANS declare that the average boy or girl of four years should receive about forty calories a pound of body weight per day. The average weight of a child of four years is forty pounds. Therefore the total caloric requirement would be approximately 1,600 calories. Calory is merely the name for a certain measure of heat derived from the burning of food.

Necessarily, the caloric requirement of the child is dependent on his temperament, since a child who plays hard and long requires more nourishment than one who leads a quieter life. Rate of growth also has a bearing on caloric requirements. The child who is growing rapidly should be given more food to meet his caloric needs than the boy or girl whose growth is normal.

Mothers know the daily diet should consist of the essential foodstuffs, protein, carbohyrates, fats, minerals and water. The important thing for her is to learn the foods that contain these essentials in a balanced diet. Below is a well-balanced menu for any child six years old compiled by an authority on home economics.

ONE DAY'S MENU FOR SIX-YEAR-OLD CHILD.

Breakfast.
6 stewed prunes	120 calories
½ cupful cream of wheat	85 calories
Served with half cream (6 tbsp.) and half evaporated milk	140 calories
1 slice buttered toast	150 calories
1 cup cocoa made with evaporated milk	150 calories
	645 calories
Luncheon at School.
Baked potato and butter	200 calories
⅛ cupful spinach	25 calories
1 baked apple (1 tbsp. sugar, ½ tbsp. butter)	200 calories
1 glass milk	160 calories
1 slice bread buttered with ½ tbsp. butter	100 calories
	685 calories
Afternoon Luncheon at School.
1 orange	100 calories
Dinner.
1 small piece broiled steak (2¼ x 2½ x ½)	75 calories
⅛ cupful mashed potato	100 calories
2-3 cupful lima bean soup made with evaporated milk	75 calories
1 glass milk, orange drink	160 calories
Total	1,840 calories

Children often become wearied of drinking plain milk. Mixing their milk with fruit juices is a welcome change. Following is the recipe for a refreshing milk drink: Mix ⅞ cupful orange juice, ¼ cupful evaporated milk three teaspoonfuls of sugar, ⅛ teaspoonful of lemon juice and a few grains of salt. Shake well in a fruit jar before serving.

TO FIGHT

SYNOPSIS.—With David, half-breed guide, Brent Steele, of the American Museum of Natural History, is traveling in northern Canada. By a stream he hears Denise, daughter of Col. Hilaire St. Onge, factor at Wailing River, play the violin superbly. He introduces himself and accepts an invitation to make the post his home during his stay. He finds the factor worried and mystified. The "log chateau" is a real home. From St. Onge he learns of the mysterious creature of evil, the "Windigo," and the disappearance of a canoe and its crew, with the season's take of furs. Then at night the "Windigo" gives a weird performance. Even Steele is mystified.

Steele strained from the window, waiting for a repetition of the wail. But the voice which had defiled the night was hushed. From the clearing came the whimpering of awed huskies, the wolf challenge smothered in their throats. Among the dim shapes of the Indian shacks beyond the trade-house not a light flickered. They were as the houses of the dead. The post people lay in their blankets, stiff with fear. Like a shroud, panic had fallen on Wailing River.

Throwing on his clothes, the man swung from the window and dropped to the grass below. The house, also, was dark—St. Onge doubtless drugged with cognac, but she? Did she lie numb with fright, or was she gallantly struggling with the mystery?

As he approached Michel's dark shack, Steele was puzzled. Had the Iroquois and David also weakened? But two silent shapes, carrying something in their hands, met him at the door.

"You heard it, Michel?" demanded Steele, searching the swart face of the half-breed, as they left the shack, for traces of excitement.

The features of Michel were set like stone as he said: "De Windigo get de fur cano'; now he get de pos'."

"What d'you mean?" quickly demanded Steele, fearing that the Indian in the head man had at last triumphed over his intelligence—that he, too, had succumbed to the general terror.

"Michel mean," explained David, "that de Indian will leave de pos' after tonight."

The white man was relieved. These two, at least, had not been stampeded by the nameless thing on the ridge. And then, as they reached the shore, it began again.

From the crest of the ridge came an unspeakable mewing, now strangely cat-like, now unearthly; followed by the moaning of a mangled thing in torture.

It ceased. The white man heard the rough breathing of the men beside him. Slowly the click of steel on steel marked the cocking of two rifles. Then upon the heavy silence broke the prolonged wailing of an Ojibway woman for her dead.

Rigid, the three men listened. The wailing climaxed in maniacal shrieks. Again the night was soundless.

Turning to Steele, Michel muttered: "Tete-Boule ees right; dat ees ver' bad t'ing to hear."

"What is it, David?" Steele demanded of his hard-headed friend.

"Eef David was on dat ridge, he tell you," was the dry response.

"There's nothing on four feet in this country that could do that. There may be something in this Windigo story, after all. Is it beast, bird, or devil, Michel?"

"Eet may be crazee wolverine; eet may be devil; eet may be Windigo—but eet feenish dees pos' all de same." As the half-breed sadly shook his head, the caterwauling began anew.

With heads thrust forward the three men on the shore strove to pierce its mystery. But this time, as the voice rose to a climax, flame shot from the muzzles of two rifles and the shrieks were smothered in the report of the guns echoing from the ridge. Again silence blanketed the valley.

Thus did David and Michel fling back their challenge of lead to the powers of darkness which menaced the fur fort.

"The Windigo knows now that there's some fighting blood left in Wailing River," chuckled Steele, when he heard approaching footsteps.

"Who's there?" called the voice of St. Onge. "Who fired those shots?"

"Michel and David, colonel; did you hear it?" asked Steele, curious to know the state of the factor's nerves.

St. Onge approached and gripped Steele's arm. "I've been listening—with my daughter," he said in a strained voice. "I went to rouse you, but you had gone. It's the last straw, monsieur. My Indians will not stay after this."

"What d'you think it is?" asked Steele, closely watching the features of St. Onge in the dim starlight.

"Who can say?" replied the Frenchman, with a shrug. "It may be some crazed beast—wolverine or lynx or bear. And then," he looked hard into Steele's eyes, "it may be—the Windigo."

At the words, David, who had been listening, turned to Michel in surprise. But the face of the head man was wooden. The Ojibway's narrow eyes shifted to those of Steele, and for a space white man and red held each other's gaze.

Was the Frenchman, after all, superstitious? Steele wondered. Had his nerve softened, after what he had now heard with his own ears; or was he playing a game?

"Colonel St. Onge," said the American after a space, "this thing has got to be followed up—run down—scotched! To you, it's vital! To me, as a scientist, it's the opportunity of a lifetime. With your permission, David and I will stay here and lend a hand until the winter threatens to break."

The factor impulsively offered his hand. "Thank you, monsieur! I shall be most grateful for your aid."

"And Mademoiselle St. Onge?" asked Steele, deeply curious. "She heard it all?"

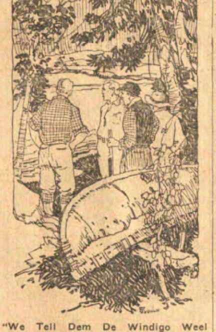
"Yes, she called me when it began. She was very brave, but there have been so many things lately—" St. Onge suddenly checked himself. "Michel," he said, swiftly changing the subject, "we must look after the Indians at once. But what can we tell them now, after this?"

"We tell dem de Windigo weel ketch dem on de riviere eef dey leave now," replied the ready-witted head man.

As Steele again stretched himself on his cot, he wondered if there would be sleep that night for the girl downstairs—what thoughts were hers as she lay facing the problem of her future; a problem of which the sole solution seemed at that moment to rest with Monsieur Lascelles at Fort Albany.

* * * * * * *

There was no one in the living room when Steele entered early the following morning, but from the direction of the kitchen came the sound of women's voices. He was examining the shelves of French and English classics when he heard the light footfall of moccasins behind him. Diffident at meeting Denise St. Onge whose humiliation of the night before must have been deep, but naturally curious as to her mental condition after the night wailing, he turned with:



"We Tell Dem De Windigo Weel Ketch Dem on De Riviere Eef Dey Leave Now," Replied the Ready-Witted Head Man.

"Good-morning, mademoiselle! We are all here, you see, safe and sound, in spite of the serenade of our friend."

The fine eyes of the girl were heavy with shadows, but to his relief, were not unfriendly. She has not slept, thought Steele. The Windigo has got her, too.

"Good morning, mademoiselle! We turned in a voice without spirit, and there was no life in the colorless face as she went on: "Yes, we are still here, as you say; but after last night I trust you realize what my father faces in this terrible valley."

"It is most mysterious," he said, "but you must not allow it to get your nerve. You are an educated woman, mademoiselle; you must hold your mental grip. Nerve-racking? Of course it is, but there is a solution—mad wolf or wolverine probably." As he spoke, he strove to pierce the reserve of her dark eyes to the thoughts they masked.

"But it was horrible—ghastly!" she replied. "Is it to be wondered at that the Indians are in a panic—and these poor women whose husbands were with the fur canoe; they are imbeciles from terror. I found them this morning in a cabin, too frightened to cook the breakfast of the children."

"So you cooked it for them," he hazarded with a smile. Surely, Mademoiselle St. Onge had not lost her nerve, if she could think of the children."

The girl flushed. "One could not have them suffer, monsieur." Then with a flash of white teeth, went on. "But we all feel better, now that the sun is out."

Steele smiled at the human touch.

"Has your father told you that I am staying here, with his permission, to follow up this Windigo?"

She glanced up in surprise. For an instant her eyes fell, the dark brows contracting in thought; then she met his quizzical look.

"You are going—to fight—the Windigo?—You, a stranger—who have—no interest?"

"But I have a very great interest, mademoiselle. I am sent into the field by the museum to study this sort of thing. Michel, David and I are going to fight him—and solve him."

"But you do not know the danger!" Her face was very grave as she faced him, and he now knew that his surmise had been correct. There was much that he had not been told.

"I do not understand what you mean. Not being superstitious, Michel, David and I have nothing to fear," he protested, hoping to draw her out.

"Oh, monsieur, you do not know all! There are so many—" The abrupt entrance of St. Onge cut off what Steele sensed she had intended as a warning.

"Good-morning, Monsieur Steele!" cried the factor, with what was palpably a forced liveliness of manner. "You have not changed your mind since our talk, eh? You will honor us by spending September at Wailing River?"

"Father," Denise protested, "Monsieur Steele does not know—"

St. Onge turned petulantly upon his daughter.

"Monsieur Steele is a brave man and a scientist; he has no fear of your Indian devils and Windigoes."

"But he has a right to know all, if he is—"

"He shall know all, my dear," broke in the factor, evidently desirous of stopping further reference to what was blind mystery to the younger man.

"We shall have a week, mademoiselle, before David and Michel return, to make our plans," added Steele in defense of his host; but throughout the simple breakfast of trout, toast and coffee, his active brain was busy with the strange attitude of St. Onge and its cause.

At the trade-house the factor and his guest learned from the still shaky Tete-Boule that Michel and David had packed a canoe and provisions over the portage at daylight. But before starting down river on his quest with David, Michel had done his work well. Not an Indian dared leave the post because of the demon which the wily head man had assured them was lying in wait for them. So, for a time St. Onge could count on keeping his post servants, and then—

"Well, who can foretell what is on the knees of the gods, monsieur?" he said with a characteristic shrug.

Through the following days while he impatiently waited for the return of David, Steele occupied his time with the study of two interesting subjects—Tete-Boule and Denise St. Onge. And he found in each much to stimulate his curiosity. The Indian, once a twist of nigger-head tobacco and the gift of a skinning knife had established friendly relations, was led to repeat the tales of huge tracks in the muskeg and night wailing which he had brought to the post during the summer. To Steele, familiar with shamanism and the practice of sorcery among the Ojibways and Crees, this squat red man, with his high cheek bones and close-set eyes, was something of a puzzle. Steele soon learned that Tete-Boule—who owed his name to the likeness of his broad face to the Tete-de-Boule Crees—was possessed of more than ordinary intelligence.

"Tete-Boule," demanded Steele in one of their conversations on the river shore, "why should this Windigo wish to harm this post; the people, here, have never done him an injury?"

The mink-like eyes of the Indian widened with fear at the mention of the dread name, which was taboo.

"Dis ees hees countree. Long tam ago, he cum here on dis riviere," the Indian muttered, evidently ill at ease.

"Was it the Windigo who drowned the men with the fur canoe?"

For a space the Ojibway smoked in silence, then spat far into the water before he answered.

"De crew ov de fur-cano' not drown'—eat up!" And he opened his wide mouth and snapped his jaws.

"Will he come again by night to the post here?"

The Indian slowly nodded.

Further than repeating to Steele that in August he had seen huge tracks in the muskeg and heard cries at night similar to those which had wakened the post, Tete-Boule could not be led to talk. But what interested the American especially was to hear, later, from Denise St. Onge, that the squat post hunter was bewailing with the already stampeded Indians the fate which menaced them.

"This Tete-Boule ought to be suppressed," he suggested to St. Onge. "Your daughter tells me that he keeps the Indians in a ferment with his wild tales of demons and Windigoes."

"I've told him to stop it. But he is very superstitious. When he first came here from Albany, he was a most valuable man—very intelligent."

"He's doing a lot of harm, now. I wish Michel were here. You need him."

"Yes, he understands the Indians, and can quiet them," agreed the factor wearily. "And he is wasting his time down river."

"I am not so sure of that. They may find something." And Steele smiled into the Frenchman's eyes quizzically, but met a blank stare.

Well, with Steele on its trail, the "Windigo" is likely to have a lively time. And Steele?

Clock Has Only One Hand

An ingenious clock with but one hand is installed in an office in Portland, Ore. An English naval officer, who was wrecked, is credited with the invention. After being shipwrecked and thrown on a desert island, he found that among the few effects he had saved was a watch with the minute hand gone. Necessity of telling time with only the hour hand inspired the officer to divide the dial into spaces indicating one-minute intervals and from this rough pattern a marine clock was fashioned that serves its purpose as well as the old type with two hands.

POULTRY

IMPROPER FEED IS CAUSE OF BIG LOSS

One of the greatest losses in the poultry business is caused by improper feeding of baby chicks. There are many people who still fail to consider that a chick when hatched does not require food for several days and that it will live more than a week without food. Most poultry raisers who hatch their own chicks have learned this, but many who buy chicks are still inclined to overfeed at first.

Great care should be taken to start feeding the chicks gradually. This applies regardless of the feed that is used. Chicks should be at least 56 hours old when given their first feed. Before this they should be allowed to run on sod or good, clean litter of chaff or finely cut hay.

After the chicks are 56 hours old we give them the first feed. A clean board with strips projecting about one-half inch around the edges, should be provided. This board should be large enough to accommodate all the chicks at one time—several boards being necessary in most cases, as a board 1 by 2½ feet is about the right size for 75 chicks. A little of the feed should be sprinkled over this board, and the chicks allowed to eat for about ten minutes. Then the board should be cleaned off and a little sand sprinkled on it. This in turn should be removed in a few minutes as grit should not be used too freely until the chicks are ten days old. Water should be supplied in small fountains at the same time food is placed before the chicks, but not before.

Sour milk or buttermilk may be used in the place of water for the first feed. Milk is very beneficial when fed properly, but it should be borne in mind that it is necessary to keep up the practice once it is started, and that milk must be fed in galvanized vessels. It is also important that it have the same acid content at each feeding—alternately using sweet clabber and buttermilk or very sour milk is injurious.

Water should be kept before the chicks continuously after the first feed. It is best to supply fresh, clean water at least three times daily and to temper or remove the chill with a little hot water.

Some authorities insist that the baby chicks should be fed five times a day, but we prefer to feed three times a day. In this way we can start by leaving the feed before them only ten minutes and gradually increase the time until we have the mash before them all the time when they are ten to twelve days old.

In mixing one's own feed, we suggest the following mash for the first feed and until the chicks are ten days old: Two-thirds rolled oats rubbed fine and one-third soft wheat bran. This is fed on the boards as mentioned before, and should be increased gradually as described. A little sand and fine charcoal should be added at each feeding or just after. When the chicks are ten days old the sand or fine chick grit can be left before them.

Some form of animal protein should be provided. If sour milk is used this is supplied. Otherwise it is best to use hard-boiled eggs that have been grated fine. About three eggs per day should be used for each 100 chicks.

So far we have considered only the "chick starter" or mash feed. After the chicks are four or five days old we begin to use a little commercial chick grain or finely cracked corn and wheat. This grain should be used to keep the chicks exercising and should be fed with that idea alone in mind. It should be fed in the litter, just enough being used to keep the chicks busy.

After the chicks are ten days old a mash composed of the following should be added gradually, allowing about a week to change feeds: Twelve pounds soft wheat bran, 12 pounds white shorts, 15 pounds corn meal, 5 pounds rolled oats, 5 pounds screened meat scraps, 2½ pounds bone meal, 1 pound fine charcoal and ¼ pound fine salt. This mash should be mixed thoroughly.—Noel Hall, Extension Specialist, Missouri State Poultry Experiment Station, Mountain Grove.

Protect Meritorious Breed

A meritorious old breed should be recognized and protected to the limit; at the same time, a new breed or variety should not be condemned until its status has been established. This is the safe and sound way domesticated races of fowl can be properly classified and established. By commercializing the new at the expense of the old breeds we undermine the foundation of the standard-bred poultry industry, built up by fanciers in this country as well as in all other countries.

Supply Some Mineral

When beef-scrap feeding is discontinued, mineral in some form should be supplied. A very good mineral formula may be made up as follows: Fine salt, 15 pounds; powdered sulphur, 10 pounds; calcium carbonate (or ground limestone), 10 pounds; bone meal, 50 pounds; unleached wood ashes, 5 pounds, and charcoal, 10 pounds. Four or five pounds of this mineral mixture should be used in each 100 pounds of dry mash. The scratch grain should be fed liberally.

Prevention Against Lice

Almost all poultry are lousy, more or less. Good arrangements for dusting will always keep the lice in check. The small hen louse moves along the roosts and sides of the building several feet, sometimes annoys cattle and horses, but the trouble to them is quite temporary. If the fowls are free from them, they will leave other stock at once. Roosts ought always to be removable, so that they can be scraped and washed with kerosene.

Butter and Egg Man's Pet Unused to Sables

Harold Vanderbilt, traveling in his private car with a party of friends to California, said at a luncheon in Del Monte:

"The costliest fur in the world is the silver sable. I heard a good silver sable story the other day.

"A butter and egg man came to New York, fell in love with a chorus girl, and made her a present of a set of silver sables that were priceless. Then he went back home to sell more butter and eggs.

"Well, another chorus girl called at the first one's flat a day or two ago and said:

"'Thais, what have you been doing with yourself lately? I haven't seen you anywhere.'

"'You know them sables my butter and egg man gave me?' said Thais.

"'Yep.'

"'Well, they were full of gray hairs, and I've been spending all my spare time picking them out.'"

Despot's Hairless Decree

Sir Harti Singh Bahadur, new maharajah of Kashmir, began his rule with an order that all his male subjects shave forthwith—beards, mustaches and the hair on their heads. This curious command was made as a mark of honor to his uncle, the late ruler, so that the whole country might assume a sort of hairless mourning in his memory. Dispatches from Kashmir do not tell how well the people obey the edict, but every dispatch points out the well-known fact that the new maharajah is known to the western world by another name, "Mister A."

Look To Your Investments

In these days of fly by night stocks and what-nots it is not out of place to suggest that you should use care in selecting your investments, and while the publishers of this paper do not undertake to inform people as to what are sure winners, we are nevertheless fully aware that literal thousands of people are each calendar day being introduced to hazy propositions and undeveloped mining properties, breeding farms etc., etc.

Over at Detroit there is lying great numbers of vacant areas which five years ago were out in the suburbs, but today are right in, and they are bound to become a part of the city's great business marts erelong. In a casual glance over these properties which are being settled so rapidly that often one year will chahge the geography so thoroughly you could not find the locality, we have noted that every suburb of the city which has been platted has always gone ahead and never back and we ask how could it do otherwise? Thousands of home seekers in every line of the manufacturing trades now flocking to the metropolis, and at the same time investing earnings where they would be earning interest, have bought home sites here and some are erecting residences thereon.

Many of our most reserved financiers claim they always leave their surplus in a safe bank until there is a place to put it, but if it can be placed in a piece of real estate within the limits of some great city where the population doubles itself every ten years as Detroit has done, they are more than assured of a harvest. This is no idle boast and you can prove it by investigating even the poorest of unrestricted sub-divisions on the sterile East Side. How many of our citizens are depending simply on "luck" to furnish resources for old age? Brother, if you belong to the latter class don't do so any more. Remember the alms houses are filled with people who never took a chance. Always if you investigate you will find scores of inmates who have been kicked out by their relatives but do you often hear the story of an inmate who invested wisely in real estate or who took a chance and lost.

Occasionally we hear of men who have gone to Florida as complete strangers and found the fountain of perpetual riches. but by far the the larger number of them have put in their hard-earned dollars and found Alas! when too late the boom was but a bubble. Among the several Detroit properties which show a wonderful degree of success without the objectionable "boom" might be mentioned the west or Grand River Avenue District. Here Knowles Brothers and B. E. Taylor are putting in thousands of dollars for sewers, water mains and walks preparatory to the coming of the thousands already at the gates, You should see the beautiful location of these properties right near Telegraph road in Detroit's outskirts which is destined to be a beautiful part of the city. Mr. Bert Knowles will be more than glad to motor you to this property at any time and explain its merits.—Advertisement.

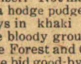
EDITORIAL COMMENT



AS THE OLD WORLD wags on the personnel gets weaker but wiser. Not many moons ago we saw in our midst a hodge podge of curious antiques which the boys in khaki were bringing home from the once bloody ground of Flanders Fields, from Argonne Forest and Chateau Thierry; these boys of our's whom we bid good-bye at Camp Custer, and laid so freely upon the country's altar. Some of these failed to return alive; the sizzling machine gun bullet or the deadly grenade or the poison gas laid them low, and we are not so sure that the glory of war is carrying its weight with their bereft relatives, There was a time to fight and there is a time to deplore the ravages of war. and there is a lurking suspicion that some of the families of these dead heroes have long since ceased to bask in the sunshine of pomp and military splendor that follows the wake of a World War. Could they be given the loved ones again and circumstances turned backward, we believe the great majority will concede that "war is hell" This government's entry into the League of Nations need awaken no alarm in the breast of the God of war. Just so long as we train our citizen soldiers at Camp Custer and build giant bombing planes you can gamble the cruel mandates of war will be exercised. The disarmament joke is about to its maturity. The World wags on but it wags wiser, and when we become disallusioned as to the League of Nations, the call to arms will meet a vastly different reception, than it did in 1917.

Perry Cope who was arrested for illicit distilling in Moscow township "got his" last week when the Judge sentenced him to Ionia for a term. His wife is liberated upon probation and the demands of justice are thus satisfied. For every bootlegger and illicit distiller who is caught with the goods there are probably twenty-five who are never apprehended. This is rather one sided to say the least, but there is no remedy that we know of. Cranks and yellow journalists are all the time harping and trying to scare us into the belief the local option cause is no good but if the prudent reader will look a little ways behind the scenes he will at once discover why these yap mouths are so blatent. It is their way of fighting a worthy cause Most of the objective points which the wets have gained in the past ten years, have been put over by camouflaging the drys, that is—bulldozing the church workers and others by false propaganda.

Death of Lynn Stevens

Lynn Stevens son of Mr. and Mrs Giles Stevens of this village passed away at the Hillsdale Hospital on Monday January 4th following an operation for appendicitis. Mr. Stevens was slightly more than 41 years of age and a highly respected young man who has spent practically all of his life in this community. He is survived by his wife, three children, his parents and a large number of more distant relatives and friends. Mr. Stevens was Past Master of Adams Lodge F. & A. M. and a member of the Congregational church of this place.

Funeral services were conducted yesterday January 7th at 1:00 p. m. from the Congregational church, Rev. Virgil Hunt officiating, and interment was in the local cemetery.

Golden Wedding Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. George Denning of Moscow township celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary at their home on Tuesday January 5th. A. large number of guests were present consisting of relatives from Ohio, Litchfield, Jerome, Moscow, Hillsdale. A large number of beautiful presents were received by Mr. and Mrs. Denning who have resided fifty years years upon the present farm. He is 78 years of age and Mrs. Denning is 70. They have reared a family of nine children on this farm, one of whom has passed to the beyond. The others, seven boys and one daughter remain to cheer Father and Mother on the journey of life. Most of the children reside in this vicinity, while the daughter Mable passed away 28 years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Denning are enjoying very good health and bid fair to see many more happy anniversaries.

A grand-daughter of Lansing sent a beautiful bouquet of yellow roses and the Moscow Plains church Ladies Aid of which Mrs. Denning is a member, presented them with a bouquet of mixed flowers. Mr. Denning wore his original wedding suit and with their seven sons and one daughter and families they sat down to a bountiful dinner. Four of the original wedding guests were present on this occasion, Will French, Mrs. Chester Carr and Willis Smith all of Jonesville and Mrs. Celia Stoddard of Allen.

Would Seem There Is Honor Among Thieves

Some time ago a small town school teacher in Illinois woke early one morning to find a young man going over the contents of her bureau. "What are you doing here?" she managed to gasp. "I'm looking for $5 to pay my fare to a town where I can get a job." "Here's my purse," said the teacher, faintly, drawing it from under the pillow. "There's about $10 in it. You may have it all, if you will only go." The burglar took half the money, saying he would return it when he got work, explaining he was not a professional burglar, only an emergency one, and left. The other day the teacher received a letter addressed to "The Young Lady in the Southwest Room" at such and such a street and number. In it she found two $5 bills and a sheet of paper on which was written, "Loan and interest from the burglar."—Capper's Weekly.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Corn Belt Farmers Demand Export Corporation to Handle Their Surplus.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

JUST now the problem of relief for the farmer looms as the most serious that confronts the administration and congress. The President still believes the policies he set forth in his message and in his speech in Chicago are correct and that any form of government control of prices would be dangerous, but he and Secretary of Agriculture Jardine recognize that the farmers of the Middle West are dissatisfied with the Coolidge program and seem willing to try Frank O. Lowden's plan of a commission that would help existing co-operatives in handling surplus farm products, either through storage or for export. Mr. Jardine told Representative Dickinson of Iowa, leader of the farm bloc, that the administration would join in support of a program for dealing with the farm surplus problem providing the plan does not contemplate anything in the nature of price fixing. The McNary-Haugen bill, in modified form, has been reintroduced in the house and is backed by the American Farm Bureau federation, but the administration continues to oppose it.

Out in Des Moines about a thousand farmers, bankers, business men and political leaders met last week at the invitation of the Iowa Bankers' association to discuss the problem and offer congress a solution. After listening to a score of speakers, they adopted resolutions asking: A farm products export corporation; legislation to enable the farmer to obtain prices for his products comparable with the prices he pays for the things he buys which are tariff protected; the removal of legislation against the use of corn sugar in preserving; organization of a federal board to assist agricultural areas in co-operative marketing of their products. It was determined also that Governor Hammill should call within a few days a corn belt conference of representatives of eleven Middle Western states in which the tariff matter will be considered.

From Illinois, also, came a demand for export corporation legislation. Fifteen hundred farmers, gathered in Bloomington for the annual banquet of the McLean County Farm bureau, passed resolutions urging congress to pass this relief legislation.

Meanwhile the Farmers' union, claiming to represent a million corn belt farmers, sent to President Coolidge a telegram asserting that the Des Moines conference was not representative of the agricultural interests of Iowa and that the real issue is the cost of production of agricultural products. The effort of the Iowa bankers was termed "presumptuous interference on the part of nonagricultural groups."

Addressing the Boston chamber of commerce, Senator Capper of Kansas gave warning that unless the tariff was made to apply to agricultural crops, its protection probably would be removed from manufactured products.

SENATOR BORAH of Idaho was a dinner guest at the White House Tuesday, and he assured the President there was no opposition in congress to the plan to send American representatives to the preliminary conference on disarmament. It will be easy to pass a bill appropriating the money necessary for the delegation's expenses. Who shall represent America has not yet been determined. It may be that Ambassador Houghton will head the delegation, and it is almost certain that Minister Hugh Gibson will be a member. Others may be sent from this country.

Dispatches from Geneva indicate that some members of the League of Nations are worried by the prospect that the United States, Italy and Germany may be able to dominate the disarmament movement and force all the European nations to an equality in the matter of armament. It is believed Russia will participate in the conference if the Swiss federal government re-establishes friendly relations with the soviets, as it is being urged to do.

ADVOCATES of American adherence to the world court are confident that the resolution providing for that will be adopted by the senate with several votes to spare. Leaders of the opposition, however, think otherwise and declare that the people of the country are little interested in the question despite the wide propaganda conducted in favor of the court. Senator Norris was reported to have switched and to be ready to vote for the resolution, but he said this was an exaggeration and that he would support the measure only if "proper reservations" were included. Senators McMaster and Norbeck of South Dakota take the same position. Opponents of the resolution believe the debate will be so protracted that it will not come to a vote until late in the winter, although the administration hopes to have the question settled by the end of January, before the senate takes up consideration of the revenue bill.

GENERAL PERSHING is soon to return to the United States for a time, and the trouble hunters have started rumors, denied in the State department, that the President and the general have disagreed over the arrangements for the Tacna-Arica plebiscite. According to official statements and to the word of General Pershing himself, he is returning on the advice of his physician for the purpose of receiving dental treatment necessary to his health. It was emphasized at the State department that his return had no diplomatic or political significance and that there was every indication that he would go back to complete his work at Arica. In Peru it was feared that his departure would be followed by a "reign of terror" in Tacna and Arica and that the Peruvian residents there would be further subjugated by the Chileans. The latter already find it difficult to obtain food or employment because of a Chilean boycott.

PROSECUTION of Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana for alleged conspiracy in a matter of oil land permits was halted in the District of Columbia Supreme court when the indictment against him was dismissed on the ground that it was faulty, failing to charge a violation of federal statutes. The cases against his fellow defendants, Edwin S. Booth and Gordon S. Campbell, also were wiped off the books. "I hope this will end these persecutions," was Mr. Wheeler's only comment.

ANTHRACITE operators and miners began a joint conference last week in the hope of settling the strike. The first plan suggested, by Alvan Markle, was rejected by the miners because it contained an arbitration feature and they are as firmly opposed to arbitration as ever. The proposal made by Governor Pinchot at Harrisburg a month ago and rejected by the operators was urged by the miners as "a constructive plan for settlement." The operators, however, would not listen to its adoption, arguing that it was "destructive and unworkable." At this writing the conference is still examining plans.

DISSATISFACTION with the settlement of the Italian war debt to America seems to be increasing, and some observers in Washington predicted last week that a majority of the senate would be against the proposition when it came to a vote. The opposition holds that the 75 per cent cancellation of the debt is too generous to Italy and too burdensome to American taxpayers. Another objection is that the settlement does not accurately represent the capacity of Italy to pay. This is shown, it is contended, by the fact that as soon as Italy effected the settlement she borrowed $100,000,000 of J. P. Morgan at 7 per cent. If Italy can pay Morgan 7 per cent, why, it is asked, can she not pay the United States 3 and 3½ per cent, as Great Britain is doing and as all the other war debtors, except France, are undertaking.

One of the leaders of the opposition to the settlement in the house is Representative Rainey of Illinois. "We are settling the debts contracted by foreign nations with this government during the war period, at a mere fraction of the amounts they owe us," Mr. Rainey said. "The Italian settlement means this: We propose now to collect from them in a period of 62 years an aggregate sum of money equal to only one-third of the interest we will pay our nationals on the amount of money we borrowed from them to lend to Italy. The settlement with Great Britain has cost Great Britain nothing at all. She has agreed to pay us $150,000,000 a year for a period of years and she has immediately adopted an export policy with reference to rubber coming to the United States from her colonies by which she collects back from us every year twice as much money as she pays us."

BRIG. GEN. SMEDLEY D. BUTLER is once more in the Marine corps, having withdrawn his resignation after being fired from his job as director of public safety in Philadelphia. He was welcomed back by Major General Lejune and resumed active duty at once, being assigned to command the base at San Diego, Cal.

MARSHAL CHANG TSO-LIN won a great victory over Gen. Kuo Sung-lin, leader of the revolt against Chang, in the vicinity of Mukden. Kuo and his wife were captured and their heads and legs were cut off, carried through the streets of Mukden and nailed to a gate of the city. Chang's entry into Mukden was not opposed by the Japanese who have been protecting the place, but they refused to surrender to him eight civil officers of Kuo's army who had taken refuge in the Japanese consulate.

General Feng, leader of the national people's army, captured Tientsin after two weeks of heavy fighting, and then sent most of his troops southward in pursuit of the defeated army of Li Ching-ling.

WHILE a large part of the United States has been shivering in subzero weather, Europe has been swept by terrific gales and afflicted with disastrous floods. In Transylvania scores of peasants and thousands of cattle were drowned, and in France the losses were severe. The valleys of the Rhine and its tributaries are flooded.

The state of Vera Cruz, Mexico, was shaken by five earthquake shocks and the people abandoned their homes in terror. Mount Popocatepetl, the great volcano near Mexico City, was aroused to activity. From Anchorage, Alaska, came word that Mt. McKinley, the loftiest peak in North America, was sending up great volumes of smoke and steam.

TURKEY is not going to fight England for possession of Mosul, backing out as gracefully as possible by putting forward the statement that the cost of war would be prohibitive for her, but she means to keep the issue alive in memory pending a time when the wrong done Turkey can be righted. That is the substance of speeches made by President Kemal and other officials at the opening of the new Military club in Angora. They asserted the Ottoman army was eager for vengeance.

FRENCH FINANCE MINISTER DOUMER'S fiscal project was unanimously approved by the cabinet and submitted to the chamber of deputies, which body sent it to the finance committee. It was predicted the committee would pass the plan, leaving the fight for adoption open to the chamber. This fight, it was certain, would be bitter.

The Doumer plan provides an additional 3,000,000,000 francs in receipts through increasing the income tax and 3,800,000,000 francs through the imposition of an extraordinary and temporary tax of 1 1-5 per cent on all business transactions. The plan provides that this super business tax may be applied by government decree before parliament ratifies it. Another 1,000,000,000 francs will be raised through augmenting the price of tobacco, cigars, and cagarettes, and 600,000,000 francs more will come from increased export duties. Stricter enforcement of the fiscal administration and control is expected to yield an additional 300,000,000 francs and a tax of one-tenth of one per cent on bourse transactions another 100,000,000 francs.

FRANK A. MUNSEY, the New York publisher, left almost his entire fortune of about $40,000,000 to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He had intended to make a new will mutualizing his properties and taking care of old associates, but delayed it too long.

Old Army Blue Likely to Supersede Khaki

Washington.—A careful survey of American resources for the manufacture of khaki breeches has convinced army officials that if it became necessary to put a force of two million men into the field in less than eight months, most of them would have to fight in their shirt tails.

Faced by this appalling possibility, the industrial mobilization wing of the national defense planning machinery started a study of its own. It found that it would be entirely possible completely to uniform two million men from head to foot in 15 days provided blue cloth instead of khaki was used.

The trouble with the khaki outfit is that not enough cloth of that color is in ordinary civilian use. There are ample stocks of blue and gray, both wool and cotton fabric. The result has been the working out of a tentative blue training uniform which could be supplied in ample volume for a mobilization, to be discarded as units completed their preliminary preparation and moved out for final training near the zone of operations. By that time complete khaki outfits with tan leather trappings would be ready for them, giving them the necessary degree of low visibility in the field.

The blue training uniforms would consist of a four button blouse with red shoulder knots to give a military touch; blue cloth overseas caps; blue breeches, tan canvas leggings of the lacing variety and black shoes.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Albion—Professor A. M. Chickering, head of the department of biology of Albion college, has gone to Kansas City, Mo., where he will read a paper on his own research work before the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Augusta—The poultry packing and shipping plant of Harold Newkirk was destroyed by fire of undetermined origin early Tuesday. The loss is estimated at $5,000, partly covered by insurance. Besides the building, considerable equipment and poultry were burned.

Port Huron—Simone Smith, 19-year-old girl burglar has been sent back to Marysville, Ohio, to re-enter the Ohio Reformatory for Girls, from which she escaped a week ago. She was arrested here recently, clad in boy's clothing, after being connected with two burglaries here.

Pontiac—Rochester hunters are trying to round up the second of a pair of coyotes believed to have been responsible for much sheep killing in that vicinity recently. A 65-pound coyote was killed northwest of Rochester by William Jersey and William Nettney and its mate is believed to be in the vicinity.

Charlevoix—The maximum widow's pension was granted, retroactive to June 9, 1925, to Mrs. Hannah M. Collins, widow of the late William H. Collins, United States navy, according to news received from the bureau of pensions by Representative Frank D. Scott. Representative Scott has forwarded notice of her award to Mrs. Collins.

Plainwell—Mildred Doster, 17-years old, a senior in the high school, was recently awarded a Girl Scout "golden eaglet" badge, the presentation being made by Dr. Allan Hoben, president of Kalamazoo college. Miss Doster is the fourth Michigan Girl Scout to receive the "eaglet" honor. She has in the last three years won 33 other badges.

Port Huron—The St. Clair river, south of St. Clair, is blocked with ice and pedestrians and auto drivers are crossing from shore to shore. So far no accidents have been reported, but residents along the river bank in the vicinity of Roberts Landing and Marine City say that auto drivers who attempt to cross with heavy cars are gambling with death.

Flint—"I'll be back tomorrow," was the farewell message Arzy Johnson, of Atlas, Mich., called out to Alex. D. Gundry, Flint undertaker, as he left him after borrowing $20. Johnson kept his word. His body was carried into Gundry's establishment the next day, after Johnson shot and killed himself. Worry over financial and domestic troubles is given as the reason for his act.

Wyandotte — Representatives of down river towns are to be invited by the Wyandotte city commission to attend a social and get-together meeting in Ebert's boathouse, Wyandotte, Thursday, February 4. This decision was reached by the commission at the request of E. C. Bryan, city clerk. Invitations will be extended to officers of Lincoln Park, Springwells, Rockwood, Flat Rock, Trenton, Riverview, Sibley, Ecorse and River Rouge.

Mt. Clemens—Mae Brown, resort owner in this city and county for a number of years, who was convicted of prohibition law violation last summer and sentenced to serve six months in the Detroit house of correction, received a Christmas parole from Governor Groesbeck on the recommendation from Judge Reid. On a similar charge pending against the woman, she entered a plea of guilty and was placed on a five-year parole by Judge Reid.

Lansing—Fred W. Weissinger, has been elected president of the Lansing Exchange club for the first half of the year, 1926. Ralph Wilson was elected first vice-president, Samuel Johnson, second vice-president; Fred B. Perry, third vice-president; John Roost, secretary; William Roost, treasurer; Terry Corliss, Samuel Beck, Corwin Schneider, L. W. Mills, James Van Nordstrand, Albert E. Potts and Wesley E. Ceeley, members of board of control.

Pontiac—Possession of a valuable 90-acre farm in West Bloomfield township is the stake over which litigation was begun in circuit court here recently. Henry C. Beardsley, farmer, is seeking to obtain the property he sold to R. M. Grindley, Detroit realtor, in 1923 for $63,000 and later took back on a foreclosure only to enter into a new agreement, he claims, by which he was to be permitted to buy it back at the original figure. Grindley contests the action on the ground he was not notified in due time of Beardsley's intention to re-purchase.

Ann Arbor—The original manuscripts of correspondence between General George Washington and General Nathaniel Greene, during the Revolutionary war, have come into the possession of the University of Michigan. The announcement was made by Regent William L. Clements, of Bay City, in an address of welcome to the American Historical association, in session here. The collection includes all the Revolutionary war correspondence of General Greene, as well as about 50 of Washington's letters to Greene.

Flint—Mrs. Lincoln Ostrander, wife of the pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church at Davison, will be crippled for life as a result of her successful attempt to save her young granddaughter from death under the wheels of an interurban car. Mrs. Ostrander was about to board the car when she saw that the child, who had been brought to the station to see her grandmother leave, was in danger. Mrs. Ostrander dragged the child to safety, but in doing so she slipped and fell in front of the car. Her left foot was badly crushed.

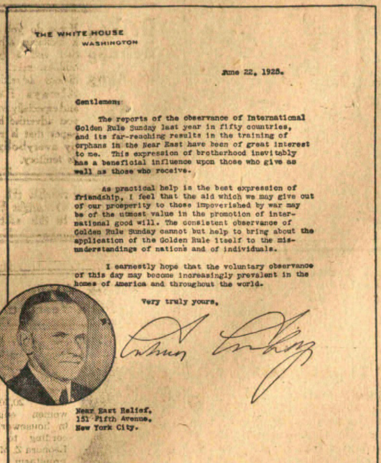
Golden Rule Sunday Plans Win Approval of President Coolidge



THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

June 22, 1925.

Gentlemen:

The reports of the observance of International Golden Rule Sunday last year in fifty countries, and its far-reaching results in the training of orphans in the Near East have been of great interest to me. This expression of brotherhood inevitably has a beneficial influence upon those who give as well as those who receive.

As practical help is the best expression of friendship, I feel that the aid which we may give out of our prosperity to those impoverished by war may be of the utmost value in the promotion of international good will. The consistent observance of Golden Rule Sunday cannot but help to bring about the application of the Golden Rule itself to the misunderstandings of nations and of individuals.

I earnestly hope that the voluntary observance of this day may become increasingly prevalent in the homes of America and throughout the world.

Very truly yours,

Calvin Coolidge

Near East Relief,
151 Fifth Avenue,
New York City.

President Coolidge, in a letter just given out by the Near East Relief, endorses plans for the third observance of Golden Rule Sunday.

"John Turnipseed," Radio's Famous Farm Philosopher

"JOHN TURNIPSEED," farmer philosopher, who speaks plain, barnyard language, has become as popular among radio fans as he has been for years with the farmers of the country through his writings. He is a regular feature on the R. F. D. programs of WLS, the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation station, Chicago. His radio talks contain the same humor and homely philosophy which appeal to the man in the city, as well as the tiller of the soil. He is Prairie Farmer's dirt farmer correspondent and Clifford V. Gregory, editor of Prairie Farmer, sums up his characteristics in these words:

"What 'John Turnipseed' lacks in education he makes up in common sense. His philosophy is refreshing because he strips the subject of bunk and tradition and gets down to the plain horse sense of the question." His real name is F. G. Thiem.

He Wants to Cut Down Expense

Hon. Martin L. Davey representative from Ohio in the House at Washington has introduced a wonderful bill into the House. This bill deals with the ptoblem of public employees and is aimed at reducing the number, thus making less expenditure to the tax-payers. It is claimed that at the present time there are 20,000 more employees in the service at Washington than when Coolidge took office. and without doubt 100,000 unnecessary workers are employed and paid regularly out of the budget. Mr. Davey's bill would place the power of appointment with the President, and allow him to exercise his option as to who is really not needed. We do not know why this government should tolerate so maay unnecessary employees and if it does, ought to be severely condemned. Doubtless this bill meets with considerable opposition among the grafters at Washington but Mr. Davey impresses us as being a man of sterling honesty, and we note that his former compaigns to save the forests of this country have been waged purely in the interest of the public. There is reason to believe this bill ought to receive consideration but whether it will is doubtful. Following is the bill in full:

69th Congress H. R. 4798

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the President be, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to remove any or all oppointive officials of the United States Government deemed by him unnecessary or useless in the conduct of the Government's business, except members of the Cabinet, judicial officers and those regularly elected, whether or not such employees and officfals have been selected and appointed by the Civil Service Commission and regardless of any classification heretofore awarded by such commission and the President is hereby fully authorized and empowered to abolish any or all such offices thereby made vacant and to abolish any or all divisions, bureaus and commissions by him found to be unnecessery for the proper conduct of the Government's business.

SEC. 2. That the President be authorized to appoint, prescribe the duties of and fix the salaries (not to exceed $10,000 to each member per annum) a board of not to exceed ten members, to be known as the Advisory Re-organization board which board shall be empowered to advise the President as to the unnecessary and useless employees, officials, divisions, bureaus and commissions of the United States Government, and a majority of such board shall unite in advising the President as to the abolition or removal of unnecessary positions, employees, officials, divisions bureaus and commissions of the United States Government, except those exempted in section 1. hereof: Provided, that such board is to act in an advisory capacity only, as may be directed by the President of the United States and the President is not bound by the recommendations of such Advisory Re-organization Board.

SEC. 3. That the President may after the completion of the reorganization of any department, or any division or bureau thereof, restore by proclamation to the Civil Service status any such department, division or bureau.

SEC. 4. That the President is hereby authorized and empowered during or after the reorganizatton of any department, bureau, division or commission, to appoint such employees and officials as he deems best for the public service, and to establish by proclamation any division, bureau or commission that he deems necessary to the conduct of the public business; and the President is further authorized and empowered to transfer divisions and bureaus from one department to another, and to consolidate or combine divisions, bureaus, and commissions, one with the other as he deems best for public service., and the Presideet is hereby authorized and empowered to create a Central Purchasing Bureau that shall have exclusive power to make purchases for all Government departments, bureaus, divisions and commissions.

SEC. 5. That the President is hereby authorized and empowered to increase the annual salaries of underpaid and meritorious employees and officials; Provided, That the aggregate amount of such annual salary increases so made shall not exceed 10 per centum of the total amount saved to the Government annually in the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 6. That the President shall exercise the power and authority hereby vested in him, without regard to or recommendation of, or restriction of any existing law, regulation or classification; Provided, That all authority granted to the President herein or by him delegated, including the term of office of the Advisory Re-organization Board, shall cease two years from the date of the passage of this Act

Report of Michigan Prison

To Governor Alex J. Groesbeck:

On December 15th last, there were in the State prisons at Jackson, Iouia and Marquette, together with State prisoners in the Detroit House of Correction, a total of four thousand five hundred and fifty, (4,550), inmates. This is the largest number of offenders within Michigan prisons in the history of the state. Of the four thousand five hundred and fifty, (4,550), there are two thousand two hundred and twenty-six, (2,226), in Jackson, one thousand six hundred and sixty seven, (1,667), in Ionia, seven hundred forty five, (745), in Marquette and one hundred and thirty six, (136), in the House of Correction. Among the House of Correction prisoners are one hundred and twelve, (112), women.

Prisons population in this State has been growing rapidly since 1921 because prisoners are not being released as rapidly as in the years preceding, Between 1915 and 1921 the prison population only increased from one thousand nine hundred and eighty two, (1982) to two thousand one hundred and fifty seven, (2157). The reason for this small increase was that prisoners at that time were being released on parole or being discharged at about the same rate as new prisoners were being received. For the five years since 1920 the prison population has jumped from two thousand one hundred and fifty seven, (2,157), to four thousand five hundred and fifty, (4,550). Out of a prison population of two thousand one hundred and sixty five, (2165) in 1918, there were paroled in that year one thousand one hundred and eight, (1,108). The total number of paroles in 1925 was seventeen hundred and six, (1,706).

As a rule, men convicted of the more serious offenses are sent to Marquette prison; however there is a considerable number of minor offenders sent there from the upper peninsula because of the prison's location and to save unnecessary expense.

At Marquette there were received during the past year one hundred and ninety nine, (199), prisoners. There were paroled from that institution during the same period but seven seven, (77), practically all of whom served the sentence recommended by the trial court.

At the Michigan Reformatory, Ionia, which harbors the younger offenders and first term men, there were one thousand three hundred and four, (1,304), prisoners received during the year, and there were released on parole seven hundred and seventy, (770).

The policy of the Department has been, in the case of younger men, to recommended their release when and after they have served their minimum or recommended sentences, or when special circumstances are bought to the attention of the Parole Commissioner by the trial court, the prosecuting attorney or others interested in or having knowledge of facts pertaining to the particular offense committed by the prisoner justifying clemency

It is interesting to note that of the seven hundred and seventy, men released from Ionia during the year there have been only eighty-three, violations of parole conditions. Of these eighty three, there were only sixteen, who were recommitted to prison for the commission of a new offense. The others were returned because of their failure to report or remain at work.

The total violations of paroles from Marquette prison, out of the seventy seven, men released four, and in only two of these cases were new offenses committed.

Of the seven hundred and sixty three, men paroled from Jackson Prison during the year, there were one hundred and eight violations and in only fifteen cases were new offenses committed, the remainder being returned to the prison for failure to make their reports, or for not working or for some similar infraction of state requirements.

Of the one thousand seven hundred and six, inmates released on parole from all prisons, at the expiration of their minimum or recommended sentences, prescribed by the court, there were only one hundred ninety seven, violations of the parole conditions, for all causes, and only thirty six, recommitted to prison for the commission of new offenses between two and three percent.

These facts establish without the slightest question the wisdom of the Legislature in adopting in 1905 the indeterminate sentence law, which gives courts and other public officials the power to impose adequate sentences for particular crimes, to insure proper discipline within the prisons and to provide opportunity for education and reformation during prison terms.

Men released from prison on parole are now placed in charge of police officers, who obtain from them at least monthly reports covering details of their daily lives. It is the duty of these parole officers to help men thus released to obtain employment and to supervise, in a general way, their conduct while on parole; and in my judgment a great deal of credit is due the men who have this work in charge for the very good results that have been accomplished and to which I have referred.

There are three hundred and forty nine men in our prisons today who have either served their minimum or recommended sentences and who have thus far been refused paroles.

Of the one thousand seven hundred and six prisoners paroled during 1925, there were only twenty six prisoners who have been convicted of robbery armed. Not one of these twenty six has thus far violated his parole.

In applying the provisions of the indeterminate sentence law, it is found in hundreds of cases necessary to withhold recommendation and parole until the prisoner has served beyond the maximum time recommended for him by the court at time of sentence. Specifically, among the one thousand seven hundred and six paroled during the past year there were eight hundred and seventy who served beyond the maximum recommended by the court. Of these, four hundred and sixteen were serving in Ionia, three hundred and sixty two in Jackson fifty eight in the House of Correction, and thirty four in Marquette. A total of eighty three among the one thousand seven hundred and six paroled, were paroled before the sentence originally recommended had expired, the courts of sentence having, after the prisoner's commitment, in writing asked the Governor to commute the sentence. There were two hundred and seventy six, paroled on date of expiration of the recommended maximum. In the list of one thousand seven hundred and six are also two hundred and thirty four prisoners who served their minimum sentences, but did not reach the recommended maximum, having qualified for parole before that maximum was reached. The recommended maximum sentence is the court's expression of opinion as to the uttermost time the prisoner in hand should serve for the specific offense committed.

Prisoners who violate their paroles by committing new infractions of law are almost invariably required to serve their maximum sentences. Violators of the parole regulations sometimes are re paroled after they have paid their penalty for such violation and show sufficient promise of good conduct in the future. Among the one thousand seven hundred and six, paroled in 1925, there were one hundred and forty three who were reparoled, seventy one from Ionia, 63 from Jackson: 6 from the House of Correction; 3 from Marquette; an even one hundred sentences were commuted by the Governor after personal investigation of cases, and the prisoners paroled because of satisfactory evidence of reformation. In relatively few cases prisoners are discharged outright for deportation or because of imminence of death. Bootleggers serve the sentences recommended by the courts for them as maximums and are discharged. The total number of bootleggers discharged in 1925 were 824.

Prison conditions, the housing and working of inmates, discipline and the general health of prisoners in the state's prisons have been greatly improved in the past five years. In 1921 all the prisons were in bad physical condition, buildings old and unsanitary—in all ways inadequate. There is now a new prison at Ionia, practically a new prison at Marquette, and a new prison being built at Jackson. With all these improvements, the serious evil of over-crowding continues and will continue until the new prison at Jackson is completed. There are to-day over one thousand one hundred prisoners living outside the walls of Jackson prison. There are only 900 cells in the place. Marquette's new cell blocks are filled and inmates are sleeping on cots in corridors. Ionia has four hundred more than it was built for. The wardens all have a big job on their hands under these circumstances. Discipline in Midhigan's prisons is at this time more rigorous and the general conduct of the prison tnmates better than ever before.

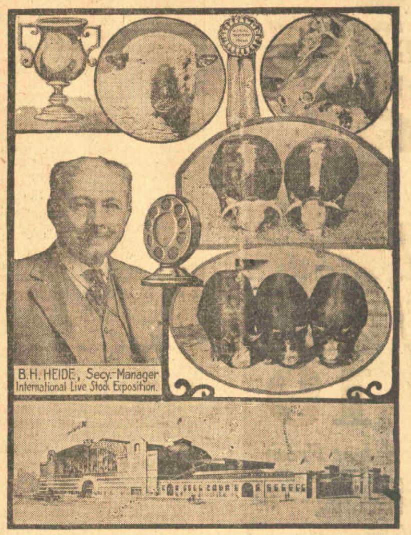
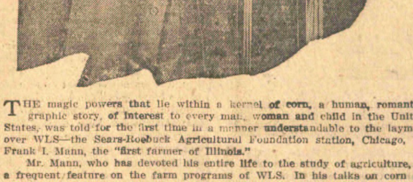
Livestock Show by Radio Tells Story of Baby Beef



B.H. HEIDE, Secy.-Manager
International Live Stock Exposition.

RADIO listeners of city and country will have an opportunity November 28 to December 5 to hear the broadcasting of the International Livestock exposition, Chicago, where more than 10,000 of the finest cattle, sheep, swine and horses will be exhibited, according to B. H. Heide, manager of the exposition. These entries will strive for the highest honors and will include the champions of state and sectional fairs of the nation. The broadcasting of every phase of this great livestock show will be done by WLS, the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation station, Chicago. Reports of the winners, daily news of the exposition and the talks of noted agricultural leaders will be sent over the air as rapidly as they take place in the arena and auditorium. One of the outstanding features of the show will be the exhibition of the Demonstration Herd assembled by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation to show that 1,000 pounds of baby beef can be grown in one year. Baby beeves of every breed have been collected to demonstrate that this achievement is possible. Calves like those in the herd can be produced on the average farm at a dime a pound. Another striking feature will be the exhibition of a more than two-ton litter of sixteen pigs, rescued from death at the Chicago stockyards by the Foundation, to be used for educational purposes. The litter weighed exactly 4,789 pounds and came from the Rawleigh Farms at Freeport, Ill.

Tells Secrets of Kernel of Corn



THE magic powers that lie within a kernel of corn, a human, romantic, graphic story, of interest to every man, woman and child in the United States, was told for the first time in a manner understandable to the layman over WLS—the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation station, Chicago, by Frank I. Mann, the "first farmer of Illinois."

Mr. Mann, who has devoted his entire life to the study of agriculture, is a frequent feature on the farm programs of WLS. In his talks on corn he explains the miracle which annually produces America's most valuable crop; the romance of the enzyme, told in words of one syllable. He details the exact manner in which this tiny seed sprouts, grows and reproduces itself many times over and makes billions of dollars for the farmer. Mr. Mann's radio audience is one of the largest over this radio station. During the period of the National Seed Corn Show, held in Chicago under the auspices of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, Mr. Mann delivered probably his most masterful and dramatic recital of the little "kernel of corn."

"It is the unit of growth of one of the most important plants ever given to man," he said, "a plant that has done more than any other to make possible human progress and development."

WLS New Superpower Station Now on the Air

NO PHASE of science which radio wizards have been able to discover has been left untouched in building the new superpower station for WLS, the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation station, Chicago, near Crete, Ill., on the Dixie Highway. The transmitter is 5,000-watt capacity, with tubes of 10,000-watt units. A specially designed frequency amplifier assures the holding of the same wave length under all conditions and the use of the capacity reduces the possibility of interference with other stations, according to Curtis D. Peck, engineer in charge. The station is located on a two-and-one-half-acre plot. The site is landscaped and beautified with hedges and creeping bent grass lawns. Fifteen miles of ground wire were plowed in rows under the lawn as a farmer plants his potatoes. The building contains an extra large operating room, office, reception room for visitors, generator and battery rooms and switch closets. The most up-to-date construction has been employed throughout. An elaborate hot-water system has been installed to prevent freezing of the water used in cooling tubes. The towers are 200 feet high and 40 feet at the base. The wave length remains the same—345 meters. The inaugural program was broadcast October 31. A new "radio art" studio in the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, was opened to the radio public at the same time.

America First

Not merely in matters material, but in things of the spirit.

Not merely in the calm assertion of rights but in the glad assumption of duties.

Not flaunting her strength as a giant, but like a good Samaritan, bending in helpfulness over a sick and wounded world.

Not in splendid isolation but in courageous co-operation.

Not in pride, arrogance, and disdain of other races and peoples, but in sympathy, love, and understanding.

Not in treading again the old worn, bloody pathway which ends inevitably in chaos and disaster, but in blazing a new trail, along which, please God, other nations will follow, into the new Jerusalem where wars shall be no more.

Some day some nation must take that path—unless we are to lapse once again into utter barbarism—and that honor I covet for my beloved America.

And so, in that spirit and with these hopes, I say with all my heart and soul, "America First."

When you wish your neighbor "A Happy New Year"
Don't think that your duty is done!
A wish that is merely a word of cheer
Is a hollow and worthless one.
As you live by his side in the days to come,
You will find if you are sincere,
A hundred chances will come to you
To give him a Happy New Year.
—The Union Signal.

Trials of The Editor

If you doubt the troubles of the editor just read how one pen pusher suffered at the instigation of a set of rotten officials at Washington because he dared to insinuate the method of Teapot Dome oil operations were unfair and full of graft. Carl Magee of Tulsa Oklahoma was a man's man in every sense of the word—not one of the usual kind of men but an honest upright citizen, a Sunday school teacher, a president of the Y. M. C. A. a member of the Chamber of Commerce. When he went to Tulsa it had 1800 inhabitants but when he left it there was a population of 125,000. He had expected to always reside in Tulsa but fate decreed otherwise. His wife's health failing it was decided to remove to Alberquerque where the dry climate might benefit her. What appealed to him most was the newspaper field, so curiously enough he bought the office owned by Albert E. Fall of the Hardind Cabinet and as time afterwarg proved, the worst rip-goat who ever graced that high office. Fall supposed that in selling to this man Magee he had merely passed the management onto a "small fish" who would do as he was told and leave politics alone, but in this His Nibs was wonderfully mistaken. Firstly Magee learned he would have to go to New York City to complete the purchase since the paper really belonged to a bunch of politicians who had obtained possession for the sole purpose of electing Albert Fall to the United States Senate. Fall was now in the Senate and it was up to the political gangsters to dispose of the sheet at first opportunity which they did for $115,000. $25,000 of which went to Fall himself. Magee had to borrow money to swing the deal and Fall being anxious to start him in right gave away a lot of the inside of politics in New Mexico. Among other things it developed that two thirds of the New Mexicans were Spanish blood and speech, and juries in that state were nine tenths Spanish, and as far as a native Yankee was concerned if he got into trouble the chances for a fair decision before such a court were mighty small. It had become customary for juries to do as the Judge told them to do. Among other things Fall told Magee the Dons controlled the courts and the politicians controlled the Dons. The Dons took advantage of the fact that New Mexico's dry climate causes great scarcity of water at times and wherever there were water holes, the Spanish gentlemen most generally controlled them. This made it possible to get votes of the people, and Fall slyly insinuated that his gang controlled the water holes folks, and in fact did just as they pleased in the state.

The squaretoed policies of Mr. Magee had suffered an awful shock at this interview with Fall but the more he thought of it the madder he got and right then and there he resolved to let the world know what politics was doing in New Mexico—and as a consequence Magee has been almost killed several times. His first attack was upon the land office—this was followed in quick succession by others and his friends knowing the desperate opponents warned Magee to go slow. One day Fall himself came ramping into the office and said, "You lay off this stuff or you'll be smashed to bits as if a train had run over you."

One night Magee was accosted by a man with a rifle on the road as he was driving his car. The fellow threatened to shoot but luckily another car came on the scene and the game was blocked. At another time as Magee was passing through the capitol building at Santa Fe' he was attacked by a slugger but proved too much for his attacker. At another time he was thrown into jail with Mexicans. Now it is customary to incarcerate Americans in jail with these Gringoes and the fight that always follows results in gouging out the eyes of the American. But the cow boys in the vicinity sensing the danger surrounded the jail and warned the Sheriff if any harm came to the person of Magee they would hang the Sheriff to the nearest tree. Seeing they were foiled at every turn of the road the persecutors knashed their teeth and waited. They had not long to wait. Things were happening at Washington very rapidly. After Fall went into the Cabinet he bought two high priced autos, spent $200,000 on his ranch and it was positively known he did not have this money previously. So where did he get it? Magee told the people of New Mexico where the coin came from. The simmering teapot now was fully replenished and the matter kept growing until Fall was obliged to leave the Cabinet. Editor Magee was arrested and fined $4,050 besides other annoyances but he got his man as most Editors are quite likely to do.

Lightning Rods A Real Protection

Lightning rods, with their accompanying air terminals and ground connections, when properly installed as a system on a building or other structure, give nearly complete protection from lightning.

Statistics from a State such as Iowa, where thunderstorms are frequent, show that more than 95 out of each 100 buildings sustaining fire losses from lightning were not rodded. It is estimated that about 50 percent of the farm buildings in Iowa are rodded.

Lightning rods, or more properly lightning conductors, are nearly always made of copper or heavily galvanized iron or steel, the former generally in the form of a stranded cable, the latter of star cross section twisted into a long spiral Copper is somewhat the better in durability. Both kinds of conductor when correctly installed give satisfactory protection.

Copper conductors should weigh not less than 3 ounces per foot; iron not less than 320 pounds per thousand feet, or a little over 5 ounces per foot, says the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Lightning conductors should be attached direct to the surface of a building without insulators. The air terminals to protect upward pointing parts of the roof should be secured against overturning by the wind, and the ground connections extended downward to permanently moist soil, usually found at a depth of 8 or ten feet below the surface. All joints should be permanently made and of low electrical resistance.

To Open New M. S. C. Horticultural Plant

Formal opening of the new horticultural building and greenhouses at the M. S. C. will be one of the features of Farmers Week, to be held at the college from Feb. 1 to 5.

Although the plant was in use in September, its dedication has been held over for Farmers Week in order that representatives of the state's fruit and floriculture interests may be present in numbers for the formalities.

Thursday, February 4, has been designated "Horticulture" day on the general Farmers Week program, in recognition of the dedication. Inspection of the building and other features will mark the special emphasis on horticulture in the program for the work.

With complete laboratory and class room equipment, model packing, grading and storage plants; greenhouse equipment which makes possible extensive experimental work in both vegetables and flowers, and other up-to-date items of equipment, the new M. S. C. plant is rated the finest thing of its kind among American colleges.

The special farm radio school which will open on Monday, January 11, from station WKAR, the M. S. C. will include five separate courses, each running through the entire twelve weeks of the school. More than 100 different men and women from the college staff will appear as lecturers during the school, 184 lectures being listed. The five courses will be: Home Economics. Animal Husbandry. Complete catalogs of the courses and lecturers in the school are being mailed out free on request to the Director of Extension, M. S. C., East Lansing.

Housework Worth $900 a Year, but—

Leonora Z. Meder.

Nine hundred dollars a year is the value of the average housewife's services in the home, and statistics show there are 20,700,000 women engaged in housework, according to Mrs. Leonora Z. Meder, prominent Chicago woman lawyer and economist.

"The wife," said Mrs. Meder, who was formerly commissioner of public welfare of Chicago, "is an executive, purchasing agent, budget expert, and producer rolled into one. The successful home maker studies food values. She arranges her budget so that the food she buys will have all the necessary body building qualities.

"The woman who would keep down her food bill will do better to spend her money on milk and green vegetables than on butter, though butter is one of the best sources of the essential food element, vitamin A. There are butter substitutes, but nothing can take the place of milk and vegetables.

"Milk, food experts say, is the most nearly perfect food. Science solved the problem by inventing evaporated milk, which is simply fresh cow's milk sterilized in cans and with sixty per cent of the water removed. Because evaporated milk is of double the richness of ordinary market milk many housewives dilute it half and half with water for cooking purposes. Keeping longer than ordinary milk, there is no waste from souring. Then, too, it is cheaper.

"Savings also can be made on meat. Cheaper portions of beef skillfully cooked are highly nutritious and often better tasting than portions which cost more. The shoulder, breast and stew meat of lamb are excellent. Pork shoulders, feet, tails, heart, spareribs and hocks are in the same category."

Cows Cooled by Breezy Electric Fans

Windy Billy would have a right to express astonishment, in lurid cow punching lingo, if he were to return from the grave and witness the changes on the old Texas ranch where he swung his sixty-foot lariat some years gone by. He would see strange sights, resulting from this electrical age that has come since he has gone.

He would see range cows comfortably sheltered in barns, the windows of which are screened, the floors concreted, the interior lighted by electric lights, and the air cooled by electric fans.

Those electric fans, for the luxury of the cows, would startle him more than anything else. Hereford cattle sleep on straw beds with General Electric ceiling fans revolving above them all day and all night when the weather's warm. For this is on an electric ranch in the electric age—of which Windy Billy, the famous cow puncher, never dreamed.

"MY VALLEY!"

SYNOPSIS.—With David, half-breed guide, Brent Steele, of the American Museum of Natural History, is traveling in northern Canada. By a stream he hears Denise, daughter of Col. Hilaire St. Onge, factor at Walling River, play the violin superbly. He introduces himself and accepts an invitation to make the post his home during his stay. He finds the factor worried and mystified. The "log chateau" is a real home. From St. Onge he learns of the mysterious creature of evil, the "Windigo," and the disappearance of a canoe and its crew, with the season's take of furs. Then at night the "Windigo" gives a weird performance. Even Steele is mystified. David, Steele's Indian, and Michel, St. Onge's headman, leave for the scene of the canoe's disappearance in an attempt to solve the mystery.

As the days passed at Walling River, and the dread voice failed to break upon the crisp September nights with a recurrence of its horror, the people timidly took up the old order of their days. The rabbit snares in the forest were again visited and reset by the women, who traveled in pairs for mutual encouragement, and one day Tete-Boule was prevailed upon by the factor to go out with another Indian after moose, for the fort needed fresh meat. As he left, the Ojibway gravely shook the hands of the fearful women and children gathered on the shore, bidding them look upon him for the last time, for by night he and his comrade would be mangled flesh in the maw of the Windigo.

"Did you hear that fool?" Steele asked St. Onge, standing near him on the beach.

"This thing has ruined him as a hunter," replied the factor, "he will never recover from it."

"I think I'll run upstream to the riffles this morning and catch some dore for supper," said the younger man as they returned to the trade-house.

Later, a second canoe quietly left the post, but when the boat reached the riffles, a mile above, the occupant did not stop to fish but continued upstream following the shore. And when the flash from the paddles of the craft above ceased, and the spot on the river which was the canoe, moved to the shore, the boat following, also turned in, and was lifted and hidden in the alders. Then the premonition of Tete-Boule attained a partial fulfilment, for on the shores of the Walling started a man hunt; but the incentive in the hunter was not a craving for human flesh, but a mild curiosity.

Before sunset the safe return to the post of Tete-Boule and his partner was heralded with joy, although they had failed in their hunt. But it was well after dark before the second canoe slid silently in to the stony beach.

"You had no luck this afternoon, monsieur, you caught nothing?" laughed St. Onge as Steele appeared for supper.

"As a matter of fact, Colonel, I went hunting, but the game was too tame for sport."

St. Onge's black brows lifted.

"You are cryptic, monsieur."

"Well, to confess," laughed Steele, "I was interested to see how much hunting your men would really do—and I found out."

"You followed Tete-Boule's canoe?"

"Yes, I watched them for a few hours, but as they showed no sign of taking to the bush, I traveled over to those ponds Michel told me about. Tomorrow, if you have a man who will help me pack the meat, I'll get a moose."

"And Tete-Boule never left the river?"

"Not while I watched him."

The factor shrugged significantly. "He's 'bush shy' now and will not hunt. But what is there to do?"

"Have you thought that he might be shamming to avoid work? Is he lazy?"

"No, he always was a good packer and hunter. It's the Windigo."

In the week past, Steele had seen all too little of the girl whose personality had so vividly aroused his interest, whose moods, defying analysis, only added to her charm. Convinced that beyond a dread of the ugly alternatives which the future might present to her choice, beyond any possible fear of the manifestations of the supernatural which the post had witnessed, there lurked a tangible cause for anxiety, his active mind had been ceaseless in its groping for a clew to its nature. Two days following the night of terror, he had spent searching the big ridge for sign of wolverine, lynx or wolf, had produced nothing in explanation of the mysterious cries, but while his eyes swept the dry floor of the forest to right and left, his thoughts had dealt with the reiterated query: "Whom did she fear at the rapids? What was she about to tell me when St. Onge interrupted? She had said, 'But you do not know the danger! and, there are so many—' Many what? Clearly there was something more than the Windigo in this warning. But what could it be?"

So Steele returned from his profitless search of the ridge to wait for the return of David and Michel, when a definite plan of campaign could be framed.

* * * * * * *

On a morning when the warm September sun, lifting the low-lying river mists, rolled them back on ridges, here and there already flecked with the yellow and gold of a frost-painted birch or poplar, Denise St. Onge appeared at breakfast in whipcord and heavy boots. Steele stared in surprise at the change in face and manner of his hostess. The ghost of worry had left her eyes, which shone with high spirits. Her mood of silence had given way to a gayety foreign to his knowledge of her.

"This beautiful morning, monsieur, Charlotte and I go to wave an au revoir to the summer which passes."

"Charlotte is to be envied," he replied, charmed with the note of cheerfulness.

Her eyes lighted with amusement. "It is possible that it might be arranged that we take with us a bodyguard," she said archly. "Of course, it is not for ladies to demand the presence of cavaliers—"

"Take me, oh fair lady, as thy knight!" he begged.

"Laggard though you are, you may escort us to my watch tower, where Charlotte and I go to play the spring north, and to wave a bon voyage to the last of the geese."

"It is charming of you, mademoiselle, to allow me to go," he said, delighted at having the girl to himself in her gay mood.

Accompanied by the stolid Charlotte, carrying a birch bark basket containing the lunch, and whose swart face betrayed misgivings she dared not voice, Denise St. Onge appeared at the trade-house.

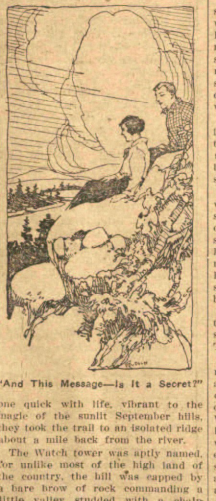
"You will not go without your rifle, monsieur?" queried St. Onge as Steele joined them.

"Is the Windigo dangerous in broad daylight?" facetiously asked Steele.

The bronze face of the factor reddened.

"The Windigo may strike in the day or night, monsieur. Who knows? It is well you go armed." And he handed the Mannlicher to the American, who took it, mystified, irritated, that the man to whom he had offered his services should withhold his confidence.

Led by the girl, hardly recognizable in her sudden metamorphosis from a creature of reticence and aloofness to one quick with life, vibrant to the magic of the sunlit September hills, they took the trail to an isolated ridge about a mile back from the river.



"And This Message—Is It a Secret?"

The Watch tower was aptly named, for unlike most of the high land of the country, the hill was capped by a bare brow of rock commanding a little valley studded with a chain of miniature lakes. Beyond, a sweep of rolling forest faded into the haze of the southern horizon.

"Is it not beautiful—my valley, monsieur?" she asked with a wide sweep of her arm.

"Beautiful!" he repeated. "And you come here often?"

"Yes—that is, we used to come here; but lately—" She caught herself up sharply, then continued. "This valley, monsieur, I call my Vale of Tempe. It is enchanting to watch the spring slowly sweep it with its magic—paint in, here and there, the soft green of the young birch leaves, the silver of poplar, and balm of gilead; then rim that brook with the red of the willow buds. And the first flowers of the forest—hepatica, purple and pink and white; violets and wood anemone and trillium—"

She paused, the dark eyes grew wistful—the voice throaty, as she continued: "Once there was no terror in these green forests; once we searched, unafraid, Charlotte and I, for the flower treasures they possessed. 'Come and find us?' they called, and daily we sought them and brought them home to transplant in our garden, but now—"

"But now?" he repeated, wondering if he were, at last, to know—to be made a sharer in her secret.

But she eluded him. "Charlotte and I often came here to dream and play away the day—that is, I did," she laughed. "Poor Charlotte at times was bored, oh, so bored! Was it not so, Charlotte?"

"Enh, enh! Yes!" mumbled the Ojibway woman, who sat on a rock apart from the two, her restless eyes sweeping the scrub below them.

"Charlotte is not bored now; she's scared to death," suggested Steele with a laugh.

"Has she not reason, monsieur?" protested Denise. "But we have not been here, she and I, since midsummer. And I miss it so."

"You fear to come here now—believe in this thing?" He welcomed the opportunity to put the question directly.

The dark eyes frankly met his. "Is there not good reason, monsieur, for fear in a woman? After the fur canoe—and that night?"

Natural as had been her reply, Steele intuitively sensed that she was dissembling—to avoid his inevitable questioning was willing to have him believe that she, too, was a victim of the general superstition. But she had betrayed herself the morning her father cut short her half-uttered warning. Well, the day was young and he feared to press her then for an explanation of what she patently desired to avoid. So with a nodded assent to her question, he changed the subject.

"We are to have gay music today, mademoiselle. You remember, you promised we should be merry."

"Yes, today the violin shall sing of joy; it is too beautiful here to be sad. Even though the first gray geese of the year pass south, I shall send them no message."

"And this message—is it a secret?"

"A secret, monsieur? What secrets can a woman cherish in these forests?" Her reply had been spontaneous, innocent of subterfuge; then, in his lifted eyebrows and humorous curl of lip, she caught the reflection of the double implication of her question, and her face flushed to the temples.

"Have you ever longed to journey south with the passing geese?" he quickly asked, gallantly covering her embarrassment. "As you play them down the skies, do you not wish to join them?"

"Why, Monsieur Steele, you have stolen my dreams," she cried, radiant with surprise. "Always, as they pass, I stand here calling to them to lend me wings to follow—follow into the south. I try to lure them back with my violin—but no, they pass. So I send them down the wind to a mad quick-step—my bon voyage, my farewell—until spring pipes them north."

She had risen. And her eyes, shining with emotion, her face, vivid with the color of her thoughts, strangely stirred the man who listened. The lines of her straight body, from shoulders to trim feet, held his eyes.

Watching her, Steele asked himself what this strange girl, tense as the strings of her violin, with her moods of aloofness and silence, followed by swift changes to whimsical gayety and lightness of spirit, was coming to mean to him. As her eyes again met his he wondered what memories he should carry down to Nepigon in October.

"And the message you send with the geese?" he asked. "There is homesickness in it for your France—your Touraine?"

"Ah," she sighed, "is it not natural, monsieur? I do long for the roses and the poppy fields—the warm sun on the white roads and the laughter of the people. There is no laughter at Walling River—now." She raised her hands in eloquent gesture. "The winter here is so long—so cold. The eternal wind in the spruce—does it not speak to you, too? To me there are always the voices—voices of hunger and pain—and death."

"Yes, summer or winter," he said, "the voices are everywhere, in the white-waters, the spruce, the hills. And often, in the breeze, the forest becomes one great orchestra."

"You have heard it, too?" she cried, "the sweep of the violins, the moaning of the cellos?"

"I always hear them in the summer, from a river; with the drum-beat of rapids as accompaniment."

"Ah, there is much of the poet in you, monsieur." And for an instant there was a light in the girl's eyes which set wild thoughts stirring in his brain. "But our winter is beautiful, also, in moods," she went on. "The quiet days with the sun on the snow—I love then to walk in the forest. And the winding snowshoe trails; do they not call you to follow?"

Evidently Steele has fallen in love with the beautiful French girl. And her feelings?

Flat Feet and Rheumatism

Many persons think they have rheumatism of the legs or back when they have flat feet or broken arches, according to Dr. Solomon Strouse in Hygeia Magazine.

A young man fell as he was escorting his lady down the aisle of a theater. Much embarrassed and fearing himself a victim of serious rheumatism, he stayed in bed nursing his illness. When he finally called on a physician, his flat feet were discovered and his illness disappeared in a pair of properly adjusted shoes.

Obstinacy in Babies Merely Human Nature

If your baby girl at eighteen months yells when you want her to comply with some adult wish, or your three-year-old pushes you away and says, "No, I won't," do not be alarmed at this show of obstinacy. Periodic spells of resistance to even pleasant suggestions are part of the normal development of the normal child, according to Dr. D. M. Levy, Chicago psychiatrist, who has made an extended investigation of resistance in children.

Babies of less than six months tend to be calm, even when just awakened or interrupted at meal time, says Doctor Levy, but from six months on perverseness increases until the third year, often with a minor high point of resistance in the eighteenth month, which is particularly apt to appear in the case of girls. After the third year resistance gradually decreases until the child at five years readily co-operates with an adult who knows how to make himself agreeable. Girls, on the whole, show more resistance than boys.

True Charity

Giving money will have no value except we first give ourselves. All our giving must just be the renewal and carrying out of the first great act of self-surrender, and each new gift of money may be a renewal of the blessedness of entire consecration.—Andrew Murray.

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Is Winter Time Your Backache Time?

Does Your Back Foretell Every Change of the Weather? Do You Feel Old and Stiff and Suffer Sharp, Rheumatic Pains?
Then Look to Your Kidneys!

DOES every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you lame, stiff and achy? Are you nervous and depressed; feel tired, worn out and miserable? Does your back throb and ache until it seems you just can't keep going?

Then look to your kidneys! Colds and chills throw a heavy strain on the kidneys. They overload the blood with impurities that the kidneys have to filter off. The kidneys are apt to weaken under this rush of new work, become congested and inflamed.

It's little wonder, then, that every cold finds so many folks suffering with torturing backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying kidney irregularities.

If this is the case with you, don't risk neglect! Help your weakened kidneys with a stimulant diuretic. Begin using Doan's Pills. Doan's have helped thousands. Local users testify to their worth. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good People:

HENRY BAILEY, 1008 Sherwood Ave., Kalamazoo, Mich., says: "Colds affected my kidneys and caused backache. Mornings when I got up, my back was so sore and lame, I could hardly get out of bed. I was annoyed by dizzy spells, too. My kidneys were in poor condition and I had to get up during the night to pass the secretions. After using Doan's Pills, I was entirely cured."

MRS. A. HERMAN, 609 Ada St., Kalamazoo, Mich., says: "Colds settled across my kidneys and severe twinges darted through the small of my back when I bent over. I could hardly straighten again. I felt tired, worn out and nervous and I realized my kidneys were disordered, because they acted too often. I used Doan's Pills and they rid me of kidney disorder."

Bacon's Predictions

"It is equally possible to construct cars which may be set in motion with marvelous rapidity, independent of horses or other animals. Flying machines may also be made, the man seated in the center, and by means of certain contrivances beating the air with artificial wings." So predicted Roger Bacon, the father—or perhaps we ought to say the great-great-grandfather—of modern science, no less than seven hundred years ago. How many present-day dreams of the future will be verified so exactly?—Youth's Companion.

6,822 DEATHS FROM WHOOPING COUGH

Whooping cough is the most neglected of children's diseases, and one of the most dangerous. There are 6,822 deaths reported in a single year in the United States from this disease. There is no cure for whooping cough, it usually running its course, but relief can be given and its duration shortened. A few drops of Dr. Drake's Glessco will relieve the most violent paroxysms of coughing, and given regularly it will lessen the severity of the attacks and bring quicker recovery. Endorsed by physicians and sold by druggists on guarantee of complete satisfaction. 50c by all dealers everywhere.—Adv.

Cost of Defective Vision

The strain of modern life is not without its effect on the younger generation, for approximately 2,000,000 school children in the United States are retarded in their studies through defective vision. The members of this great army of youthful students are from one to two years behind in their school work, making a cost to the taxpayers of $130,000,000 additional each year. The total retardation from all sources is estimated at $390,000,00 a year.—From Thrift Magazine.

Not of Criminal Bent

Strange as it may seem, some of the richest and most influential people in Australia are proud to claim descent from the convicts who were the first settlers in that land. In explanation, it is to be borne in mind that a large proportion of the convicts transported to Australia in the early days were not what we should now call criminals. Many were convicted of quite petty offenses, and some were mere children.

It is expected that nearly 70,000 tons of sugar will be manufactured in Great Britain this year, compared with 26,000 last year. The world production in 1924 was about 23,000,000 tons, and Great Britain's annual consumption is about 1,500,000 tons.

Thousands of people who are sufferers from constipation do not become aware of it until they seek out the cause of their frequent headaches.

"Those bilious headaches can be prevented"

"I know how agonizing they are. For years I was a chronic sufferer.

"And the headaches were not the worst part of it. The strong drugs I used to take to relieve the pain upset my stomach and slowly but surely undermined my general health.

"Finally I found out that my headaches were due to constipation. My doctor advised Nujol. After taking it regularly a few weeks the trouble disappeared.

"Since then I have never had another headache. There is no reason why I should, for the cause has been corrected."

Nujol Corrects Constipation in Nature's Way

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. Nujol simply softens the waste matter and thus permits regular and thorough elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is gentle, safe and natural in its action.

You can take Nujol for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Fudge Making Finds Favor With Co-Eds

Meta H. Given.

Fudge may be classed with pie as a typical American dish. It has a place in every young man's heart and every girl's category of accomplishments. Co-eds swear by fudge and "fudge shines" in sorority parlors are the very latest wrinkle in collegiate circles.

There's a big wallop in a platter of fudge, the co-eds explain, because it's one of the greatest sources of energy, containing both milk, the "perfect food," and sugar.

If you've any doubt of the place fudge occupies in the young male heart, try these recipes on him and hear his own answer. Each of the appended dishes was prepared by Miss Meta Given, doing research work in the home economics department of the University of Chicago, and they are the result of much experimentation.

Chocolate Fudge.

[illegible] cups sugar
[illegible] cup evaporated milk
¼ cup water
1 tbsp. corn sirup
2 squares chocolate
Few grains of salt
1 tbsp. butter
¼ tsp. vanilla

Shave the chocolate so that it will melt more easily. Add the sugar, salt, milk, water and corn sirup. Cook, stirring until chocolate and sugar are melted, and then only occasionally to prevent burning, until the soft ball stage is reached, or a temperature of [illegible] degrees Fahrenheit. Remove from fire and add the butter. Cool until almost lukewarm, 110 degrees, add flavoring and beat vigorously until when a little is dropped from the spoon it will hold its shape. Pour into oiled tins and mark in squares.

Cocoanut Candy.

1⅓ cup sugar
¼ cup evaporated milk
¼ cup water
1 tsp. butter
1-3 cup shredded cocoanut
½ tsp. vanilla

Put butter into granite saucepan, when melted, add sugar, milk and water, and stir until sugar is dissolved. Heat to boiling, and cook to the soft ball stage. Remove from fire, add cocoanut and vanilla, cool to 110 degrees Fahrenheit and beat until creamy and mixture begins to sugar slightly around edge of pan. Pour into buttered pan and when cool mark in squares.

Penoche.

2 cups brown or maple sugar
⅔ cup evaporated milk
⅔ cup water
1 tbsp. butter
1 tsp. vanilla
2 cups chopped nuts

Boil sugar, milk and water to the soft ball stage. Remove from the fire; add butter, flavoring and nuts. Cool to 110 degrees Fahrenheit, then beat until creamy and thickened; pour into a greased tin and when firm cut.

Mud Lake School Notes

Our Christmas entertainment was largely attended and the program and tree were much enjoyed by all.

Those receiving gold stars for perfect attendance last month were Dorr Harwood, Clarabell Chase, Loceal Shull, Margaret and Merle Coryell and Lucille and Claren Foust and Merlin Church.

School opened January 4th after a week of vacation. We have two weeks of school before our first semester closes. Semester examinations will be held January 14th and 15th.

We began our warm lunches Monday by serving cocoa and graham wafers. Loceal Shull and Clarabell Chase are acting as assistants and doing the dish-washing this week.

Lucile Foust was absent from school on Monday.

State Farmers Face Seed Corn Shortage

That Michigan farmers will be faced with a very serious seed corn shortage next spring, the situation being compared with the disasterous year 1917 in this respect, is the word being sent out by Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the farm crops department at the M. S. C.

The entire northern states and corn belt sections are said to be in the same condition with regard to seed corn prospects for spring planting, leaving little hope that regions growing corn which would be adapted for Michigan can be counted on for seed supplies.

"The fall season was exceedingly misleading," says Professor Cox, "in that corn appeared to be well matured in early fall. The unusually wet weather of the fall, followed by early freezes, prevented corn in the field from drying out, and when the freezes came germination was seriously injured.

"Tests at the M. S. C. show that many seed corn supplies thought to be in good condition are giving a very low percentage of germination. Only those farmers who field selected their corn early in the fall and hung it up for proper drying can feel fairly certain of having good seed. Even those lots, however, should be carefully tested owing to the unusual fall conditions.

"Supplies of old corn of good germination from last year's Michigan grown crop should not be fed up, but should be held available for use for seed next spring by those who will be unable to secure good seed of high germination of the 1925 crop.

"Conditions this year are apparently as alarming as in the disasterous year of 1917. Every corn grower should test his seed corn supply for germination, and if it is found unfit, as soon as possible secure dependable seed grown in his neighborhood or from other safe producers growing similar corn."

"What's in a name?" Everything. Its good to have the name of paying promptly. Renew.

Judd Schaad and wife of Chicago were called here on Thursday by the funeral of his cousin, Lynn Stevens.

Frank Stevens of Elmira, New York, was called here this week by the funeral of his nephew, Lynn Stevens.

B. Reid Shepard has obtained an interest in the Payne & Green Hardware store and Mr. Shepard will be in the store from now on and will be more than pleased to meet his many friends who wish to purchase goods in this line.

The I. C. E. Club of Center Adams very pleasantly surprised Miss Margray Hayhoe as her home on Saturday evening. About thirty sat down to a delicisus pot luck supper. Other features of the evening were games and music. Miss Hayhoe returned to her work at the Ypsilanti State Normal on Monday.

A meeting of the Woman's club was held Monday Jan. 4 at the home of Mrs. Gladys Williams. Roll call was responded to by giving quotations appropriate to the season. A paper, "Why and Where New Years was First Observed," was read by Mrs. Addie VanAken. "New Year's in Other Countries," given by Mrs. Addie Baker. There was a good attendance at this meeting and the hostess served light refreshments. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. Etta Corey Jan. 18. This will be guest day.

New Orchestra in Town

The musically inclined young people of this village have decided to organize an orchestra, and meetings are held each Tuesday evening. A leader from Hillsdale will be in charge of the rehearsals. It is hoped to secure eight pieces.

Two of the Senior classes of the Methodist S. S. with their teachers Mrs. Susie Haight and Henry Porter had a very pleasant meeting at the church Thursday. Potluck dinner was served. About 20 people were present.

A. J. Hoffman left on Wednes day morning for Florida where he has two road gangs employed in construction work. One stretch of highway is just out of St. Augustine and the other is out of Miami He expects to be away three weeks.

Alpha Chapter. No. 288, O. E. S. held a regular meeting last Tuesday evening with a fair attendance. Pot-luck supper was served at 6:30 to members and their families. Following the regular meeting a program was carried out.

Conrad Bohn will conduct an auction on his premises 1½ miles west and one mile north of North Adams Tuesday January 26 beginning at 1:00 p. m. sharp and will sell three horses, 2 Jersey heifers and a quantity of farming tools. James Post is auctioneer and John Williams, clerk.

What might have terminated very seriously on Thursday forenoon when the Mutual oil truck driven by Charles Gary headed north near the George Corbett place north of this village turned over on its side and smashed the cab in which Mr. Gary was riding. The glass windows were broken and Charles sustained a severely cut nose from the pieces. The truck was not seriously injured. Dr. McFarland was summoned and dressed the wound and Mr. Gary returned to Hillsdale.

A meeting of the Cotorie Club was held last week Friday evening at the home of Mrs. John Quarton south of North Adams and officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. Ed Gray; vice president, Mrs. Lida Pool; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. Will Keith. After the business meeting an excellent program under the direction of Wid Pool was given. The pot-luck supper was served by the men and a splendid social time is reported. Next meeting will be held at the home of C. N. Williams and wife, Feb. 5th.

There has been some discussion as to how far it is possible to send electric currents along the wires and yet maintain a high voltage for use. At the present time western firms are transporting electric energy for a distance of 250 miles. The Southern Sierras Power Co. has a line 540 miles in length, carrying 33,000 volts and operating successfully. Of course these lines are vastly different from the lines here, in so far that they are heavy insulated cables and suspended from steel towers many feet above any trees or other objects which might interfere with their functioning.

The 6th anniversary of the National Prohibition Amendment came on January 20th and is being observed in all places in our land The Hillsdale W. C. T. U. is to have a Union Meetng of all churches of the County Sunday evening, Jan. 17, at 7:00 R. R. time in the Hillsdale Presbyterian church to celebrate this event and North Adams Union and all others interested are cordially invited. Dr. W. W. Whitehouse of Albion (who has spoken in our village) is to be the speaker of the evening and this insures a good address. The Presbyterian Choir will furnish the music. It is hoped that a number from North Adams will be able to attend and thereby gain a new interest in the Prohibition movement.

positive that a few of our subscribers who have not yet paid for their papers are not familiar with the law which the Postoffice Department has laid down regarding unpaid newspaper accounts. It is not that the law is so very strict that means so much to us, but we are in need of the money at this time of year. There are coal bills, light bills, rent bills and a lot of more "Williams" coming in and the Editor must pay a little occasionally or get into the discard. A word to the wise is sufficient. You need the paper and we need the money. Nuff Sed!

The January Birthday Club will meet in the basement of the Methodist church on Wednesday evening January 20th, with potluck supper. All invited.

In this issue of the Advocate will be found the time table of the bus which runs through this village to and from Jackson. The proprietor has repeatedly promised to have his schedule published but so far, he has utterly failed to do so. We are printing this to accommodate our subscribers. who no doubt will refer to it. We can hardly imagine a man so short-sighted he does not want to keep people informed as to the time of his conveyances.

Arrangements are already being made to finish the work of paving M-23 through Hillsdale county to the line west from a short distance west of Somerset as soon as the spring weather opens. Large numbers of convicts from Jackson prison are usually employed in season on the job of road construction. A plot of real estate at Jonesville has recently been acquired to erect huts on to accommodate the workers. Here they will be found as soon as the music starts in the spring. Last summer the convict camp in the Irish Hills was quite an institution. in fact it was so popular that several of the eligible young women in the vicinity became acquainted with the convicts. The guards of the bunch allowed the criminals considerable lattitude. and all the dances in the vicinity were patronized by the men who met a number of girls more or less open to adventure. They danced with the prisoners and the whole conduct of the camp seemed like a Sunday school outing rather than a penal institution. Of oourse the criminals did not go to these little affairs for wall flower purposes, and many a fox trot, shimmy and two-step these bad men of the fossilized shell enjoyed with their naughty arms around the waists of presumptive respectable damsels. Quite a lot of the boys around North Adams get moody streaks occasionally and wonder what it is necessary to kill in order to pull down a prison sentence at Jackson with promise of a job on the road, besides the chance of clothes and board and a real modern dance of an evening looks good to the average young dude for the winter.

Regular monthly P. T. A. meeting was held at the school house Monday evening with music by the High school students under direction of their teacher, Mildred Miner Hunt. A debate between home teams on the Child Labor question was given and the teachers criticised. Affirmative Jack Haskell, Lucille VanWert and Lawrence Wilcox. Negative Ione Young, Gladys Holkins and Lemuel Rhodes.

Bandit Hunters

Forty-three counties in Minnesota have adopted the range plan for instant action against or pursuing of bank bandits. In each of these counties minute men always in-readiness and armed with sawed-off shot guns and high powered rifles, are enlisted, and through them it is possible to secure sufficient men to start in immediate pursuit when the news of the bank robbers is broad-casted thru their territory.

Other states will watch this movement with a great deal of interest, bank robbing and shooting of innocent by-standers who happen to get in their way, having become altogether too common for public safety. A large area of Michigan closely resembles that of Minnesota, great stretches of country in each state being practically isolated and without sufficient protection when local enforcement officers must be relied upon for security.

Under the Minnesota plan each county has about 75 men, so located that every part of the county can be put under instant patrol following an alarm. They are sworn in as deputy sheriffs and united, present a formidable body of law enforcers.

You Are Paying Tribute

How many times I have seen farmers' wives go in to the stores and ask, "How much is butter today?" and the farmer asks "what is the price of corn?" and "what are you paying for hogs?" Can you picture the farmer going to the implement dealer in the spring when it is time to prepare for crops and the dealer saying to him "Well, what are you paying for plows today?" Aint it a joke. If the control were by natural conditions it would be all right, but it isn't. At both ends its a control by selfish interests. The result is natural The average farm family last year earned a total of $649. The average monopoly that sells to the farmer paid stock dividends and then dividends on that. The farmer knows something is hurting him but he doesn't know just what. I can tell him. When he sleeps in his bed he has paid tribute to the furniture monopoly: when he gets up and puts on his shoes he pays tribute to the leather monopoly. In short this tribute paying business goes on night and day, and if you know of any monopoly paying tribute to the farmer, please mention it. These are some of the reasons why farmers don't get rich.

Discovered by American

Now that Dinard, the famous resort on the coast of Brittany, has become so fashionable among tourists, students of its early history have uncovered the fact that it was first discovered by an American. Mr. Coppinger happened to be in St. Malo in 1860 in search of good fishing and crossed the bay to the then unknown fishing village, in the sheltered cove beyond. He returned the following year and settled there, and the steady growth of the village can be dated from the year of his residence.

Danger in Being Fat

"A lean dog for a long race," is an old proverb, and a lean person for longevity is a corollary that life insurance companies are more and more impressing on the public. At a national convention of life insurance men held recently in Chicago, the president, Mr. Albert M. Johnson, said that fat is killing off Americans so rapidly that special education is needed. He considers it more dangerous to be fat than to travel on a railway, an ocean liner or an airplane. What temerity it is, then, for a fat man to travel at all!—Youth's Companion.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Detroit—Completion of the designs for the largest metal-clad airship in the world, two and onehalf times the size of the Shenandoah, to be built by the Aircraft Development corporation at the Ford airport, Dearborn, Mich., was announced by Carl F. Fritsche, general manager of the corporation.

Albion—The St. Paul's Lutheran church brotherhood is planning a rally of brotherhoods of Lutheran churches of surrounding cities for Sunday, January 17, at this city. The meeting will be held both afternoon and evening, with special speakers. Among the cities that will be represented are Marshall, Battle Creek, Lansing and Jackson.

Lansing—Lansing is going to find out if it has any rivals for the fiddling crown now held by "Mellie" Dunham, of Maine, and "Jep" Bisbee, of Michigan. Veteran fiddlers of the capital city and nearby towns have been invited to attend an old time dance to be given by the Knights of Columbus, the evening of January 15, and show their skill.

Wyandotte—Wyandotte's tax rate for 1926 will be $3,97 per thousand lower than it was in 1925, it was announced by H. S. Amiot, mayor of the city. The city tax is $11.50 in place of $12.50, and the school tax is $12.50 instead of $15.37. The reduction is made possible by the increased valuation of the city and the annexation of considerable territory.

Detroit—In a letter to the Wayne County Board of Auditors, Dr. Robert N. Haskell, superintendent of the Ionia State Hospital, accepted the superintendency of the new Wayne County Training School at Northville. On Dec. 29 Dr. Haskell was offered the position under a five-year contract at $7,500 a year. The training school will care for feeble-minded youths.

Mt. Clemens—Collapsing on the ice at the entrance to a fishing shanty on the bay, near the barracks of the state police here, Deputy Game Warden Charles Schwangeck, of New Baltimore, died suddenly. Schwangeck, accompanied by Edward Pettit, another deputy game warden, was on his way to discuss the recently enacted fishing regulation with John C. Charbenau, owner of the hut.

Pontiac—Oakland County supervisors refused to take any action on petitions asking that three annexation propositions be submitted to the electors of Royal Oak City and Township at the April 5 election. They also failed to act on two petitions, one of which asks that the incorporation of Hazel Park in Royal Oak Township as a village to be voted on in April while the other asks that it be incorporated as a city.

Grand Rapids—Hugh L. Johnson pleaded guilty in Superior Court to a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated and was sentenced to serve from six months to a year in the Michigan Reformatory at Ionia. Johnson some weeks ago paid a fine of $100 for a similar offense. His is the second case to be brought here under the new State law which makes a second offense of this nature a felony punishable by a term in prison.

Howell—The trial of Hagen Gardner, 30 years old, of Ann Arbor, and Henry C. Girard, 34, of Willis, charged with assault with intent to kill Glover Watson, Dearborn real estate man, and R. G. Robinson and Harry Hanover, both of Ypsilanti, was begun in Circuit Court here. The trial is the outgrowth of an alleged gun battle Oct. 25 between the two factions on the farm of Frank I. Cornwall, of Ann Arbor, located in Livingston County.

Mt. Clemens—Private Stephen Bordneau, of the 17th Pursuit Squadron, set what is said to have been an unofficial parachute drop record when he leaped from a Curtiss observation plane at a height of 4,000 feet and fell 2,000 feet before pulling the rip cord on his parachute. Bordneau was substituted for Lieut. Thomas Ash, Jr., who was scheduled to make the jump, on orders from Maj. Thomas G. Lanphier, commanding at Selfridge Field. The jump is said to be one of the most spectacular ever staged at Selfridge.

Lansing—The Michigan Bell Telephone Co. must decide immediately whether it will accept the order of the Michigan Public Utilities Commission, fixing a valuation of $69,000,000 on its property as a basis for rate making purposes and reducing its revenue $1,195,000 a year. The new rate schedule, which effects Detroit alone, is ordered to go into immediate effect. The company will have a reasonable time to effect a change unless it decides to follow the procedure, adopted by it on a former order, when it refused to accept the order.

Monroe—Warrants have been issued here by Justice Lee Smith against George White, a justice of the peace, and Sheldon Shertzer, a former deputy sheriff, both of Bedford township, on complaint of Merrill Smith, 17 years old, Ida township, charging them with having made a felonious assault with a revolver the night of December 11. The men attempted to stop an automobile occupied by Smith and a high school girl near Fargerville for the purpose of searching for liquor. Several shots were fired, two passing through the windshield.

Pontiac—Approval of plans for a sanitarium for tuberculosis sufferers, to be built by Oakland County at a cost of upwards of $300,000, was given the drawings of the architect, Frederick D. Madison, of Royal Oak, when they were presented to the board of supervisors. The county purchased an 80-acre farm in Waterford Township overlooking seven lakes as the site for the hospital and it will be built on a hill 150 feet above the road that passes the farm. It will be classed as the first unit of a structure that can be added to as more room is needed.

Cadillac—Catching the band of her wedding ring in such a manner as to break the ring while she was performing her housework, Mrs. W. A. Miller took the ring off her finger for the first time in 54 years.

Lansing — Petitions protesting against the retrial of Arthur B. Rich, of Battle Creek, in Ingham County are being circulated in Lansing, it was reported. They were meeting with lukewarm reception, however, few persons displaying interest or taking the trouble to sign.

Kalamazoo—Guests fled from the new Burdick hotel Monday when smoke caused by grease burning in a ventilator shaft in the kitchen filled some of the halls. The grease became ignited from an overheated exhaust fan. It was some time before firemen were able to extinguish the blaze, the damage from which was small, it was said.

Marshall—Dale, 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Snyder, student in fifth grade in Isaac Crary school with Mrs. S. E. Robinson as teacher, fell dead from his seat in school here. Dale just had returned from a recitation and was studying a problem in arithmetic when he died. Besides his parents, he leaves one brother and seven sisters.

Flint—Sidney S. Smith, Genesee County agricultural agent for the last seven years, has announced his resignation, effective at once. No reason was given by Smith for his resignation, but it is believed it may have been prompted by a report that the board of supervisors would refuse to make an appropriation for the work of the bureau this year.

Ypsilanti—Entering the Michigan Central station here at 11:45 Monday, two armed men held up Night Operator Esslinger and a companion, forced Esslinger to open the company's safe and escaped with $150 in currency. When last seen the men were speeding toward Detroit in an automobile. Chief of Police Vernon Connors wired the Detroit police to be on the lookout for the pair.

Lansing—Closing and removing a safety pin from the throat of Gerald Campbell, seven-months old son of Mr. and Mrs. John Campbell, was one of the unusual surgical operations performed at St. Lawrence hospital here. X-ray pictures taken before the operation showed the pin was open and inverted, and it was necessary for the doctors to turn the pin over and close it before removing it with an esophoscope.

Jackson—A petition for a John Doe inquiry, commonly known as a one-man grand jury, investigation into statements regarding the management and administration of the Michigan state prison and the purchase by the state of a cement plant at Chelsea will be presented to Circuit Judge Benjamin Williams by County Prosecutor John Simpson some time Friday, as a result of a visit to Jackson by Homer Quay, assistant attorney general.

Jackson—Earnings of the Hayes Wheel company for 1925 are estimated to have reached $8 a share, compared to $3.16 a share for 1924, it was announced by C. G. MacKay, secretary of the company. Total 1925 earnings on 197,000 shares outstanding are estimated at $1,700,000, while 1924 earnings were $715,000 according to Mr. McKay. Outstanding bonds amounting to $660,000 to $2,400,000 and its working capital from $3,318,000 to $4,800,000 in that period of time.

Pontiac—In the death of Joseph Toynton, 57 years old, former fire and police chief, Pontiac loses one of its most widely known residents. "Joe" Toynton was a native of Pontiac and his long residence here made him acquainted with probably more persons than any other resident. For seven years he directed the police department and for several years headed the fire department. For the past ten years he has been in charge of grand stand entertainment at the state fair grounds in Detroit.

Port Huron—Electors of Port Huron will go to the polls January 15 to decide if they will grant an increase in street car fares to the City Electric railway, subsidiary of the D. U. R., from 5 to 7 cents straight fare, four tickets for a quarter and 17 for a 1. A week ago the Detroit district court ordered the traction company either to secure fares by January 15 or cease operation of streets cars. In a special commission meeting it was decided unanimously to put the proposition up to the people.

Grand Rapids—Dr. Raymond R. Roussin, 30 years old, Detroit, is defendant in five suits in circuit court for an aggregate of $65,000 damages as a result of an automobile collision in which Frank Ausbert Hess, 17 years old, son of Police Court Judge Frank A. Hess, was killed and six others were injured. Judge Hess, as administrator of his son's estate, has asked $35,000, and he, together with his wife, his brother-in-law, Edward Reisinger, ask $10,000 each. A coroner's inquest will be held January 12.

Lansing — Economic and social science gradually are becoming the big factors of future business. Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of Michigan State college, told members of the Lansing Exchange club. Extension of education beyond the limits of the school curriculum is making more and more for a definite planning of civilization through a greater application of scientific principles he said. A revolution that science has brought about in recent years has placed agriculture in the realm of business, Dr. Butterfield added.

Flint—Options have been taken by the city of Flint on 160 acres of land on the northwest side of the city and a municipal airport may be established there. Mayor Judson L. Transue laid the matter before the council and a committee of aldermen was named to investigate the plan. A landing field on the east side of the city now in use is considered inadequate. The council's action followed a recommendation by the Flint Industrial Bureau, which said that the establishment of a landing field in Flint would be an inducement to new industries.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Test Vote Indicates World Court Resolution Will Win in the Senate.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHAT was regarded as a test vote on the world court proposition was taken in the senate Wednesday and it indicated that the upper house will pass the resolution for American adherence to the tribunal. The vote was on Senator Reed's resolution calling for an investigation of the financing of the world court propaganda. The foreign relations committee reported against the Missourian's measure on the ground that the proposed inquiry "would tend to delay action on the world court proposal." Reed then presented his resolution to the senate, and made a characteristic speech accusing the international bankers, especially the house of Morgan, of putting up the money for the propaganda and attacking the settlements of foreign war debts. His resolution was defeated by a vote of 54 to 16.

The senators voting for an investigation which many of them declared they welcomed because, as they said, it would "show up the world court" were:

Opponents of American membership in the court admitted after this that the adhesion resolution probably would be carried, but they were planning to delay the final vote as long as possible, hoping to "educate the country" on what they call "the crime of the world court's Mosul decision," and other "injustices" with which they charge the court and other "menaces" which they see in it.

Senator Bruce of Maryland rather dismayed the world court advocates Tuesday by frankly declaring the resolution was a step toward American membership in the League of Nations. Said he:

"The entry of the United States into the world court would doubtless be followed eventually by its entry into the League of Nations. . . . Nothing can commit us to the full extent of our international duty except membership in the League of Nations. . . . In other words, I am for the world court with or without the League of Nations; preferably with it, but cordially even without it."

Senator Willis of Ohio, who the day before had made an eloquent speech in favor of the court, was heard to say sadly: "We can take care of our enemies, but God save us from our friends."

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE sent a special message to congress announcing the government's plans for participation in the preliminary disarmament conference called by the League of Nations and asking for an appropriation of $50,000 to defray the expenses of the American delegation. The house foreign affairs committee promptly adopted a resolution authorizing this expenditure and rejected an amendment to instruct the American delegates to present a resolution to outlaw nations that start wars of aggression.

In his message the President said:

"Participation in the work of the preparatory commission involves no commitment with respect to attendance upon any future conference or conferences on reduction and limitation of armaments; and the attitude of this government in that regard cannot be defined in advance of the calling of such meetings."

While stating that in his opinion this is neither the time nor the place to discuss the agenda of the preparatory commission or to assess the prospects of any conference which may later be convened, the President said he understood that all aspects of the question of disarmament will be thoroughly discussed before plans are completed for a later conference.

"The council of the League of Nations believes," said the President, "that the time has come for studying the practical possibilities of the reduction and limitation of armaments and expresses the hope that at this time, when all the nations of the world are convinced of a common need, it will be able to count on the co-operation of the government of the United States in a work which so closely concerns the peace of the world."

INVESTIGATION of the artificial control of the prices of rubber, coffee, Egyptian long staple cotton, camphor, iodine, nitrates, potash, mercury and sisal was begun by the house committee on interstate and foreign commerce. It is largely aimed at Great Britain's governmentally monopolized production of rubber and Brazil's control of coffee. Secretary Hoover was the first witness, and in a long and carefully prepared statement he declared the conditions under inquiry constituted "a growing menace in international commerce and relations."

What he has learned of the secrets of governments which have set out to enrich their nationals at the expense of America, Mr. Hoover deemed too sensational and inflammatory to submit to the committee in open session. He asked and was accorded an executive session in which he told the committee the inside story of these governmental manipulations and gave information on others now being contemplated. To have disclosed these matters openly, Mr. Hoover feared, would provoke international discord.

Secretary Hoover revealed, among other things, that the Coolidge administration had sought without success to induce Great Britain, Brazil, and the other nations involved to abandon manipulation of the production and price of the commodities in question. He opposed reprisals or other offensive measures.

THE house passed the first of the annual appropriation measures, that for the Post Office and Treasury departments, carrying a total of $867,600,000, including the allotments for the enforcement of prohibition. Bills were introduced in both houses to authorize appropriations of $150,000,000 for public buildings, one-third of which shall be spent in Washington.

REPRESENTATIVE KING and Senator McKinley, both of Illinois, have introduced their measures designed to relieve the farmer. The King bill would create a government corporation with a capital of $200,000,000 to take loans for agricultural purposes. McKinley's bill seeks to place farm commodities on a tariff equality with other commodities and provides for the issuance of export equalization debentures to stimulate exportation of farm products. The debentures would be negotiable and would be received by the treasury at par in payment of import duties.

NEARLY all the house amendments to administrative provisions of the new revenue bill were approved by the senate finance committee, which then recessed to permit the Democrats to prepare their tax program. This program will provide for a total tax reduction of $400,000,000 instead of the $325,000,000 provided for in the house bill. Secretary Mellon says the latter amount should not be exceeded.

WAR debt settlements made with Italy, Rumania, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Latvia and Esthonia were approved by the house ways and means committee, but that with Italy will be opposed on the floor of the house by a considerable number of representatives, led by Rainey of Illinois and Hull of Tennessee. They intend to tell congress what they think of the Mussolini dictatorship. The Rumanian settlement has resulted in the recall of Prince Bibesco, minister to Washington, who will be given another post.

GEN. T. H. PANGALOS, premier of Greece, set up a dictatorship for that country with himself at its head and postponed indefinitely the senatorial elections which had been the cause of political trouble. Next day he formally declared the Greek republican constitution null and void and explained that his action was made necessary by the quarrels of parliamentary politicians. He was supported by the army, but the navy was holding off. Later Pangalos said he had discovered a plot for the return of King George to the throne. His first repressive measure was directed against the monasteries.

HUNGARY is "enjoying" one of the greatest sensations of recent years. A conspiracy to forge thirty billions of French francs was uncovered and one of the first men arrested was Prince Ludwig Windischgraetz, head of one of the oldest and most illustrious families in the country. He confessed and other prominent men were taken into custody, including noblemen and army officers and the chief of the state police. Apparently the state printing machinery was used by the forgers. The Social Democrats assert the fascisti of Hungary engineered the plot to get funds for a movement to place Archduke Albrecht on the throne. He has been seeking that honor but the legitimists, headed by Premier Count Bethlen, have insisted that the crown should go to Prince Otto, the little son of the late Emperor Charles.

PRINCE CAROL of Rumania, having renounced his right to succeed to the throne and his membership in the royal family, retired to Milan, Italy, where it was reported he was paying devoted attentions to Mme. Magda Lupescu, the beautiful wife of a Rumanian major. To interviewers he said his action was taken "for the good of the soul," was purely personal, and that the stories to the effect that he was plotting against the Rumanian monarchy were unfounded. Among the many rumors were stories that Carol quit because his mother, Queen Marie, insisted on supporting Premier Bratiano; and that the queen had forced Carol to the act of renunciation. It was reported, however, that both Queen Marie and Princess Helene, Carol's wife, were going to Milan to try to induce him to rescind his action. Meantime the king had accepted the renunciation and Prince Michael, little son of Carol, had been proclaimed heir apparent.

QUEEN MOTHER MARGHERITA of Italy, widow of the assassinated King Humbert, died Monday at Bordighera at the age of seventy-four years. All her later years had been spent in charitable activities and she was greatly loved by the people. After an elaborate funeral in Rome her body was laid in the Pantheon beside that of her husband.

IF THE two chief warriors of China keep their words, that distracted country may have a period of peace. Marshal Chang of Manchuria, after winning a great victory over the part of his army that revolted, and gaining possession of Mukden, declared he was about to retire permanently from public life. About the same time General Feng, who had occupied Tientsin and Peking, announced his immediate retirement. Next came the official announcement that Tuan Chi-jui had prepared a mandate for his own resignation as president.

AMERICANS were considerably interested in the sudden marriage of Ellin Mackay, daughter of Clarence Mackay, the multimillionaire president of the Postal Telegraph company, and Irving Berlin, once a Bowery waiter and now called the "song king." The young couple sought Mr. Mackay's approval of the marriage, but up to the time of writing he has withheld it. Indeed, it is reported in New York that he has made a new will which cuts the bride off from any share in his millions. Mr. Berlin is a Jew and Mrs. Berlin a Catholic. She is highly educated, widely traveled and has been prominent in society.

Wales to Pay Visit to Canadian Ranch?

London.—The prince of Wales will visit his ranch in Canada during the present year, according to reports current in court circles.

The report has set tongues wagging, and there is much conjecture as to whether or not the trip will be a honeymoon trip.

Rumor still persists that the prince will marry during the coming year, and Princess Astrid of Sweden is still picked as the likeliest bride, despite denials which have been freely made by both the British and Swedish courts.

Nearly every one in London claims to know all about the prince's plans for matrimony, but those few persons who are really close to the prince of Wales are frank to admit that they do not know just what plans he has made.

In the best informed court circles it is believed that possibly the prince may be given an opportunity to meet Princess Astrid, but there is doubt whether anything has been settled as yet.

No definite date has been set for the prince's proposed Canadian trip and it is not known whether the prince intends to visit the United States. If the prince heeds paternal advice he will probably not visit the United States, for it is whispered that neither the king nor the queen was greatly pleased with the results of the last visit which the prince made to New York city.

Nelson and Wilson were discussing relatives in general and having exhausted the anvil pounding of the close relations started to hammer merrily at the more distant family connections.

"Have you any distant relatives?" Nelson was asked.

"Yes, I have two brothers."

"What! Do you call brothers distant relatives?"

"These brothers are rich, you know," sadly explained Nelson.

Emergency Pantry Meets Home Need

By META H. GIVEN
(Home Economist.)

Meta H. Given.

Efficiency and economy go hand and hand, in the home as well as in the business world. The emergency pantry, latest innovation in the cuisine of the modern housewife is particularly indicative of the truth of this statement.

This new sort of pantry—it may just be a shelf in the regular larder—does away with that bugaboo of the home maker, the surprise guest. Every woman has had the experience of welcoming an unexpected visitor when supplies were at low ebb and has searched high and low to find something presentable to put on the table. The emergency shelf in the pantry does away with such worries in short order.

A can opener and—presto—a veritable banquet can be prepared in a few minutes. The housewife may have her choice of many excellent meats, corn, tomatoes, mushrooms. If she is short of milk or cream, a can of evaporated milk, which is simply fresh cow's milk sterilized in the can and with sixty per cent of the water removed will do the trick. In fact she may have two hundred or more savory dishes ready to her hand.

When the surprise guest does arrive the hostess naturally wishes to be hospitable. She doesn't want to be tied to the kitchen range half the afternoon. She wants to entertain as she has been entertained.

It isn't possible if she has to phone frantically for the butcher, the grocer and the baker.

But that's only one of the places where the emergency pantry comes in. Backed by a well-stocked emergency shelf, the wife can get together a splendid luncheon or dinner in a jiffy. The spontaneous wish that comes at the last moment to informally invite a few friends for lunch can be gratified at once with the aid of the new pantry.

Afternoon tea for the bridge club is an equally easy matter. A glass of preserves or jelly, a platter of bread and butter, tea, and a dish of cookies will meet the ordinary demands of the casual caller and a can of evaporated milk will answer the milk or cream need.

The schools must teach our young people so to manage their own personal affairs as to insure that they will lead lives that have an economic worth to society and to themselves. Business must provide plans for its workers to enable them not only to [illegible]n but also to save so that the teaching of the schools will not prove an illusion in practice. Do these things and we will have no pauperism in America. Neglect to do them and we will ultimately develop pauperism,—a nation's worst social crime.

Mrs. Wilson will conduct the campaign, which will be called a "Victory Vote Drive," through the 2,000 or more Democratic Women's Clubs which had been organized prior to the campaign.

The Clubs will in no way compete for the vote with the regular Democratic organization, but will stand ready to supplement the organization's work by seeking to interest the stay-at-home and independent woman vote, Mrs. Wilson pointed out.

Caloric Requirements of the Child

DIETITIANS declare that the average boy or girl of four years should receive about forty calories a pound of body weight per day. The average weight of a child of four years is forty pounds. Therefore the total caloric requirement would be approximately 1,600 calories. Calory is merely the name for a certain measure of heat derived from the burning of food.

Necessarily, the caloric requirement of the child is dependent on his temperament; since a child who plays hard and long requires more nourishment than one who leads a quieter life. Rate of growth also has a bearing on caloric requirements. The child who is growing rapidly should be given more food to meet his caloric needs than the boy or girl whose growth is normal.

Mothers know the daily diet should consist of the essential foodstuffs, protein, carbohyrates, fats, minerals and water. The important thing for her is to learn the foods that contain these essentials in a balanced diet. Below is a well-balanced menu for any child six years old compiled by an authority on home economics.

ONE DAY'S MENU FOR SIX-YEAR-OLD CHILD.

Breakfast.
6 stewed prunes	120 calories
½ cupful cream of wheat	85 calories
Served with half cream (6 tbsp.) and half evaporated milk	140 calories
1 slice buttered toast	150 calories
1 cup cocoa made with evaporated milk	150 calories
	645 calories
Luncheon at School.
Baked potato and butter	200 calories
½ cupful spinach	25 calories
1 baked apple (1 tbsp. sugar, ½ tbsp. butter)	200 calories
1 glass milk	160 calories
1 slice bread buttered with ½ tbsp. butter	100 calories
	685 calories
Afternoon Luncheon at School.
1 orange	100 calories
Dinner.
1 small piece broiled steak (2¼ x 2½ x ½)	75 calories
½ cupful mashed potato	100 calories
2-3 cupful lima bean soup made with evaporated milk	75 calories
1 glass milk, orange drink	160 calories
Total	1,840 calories

Children often become wearied of drinking plain milk. Mixing their milk with fruit juices is a welcome change. Following is the recipe for a refreshing milk drink: Mix ⅞ cupful orange juice, ¼ cupful evaporated milk, three teaspoonfuls of sugar, ½ teaspoonful of lemon juice and a few grains of salt. Shake well in a fruit jar before serving.

International Harvester Company Will Trade

One of the most amusing propositions that has come to our desk in a fortnight is a circular letter from Alexander Legge, president of the great International Harvester Company of America in which he offers to take the farmers corn in trade for farming implements of the International manufacture. He goes on to say this must be good No. 2 corn delivered at the dealers' station on car or at local elevator f. o. b. Delivery must be made in May, June or July, 1926, and the company to give the farmer 30 days notice before the delivery of his corn so as not to interfere with other work.

This offer is open to those who buy their farm machinery from now on until further notice, but is not open to speculators or those who would buy to sell to others. The farmer will be allowed $1.00 per bushel for his corn although such corn is not worth this figure at present writing. Should the corn be higher in price the farmer will be released from the agreement to sell his corn elsewhere and pay for his purchases in cash. The International company is making this offer in faith believing that corn will or ought at least to raise to the dollar price and of course if it does not the company will take the loss. As a matter of fact the farmer is buying the same high grade quality of tools from the International as he did in war times for considerable less money and more implements than he could buy for the same amount of corn for five years preceding the war.

Mr. Legge also warns the farmer to look out for his seed corn this season as the indications are very strong for poor quality in all quarters and the farmer who did not take special care in picking his seed ears will probably be more or less troubled with non-germination as great areas of corn fields did not ripen properly on account of the wet fall.

We do not know as Mr. Legge is a member of the stock exchange but the chances are he has received some sort of tip the price has just got to climb. We hardly believe that the sporting instincts of Mr. Legge would allow him to encroach upon the International Harvester Company's chances for a thrifty trade, neither do we believe he is gambling with fate. So the farmer can take it or leave it, but we are positive the I. H. C. agents will reap a large crop of sales on this proposition, although it is hard to see where the advantage lies for the farmer. As a matter of fact his crops mean money to him and we can't remember the time when there was not a ready market for good matured corn. If Brother Legge should make such a proposition as this on potatoes, beans or something which always remains shaky in times of over production, then his first name would be Samaritan. He however is not bidding up very high on these crops.

How do these boys look to you? Well probably they look about the same as they did when they were elected except that a few months af wrestling with problems of state may have cut wrinkles in what was once a smooth expanse. That motto of "Prosperity" has a tendency to put hope, optimism and satisfaction where nothing was.

Founder's Week At The Moody Bible Institute

The Founder's Week Conference at the Moody Bible Institute, February 1 to 5, commemorates the life of D. L. Moody and covers his birthday, February 5. The conference is an annual event to which the good and great of many lands look forward.

This year it will be opened on Monday evening with an inspirational address by Rev. Maitland Alexander, D. D., since 1899 pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Pittsburg, Pa. Dr. Alexander was formerly Moderator of the Presbyterian Assembly. The program will include such speakers as Bishop Frederick D. Leete, D. D., of Indianapolis, Ind., Rev. John Timothy Stone, D. D. of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Chicago, Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Ph. D. D. D., for twenty years pastor of the historic Park Street Church, Boston, Rev. John Alfred Faulkner, D. D., L L. D., Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J. and Rev. Oswald T. Allis, Ph. D., professor of Semitic Philology in Princeton Theological Seminary, Rev. Harry L. Strachan, of the Latin America Evangelization Campaign, Dr. Robert P. Wilder, founder of the Student Volunteer movement for foreign missions, and William Phillips Hall of New York City, for more than twenty years president of the American Tract Society and a warm personal friend of Mr. Moody. Sidney T. Smith of Winnipeg, Manitoba, president of the Manitoba and Saskatchewan Bible Society and former president of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, will be present with Henry S. Dulaney, president of the Resinal Chemical Company Baltimore, Md. These gentlemen are both trustees of the Institute. Thomas E. Stephens, of the Great Commission Prayer League, will conduct a daily prayer hour.

Jay North who has been in the dairy business here for several years, is now well up on the list as a high test butter fat producer from his thorough bred Jersey cows According to the report of Oscar Dowd tester for this county, out of 352 cows in 27 herds tested in this district Duncan Randall's herd with a record of 44.93 pounds of butterfat leads the procession for the month. L. Stevens herd stands next with 43.28 pounds and Jay North third with 37.54 pounds of butterfat for the month. We used to suppose the dairying business in this township was a dead letter until recent years have rejuvenated it. While Hillsdale county has always been a high grade pasture county yet the business of dairying has not been considered important until within the past ten years. A few of the most adventurous souls including Mr. North, Adams Brothers of Litchfield, H. G. Wells and one or two others have instigated a thoroughbred stock program which if followed out will eventually land this county on top of the list.

The second benefit is the aid which the tester gives in working out a balanced ration and the amount of grain to feed each cow based on her production requirement. The importance of feeding a balanced ration is too often underestimated.

Another feature of C. T. A. is the publicity given the herd both in local papers and in the Cow Testing Bulletin issued by the Dairy Ext. Dept. of M. S. C.

The Masons are quite some up-to date business men! The other day a Masonic Lodge in Ohio placed a sum of five thousand dollars in the local bank with specification it should not be withdrawn until the expiration of one hundred years and at that time the proceeds were to be used for building a new Masonic Temple. This bank pays six percent and the sum compounded would amount to right around a cool million in a century. This an eye opener for young daddies in this country. Boys if you have a recently born child place one hundred dollars in the bank and you will have the kid well started on a competence when he becomes of age. May the fates bless the man who first originated compound interest!

Dairy Cow Efficient Food Producer

Properly built stalls cut down work and bacteria.

Keep the utensils clean.

With increasing rentals and values of farm lands, dairy farming is rapidly replacing other types of live stock farming. A dairy cow producing 8,000 pounds of milk a year furnishes 1,000 pounds of dry matter, all of which is edible and digestible. A two year old steer weighing between 1,200 and 1,300 pounds furnishes about 550 pounds of dry matter, not all of which can be used for food. In other words a fairly good producing dairy cow furnishes twice as much edible dry matter in one year as a good two year old steer when he is killed for meat. A cow can be kept for additional years of service, while to replace the steer, another animal must be fed for a period of two years.

The United States consumption of milk per capita has increased from 42 gallons of whole milk in 1918 to more than 54 gallons in 1925.

With growing acceptance of milk as a food has come an increasing knowledge of the proper care of milk on the farm. Because odors from foods and animals in the cow stable are easily taken up by milk, injuring its flavor, they must not come in contact with the milk. Removal of the milk from the stable as soon as possible reduces the amount of dust and dirt entering it and keeps down the bacterial growth in the milk.

Bacteria increase rapidly in warm milk causing it to sour quickly. Removal of the animal heat from freshly drawn milk by lowering the temperature to that of cold well water (approximately 60° F.), greatly aids in preventing bacterial growth. A well lighted, well ventilated milk house, not too close to the stable, is also very helpful.

Cleanliness in the stable is vitally necessary. The stall platform should be just long enough for the cow to stand comfortably without room to spare; otherwise, the cow will become dirty from droppings when she lies down. The gutter should be wide and deep. A good gutter is 16 inches to 18 inches in width and 9 or 10 inches below the platform. Bedding should be clean and plenteous.

Long hair on the flanks, udders and tail above the switch of the dairy cow should be removed at regular intervals. Removing this long hair removes the clinging places of dirt which otherwise will fall into the milk pail in quantities. Keeping the hair short on these parts of the cow permits cleaning in much less time and more thoroughly. Brushing should never be neglected. It removes loose particles sticking to the body. When the hair is short, wiping the udders with a damp cloth just before milking, is an easy and important aid in securing clean milk.

It is generally recognized that most of the bacteria found in milk finds its source in dirt clinging to the cow and dropping into the pail during milking time. Simple precautions will practically eliminate this source of bacterial growth and dairymen find themselves well repaid for the little time necessary in taking such precautions.

The GOLDEN RULE in PRACTICE

A series of articles by prominent leaders on the Golden Rule as a guide in International Relations.

AMERICA WRITES WORLD HISTORY

By SAMUEL McCREA CAVERT
Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches

Some future historian, writing the records of Europe and the Near East in these days when armies fought and won and lost, in this age when governments rose and fell, in this time when nations struggled madly with each other for economic mastery, will set down that the greatest influence of all in the final development of the problem, was the quiet work of the American relief organizations.

It is America which has introduced a new motive into international politics, the new-old motive of the Golden Rule. After nineteen centuries, there has come out of the West, from the youngest of the nations, a voice that speaks and a force that acts, from other motives than pure political selfishness.

The humanitarian and educational work of America in the Near East is more than just an emergency organization for saving human life.

It may become the great educational organization which more than any other force now existing will prove the turning point for building a new international solidarity based on good will and mutual understanding.

On Golden Rule Sunday, December 6th, our thoughts will be directed to these problems. It will be a day for meditation and thought on world affairs, not merely for compassion and pity, but with a motive of desire to rebuild a tottering world. Our foreign relief organizations are great agencies of international good will, interpreting to the world the better side of America.

In a day when so many of our people have provincial attitudes, so provincial that many of them can glory in the slogan "America First" in its narrowest sense, we need this day to enlarge our vision and make us think of all nations and all men as members of one common family.

At any moment we may be called upon to help in directing America's course in world affairs. Unless I am mistaken, they will gravitate as they have so often done, toward Constantinople. There, Bolshevist Russia, Moslem Turkey, African and Asiatic tribes, and the white man are likely to assemble for momentous ends.

Golden Rule Sunday will be observed throughout the United States in December, on behalf of the Near East Relief. This series of articles, by prominent public men who are supporters and spokesmen for this great philanthropy, is designed to call public attention to the background and purpose of the work and its need for general support.

Russia Still Unsettled

The rural magazine "Successful Farming" makes a few timely remarks on social conditions in Russia. Among other things it says the Reds of Russia have succeeded so thoroughly in brutalizing and demolishing the homeland, that they are now trying to pass the joke on to America. It is claimed there are thousands of Soviets in this country taking their orders and their pay from Moscow, who want to bring about a social crisis here.

Every last one of these Nihilists should be seized and incarcerated until he can be shipped back home and should he ever return, he mer its hanging forthwith, Scarcely a half dozen of the Reds in Russia are intelligent enough to explain why they are fighting, while the rest of them are bloody vultures seeking to turn the country into a pandemonium of Hell. A movement originally inaugurated to expel the over-bearing and corrupt aristocracy, the revolution has swept away almost every trace of sanity. While the Earls, Dukes and Priests had no doubt become so vile as to deserve annihilation, yet such a method is neither wise or decent.

From the aristocracy the Red army turned to churches and everything religious,, demolishing places of worship and generally conducting itself like a demon. The result has been unleashed debauchery, rapine and arson, out of which nothing has come. Only a short time ago American travelers returning from Russia told of misery, starvation and all kinds of lewdness. They said in country districts the dead were carried to the cemetaries and left in piles until the ground was sufficiently thawed to allow interment, In one instance the travelers in crossing a viaduct in the city, saw the nude body of a dead woman half buried in the mud beneath, and none of the passers-by took the least notice. On every hand there is a lack of order, decency and justice.

If there is a people on this globe who can exist and prosper without the church, we have never yet learned of them. The Russian general public has been flim-flammed into the belief that the aristocrats and ruling class were responsible for the poverty and ill-luck of the masses, when the real cause is probably ignorance, superstition, and mismanagement. It is true both church and state have connived to keep the peasantry in ignorance; they have upheld graft and corruption; they have kept the Siberian nightmare operative, but after all they furnished the brain to superintend the great shaggy nation, and it is more than probable that the ragmuffin Red Brigade will have to recall the few left alive, if debilitated Russia is to recover her standing and moral equilibrium.

Should America ever become so unwise as to recognize the Bolshevic government under its Nihilistic management we should be classed as Barbarians and mercilessly skinned by the critics.

We want none of this rotten socialistic doctrine in America. We are too merciful to administer the much deserved death penalty, We should visit a severe punishment upon this vermin. We have a system of protecting and propagating the home; we protect our sons and daughters from drunkenness but Sovietism does neither.

The only remedy is to let the grisly bloody mass in Russia fight it out, as we have nothing in common with them. If the crisis should come, we could do without their trade, Russia holds no place in the court of civilized nations and after due consideration she will receive a through ticket for Hades!

There is a man in New York City who is known as the human ostrich, who has such control of his stomach and interior works that he can drink a pint of kerosene oil and a gallon of water. He can spray the kerosene oil out of his mouth and set it afire then emit water and quench the flames. He is not a magician or a fakir but allows his insides to be photographed by X-rays and is somewhat differently built than most of us. The editor of the "Science and Invention" magazine has personally seen this trick done and he says it is genuine and no fake.

The Rising Tide of Vulgarity

The big article this week is "The Rising Tide of Vulgarity." The writer is Channing Pollock, author of the drama, "The Fool," that has preached its way across America, and maker of "The Enemy," now the talk of New York. It is a voice from the theater about the theater. You may disagree with it, but do not miss it.

Whether it is due to the justly celebrated aftermath of the war, which certainly rewarded everything base and penalized everything noble; or to the motion picture of to progressive materialism or what not, there is no denying the rising tide of vulgarity.

It has been observed and the alarm sounded by leaders of the thinking class in America. Those who follow have only to read as they run, or to look, for that tide has engulfed everything. The evidence lies in our newspapers, our amusements, our language, our dress, and our attitude toward life.

Indifference to learning, to high standards of thought and conduct, has become contempt. With an ever increasing multitude craving for thrill and excitement, and "the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind." has supplanted interest in everything spiritual, intellectual and uplifting. Mentally, we follow the line of least resistance. "Sensational" reading in the newspapers enjoyed an enormous vogue, until some enterprising publisher discovered a way of purveying sensation without giving anyone the trouble to read; that is, through the pictorial press. Cheap spoken melodrama held its public until the motion picture enabled people to enjoy cheaper melodrama without listening to spoken lines.

OUR NATIONAL MODEL—THE GRINNING CHESHIRE CAT

I say these things with full knowledge of the fact that nothing is more unpopular than pessimism. Just or not, that fact itself is symptomatic. Our national model at present is the Cheshire Cat. We must go through life grinning. "Pack up your troubles"—and your brains—"in your old kit bag, and smile, smile, smile!" Don't bother about anything serious. Ignore everything unpleasant. Recently we indulged in a war that cost ten million lives and bankrupted most of the world, morally and materially, but the less said about that now the better. In spite of the fact that, as Colonel House remarked to me the other day, "The sooner we forget this war the sooner we are likely to have another."

The theater, which is the greatest force in moulding public opinion, also is the pulse and temperature of that opinion; and, if you doubt the indications of that pulse and temperature, I recommend three tests: Scrutinize the crowds that emerge from our playhouses any sunny afternoon. Read the amusement advertisements. Walk a block or two in any direction from Times Square, and look at the pictures. Sixty-five producing theaters in New York, and not many of them devoted to anything serious, except sex and sin. Nudity frivolity, cheap pandering to the lowest instincts of human kind.

"We give the public what it wants!" say the managers. In a sense, they are not blamed, for theatrical production is expensive, and giving the public what it doesn't want is the shortest cut to bankruptcy. At the same time "We give the public what it wants" is or should be, the excuse of the dive keeper, rather than of the controlling power in a great art institution; and that slogan justifies the sale of drugs and women as completely as it justifies the exploitation of the type of drama for which popularity is won by advertising, "The play that was suppressed by the district attorney." When we find the impresario who has been longest regarded as an artist producing "The Harem" and "Ladies of the Evening" and that organization that was to rescue the theater presenting "The Glass Slipper," surely our drama has touched bottom.

The great question, and the one that offers most hope, is whether this sort of thing really is "what the public wants," or whether it is only what a certain type of salesman thinks the public wants. Whether the practical exclusion of everything else from the stage hasn't resulted in the exclusion of every other part of the public from the auditorium. It certainly is significant that the five years in which the playhouse has reached the lowest level, morally and intellectually is the same five years in which there has been the greatest sale for history and biography, and the greatest attendance at grand opera concerts, lectures, and recitals. The public that really cares for fine things and decent things may be larger than anyone suspects and it may be that this rising tide of vulgarity—in the theater, at least—is to be stemmed by enlisting that crowd, and making it come out to vote. If this is true, the case calls, not for pessimism, but for action, for concerted action on the part of all the forces for good in our country; and, in that event, I am justified in having written my hand off in the cause, in having made more than 2,000 speeches on the subject, in having sounded the clarion to the extent of my breath in schools and churches throughout the length and breadth of America.

Home Town Editors To Hold State Meet

Editors of the state's "home town" papers will gather at East Lansing on February 4, 5, and 6 for the annual meeting of the Michigan Press Association, half century old organization of the men who publish the weekly newspapers of Michigan.

The editors gathering, following the custom of recent years, will be held during the last days of the annual Farmers Week at the M. S. C., which is scheduled for February 1 to 5 this year.

Ways and means of developing a paper which will be increasingly efficient in serving the needs of the "home town" where it is published will form the backbone of the program for the conference. In addition to an interesting list of speakers from the ranks of the Press Association itself, a half dozen men with national reputations in the weekly newspaper field have been secured as "lead" speakers of the various programs.

Outstanding among the social features of the meetings will be a big banquet on Friday evening, Feb. 5, to be held in the new Union Memorial Building at M. S. C. The banquet will be followed by a special theater party for members of the Association.

David Hubbell, editor of the Crosswell Jeffersonian, president of the Michigan Press Association and Len W. Feighner, editor of the Nashville News, and executive secretary of the Association, are planning the details of the conference. An attendance of between 175 and 200 is expected.

Announce Speakers For Farmers Week

With leaders in agriculture from all parts of the United States included, and with a Michigan delegation of speakers headed by Governor Alex Groesbeck and other state officials, is the program for Farmers Week at M. S. C. this year.

A special "agricultural fair program" is scheduled for Wednesday afternoon, Feb. 3, and at this time Governor Groesbeck, L. Whitney Watkins, state commissioner of agriculture and chairman of the Michigan State Fair Board, and President K. L. Butterfield and Dean R. S. Shaw., will lead discussion. Both state and county fairs will come in for consideration

On Wednesday evening, James Schermerhorn, former editor of the Detroit Times, and J. D. Willard, director of extension work at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, will head the program.

Among the prominent men from outside the state who are listed for addresses on other of the general programs of the week are: Dr. Liberty Hyde Bailey, former dean of agriculture at Cornell University; W. C. Coffey, dean of agriculture at Minnesota University; L. H. Worthley, U. S. Department of Agriculture (who will discuss the European Corn Borer); Dean F. B. Mumford, of Missouri University; and Miss Grace Frysinger, U. S. Department of Agriculture.

A livestock program is listed for Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 2, with an athletic program that evening. Thursday is Horticulture Day, in honor of the opening of the new horticultural building at M. S. C.

The mornings of the week will be given over to meetings of more than 30 agricultural associations and groups, with the general programs booked for the afternoons and evenings.

National Radio Fading Tests Start Feb. 9.

Dates for the National tests of radio reception to determine the causes of static and fading were announced today after 4,000 of the 4,500 designated observation stations had expressed a willingness to take part in the survey, which is being conducted by the Stewart Warner Speedometer Corporation in cooperation with the Northwestern University. The first test will be held on the night of February 9th, from 8 to 11 o'clock central standard time. The second and third will be on the two succeeding nights at the same hours. Subsequent trials will be held throughout the winter, should the data obtained indicate that real progress in a search for the causes of these two major radio annoyances is possible.

It was originally planned to hold these tests in January, but owing to the international tests scheduled for that month it was decided to hold the fading and static tests at a later date.

Most of the observations will be made by broadcast listeners using standard receiving sets and depending for the accuracy of their reports upon their own ears. However, to insure the scientific accuracy of the result, twenty control stations equipped with electrical measuring devices and automatic recorders will be placed in the principal broadcasting centers of the country.

A recently equipped expedition into the Mongol regions of northern China has discovered a wonderful collection of petrified eggs of animals that roamed the region millions of years ago. Eggs of the Great Dinosaur have been found in sandstone ledges in the mountains, and the man in charge of this expedition claims the they are in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 years of age—pretty ripe we should say for an omelet. This company of learned men were sent out by American Scientific Societies and instead of using the usual method of transportation they traveled by motor and took along a couple of two ton motor trucks to carry the curios and baggage. The only problem which presented itself was fuel and it was solved by sending a big caravan of camels all loaded with gasoline into the desert and meeting them at different points. 3,000 gallons were carried in this way.

THE TRACKS

SYNOPSIS.—With David, half-breed guide, Brent Steele, of the American Museum of Natural History, is traveling in northern Canada. By a stream he hears Denise, daughter of Col. Hilaire St. Onge, factor at Walling River, play the violin superbly. He introduces himself and accepts an invitation to make the post his home during his stay. He finds the factor worried and mystified. The "log chateau" is a real home. From St. Onge he learns of the mysterious creature of evil, the Windigo, and the disappearance of a canoe and its crew, with the season's take of furs. Then at night the Windigo gives a weird performance. Even Steele is mystified. David, Steele's Indian, and Michel, St. Onge's head-man, leave for the scene of the canoe's disappearance in an attempt to solve the mystery. St. Onge tells Steele that Lascelles, the company's manager at Fort Albany, seeks his ruin in order to compel Denise to marry him to save her father. Steele and Denise fall in love.

"Like the white roads of your Touraine?" he replied. "I think I prefer the northern winter to the summer, but, of course, it is often grim and lean for the families of the hunters—for the women and children."

Her eyes clouded. "It is always so, for the women and children—they find life hard—here—in the north." For a long interval she was silent and he knew that her personal problem again haunted her thoughts.

Then the music-hungry Steele handed the bag containing the violin to its owner, with: "Please, anything you care to play that is not sad. Today, you know, you were to forget," and he smiled significantly.

Stretched at length, with hands behind head and closed eyes, Steele listened as the violin of the girl ran the gamut of the composers. Rhapsodies, love songs of many peoples, fragments of melodies he had never heard, mad dances of the Slavs, of the plains of Hungary, serenades of Spain and Italy, a riot of love and joy, redolent of moonlight and fragrant gardens, of ivied towers and old romance, she conjured for the enchanted ears of the man lying on a Canadian hilltop. For two hours the violin sang on the height above the forest.

And as he watched and listened, Steele often compared this girl he had known but days, to other women, who in the past had caught his fancy; and to his surprise, as he conjured them up, and contrasted them with the vivid personality of Denise St. Onge, the memories of the former blurred to insignificance. Slight as was his knowledge of her, the quality which was so patently a part of her—the mystery of personality; had wrought its spell.

At length she ceased playing, and asked:

"Now would you like to hear something of my own?

"It would be delightful!"

"I call this, 'When Spring Comes North.'" And she broke into a gay melody filled with the rush of the brooks, the soft wind in the young birch leaves, the love songs of the returning birds.

"You have caught it all—the spring!" he applauded. "Please play it again!" But she shook her head.

"Now I am to break my promise by playing 'Farewell.' We were to be gay today; if you do not care to hear it—?"

"Please play it! You mean farewell to summer?"

Her face darkened as she replied with a characteristic shrug:

"Farewell to summer—to everything!"

"Oh, you cannot mean that!"

Without replying she drew her bow across the strings in a low minor and swiftly lost herself in a stark revelation of grief and despair.

As he listened he heard again the moaning of a heart without hope, the anguish of a tortured soul, which had first met his ears at the rapids. Seemingly she was voicing through her violin what she could not express in words, and the sympathy of his quick understanding went out to the lonely girl with her unknown burden.

She ceased as swiftly as she had begun, and stood gazing out on the tranquil valley. He respected her mood by his silence, his brain active with conjecture, his emotions dangerously out of hand. Then the warning of the low sun called the girl from her brooding. She turned a wistful face as she said:

"I have broken my promise and have been very sad, monsieur."

"You have been telling me much, in your 'Farewell,' mademoiselle. I only wish you could trust me—that I could help you." There was momentarily in her eyes that which whipped the blood to his face as she said: "It was because you have the heart of a poet that I played my 'Farewell.' And I do trust you, Monsieur Steele, some time you may know—"

"Why some time, why not now, if I am to aid you?" he demanded impulsively.

But she only shook her head.

Carrying the violin and rifle, Steele led the way down the trail to the post. They had reached a hollow at the foot of the ridge where the soil was spongy and moist, even in September, because of the springs beneath. Here and there in the forest mold, flowers vividly blue and fringed, bloomed on graceful stems beside the trail.

"Here are my gentians, monsieur!" cried Denise. "Are they not beautiful? I cannot make them grow so lovely at home, it is not damp enough."

She bent and touched the petals of a flower, and looking up said: "I think I love them more than the other autumn—" she suddenly checked herself, her eyes widening. The man was staring at the trail beyond them.

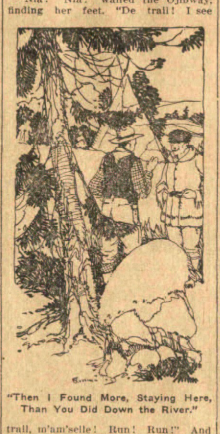
"Monsieur!"

He turned to her, his puzzled look shifting to a smile. "Pardon me, your gentians are beautiful—but we should hurry or we shall be late at the post, and your father will wonder," he said, and started briskly up the trail, followed by the bewildered girl. He had walked but a few yards when a scream stopped him. With the lunch basket at her feet, fallen from shaking hands, Charlotte swayed in the path behind them, her face gray with terror.

"Oh, what is it, Charlotte?" cried Denise St. Onge, as Steele strode past her, and seizing the palsied Ojibway by the arm, half carried her forward to her mistress.

"Please, mademoiselle," he insisted, "hurry along! I'll take care of Charlotte. It's nothing. She thinks she sees something, but it's only imagination." And he started with the moaning Indian, numb with fright.

"Nia! Nia!" wailed the Ojibway, finding her feet. "De trail! I see trail, m'am'selle! Run! Run!" And with feet spurred by fear, Charlotte led the way back to the post.



"Then I Found More, Staying Here, Than You Did Down the River."

"What was it that you tried to hide from me?" demanded Denise, as she walked rapidly at his side. "I saw your face. There was something."

"It was nothing. It looked like a bear trail, only a bear trail. Charlotte is full of Tete-Boule's myths and was stampeded. She's been uneasy all day."

The doubting eyes of the girl searched his as they walked.

"It is kind of you, monsieur," she said, "but you must not deceive me, I have to face this thing."

"You are not afraid—you do not believe in—"

"Afraid?" she cried passionately, "yes, I am afraid, of, oh, so many things. You do not realize—it is so hopeless!"

He was walking close to her, overconscious of her nearness. Her shoulder touched his, and his pulse leaped at the contact. A loose strand of her hair brushed his cheek, and he felt the blood in his face. He was perilously near rash action, but he coveted her good will—and he feared the mystery in her—and the dignity.

"But is there no way out?" he managed to say, fighting for mastery of himself.

"Way out?" she repeated in a strained voice. "There is no way out—for the lost," and as she quickened her pace, the heightened color of her face betrayed her. Like the strings of her violin she had vibrated to his emotion. Beyond the mystery and the despair, there was the woman, and he followed her swift feet over the trail with an elation he had never before known; with the resolve to fight through to the root of this mystery if it meant a winter on the snow.

"No way out for the lost," she had said, and he smiled as he repeated to himself. "But the lost has been found; the lost has been found." Mystery, Windigo, intrigue at Albany, were as nothing now that he had seen the blood leap to her face at his touch.

He did not follow up her strange words. It would have profited little and his mind was full of what he had seen beside the trail—unmistakable tracks in the mud, mammoth and strange, beyond his experience.

Shaped they were, somewhat resembling bear tracks, with deep indentations of claws, but the weight was not distributed as in the track of a bear, and there were separated pad marks, like the track of felines. Yet no lynx or cougar ever owned feet so misshapen and huge. He would return at daylight and follow them up. Here at last was something tangible to work on. In the meantime, Charlotte would have the post people maudlin with fear. It would be a bad night for Walling River.

As they entered the clearing, Steele saw a knot of men gathered before the trade-house. With a swift good-bye, Denise hurried to her kitchen while Steele joined the factor, who announced:

"Good evening, monsieur, it seems our friends have returned." From the head of the portage moved a canoe, above the familiar legs of David. Following him came Michel, doubled under a heavy load slung from his tump-line.

"What have they got?" queried St. Onge.

"Give it up; maybe some of the fur!" hazarded Steele.

"We shall never see that again," muttered the factor.

Near them the post people discussed the safe return of the search party in awed whispers. Then, as Michel approached, Steele grinned. "Meat!" he announced drily.

"Good, we need it!" added St. Onge with a sigh of relief.

Swinging the canoe from his shoulders, David wiped his brow with his sleeve and grinned into Steele's questioning face as the latter gripped his hand.

"Back safe and sound, David?" Steele looked hard into the snapping eyes of his friend.

"Ah-hah! Safe an' soun'! Bo'-jo' Meester St. Onge!" and the Ojibway took the proffered hand of St. Onge.

"Well, Michel, you found moose, if you didn't strike anything else," Steele said to the inscrutable Iroquois. "Don't see any signs of teeth on you; you must have run too fast for the Windigo," he suggested, but the head man glanced significantly at the post Indians and made no reply.

Steele drew David from the group, congratulating Michel on his escape from a hideous death down river and asked: "Any luck, David?"

"We fin' noding of canoe, but we see some sign. Ver' strange sign, boss."

"What was it?"

"Wal, we fin' de las' camp of fur cano', but no sign of cano' or men. Den we follow river shore an' noding there. Den we circle back from de camp an' two smokes into de muskeg we fin'—" David stopped short to scowl past Steele into the face of a hovering Indian who quickly advanced with extended hand.

"Bo'-jo'! bo'-jo'! Daveed," greeted Tete-Boule as David seized his proffered hand.

"Bo'-jo', Tete-Boule!" and the iron grip which was known from Nepigon to Lac Seul closed on the unsuspecting interloper.

"Ough! Ough!" cried Tete-Boule doubling with pain over his crushed fingers. "Why you shak' de han' so hard?"

The broad face of David wrinkled in amusement as he surveyed the writhing victim of his handshake. "W'at de trouble wid you, Tete Boule? W'en I ver' glad to see you, I give de good shakehand."

As Tete-Boule left them nursing his fingers, Steele muttered: "He won't forget that soon. Trying to hear what you are saying, was he?"

"Ah-hah! De nex' tam eet weel be hees neck."

"But what was it you found in the muskeg?"

"In the muskeg we fin' ver' beeg track of somet'ing. We nevaire see such strange sign before." The Ojibway shook his head. "But de rain wipe eet out."

"Then I found more, staying here, than you did down the river."

"W'at you see?"

"Well, David, I've seen the trail of the Windigo, and I've made another little discovery. We've got a Wabeno at the post and I let you guess who it is."

"A Wabeno!" echoèd the surprised David. Then with a grimace he added, "I t'ink dat Wabeno got a sore han' now, but de Windigo trail—w'ere you fin' eet?"

"I'll tell you and Michel what I know after supper; they are calling me now." And the two friends parted.

Evidently the Windigo is sufficiently real to make a hideous noise and leave a huge track. What is the thing?

Machine Sets Forth the Cold Facts of Life

A machine for showing the relation of one set of facts to another set of facts has been invented by a Princeton university student. Although the machine has fewer parts than the simplest typewriter, its capabilities are tremendous. To illustrate, it will tell a man how long he may expect to live. The factors used in this determination, according to report, are the quantity of tobacco smoked daily, the average duration of sickness a year, and the average blood pressure.

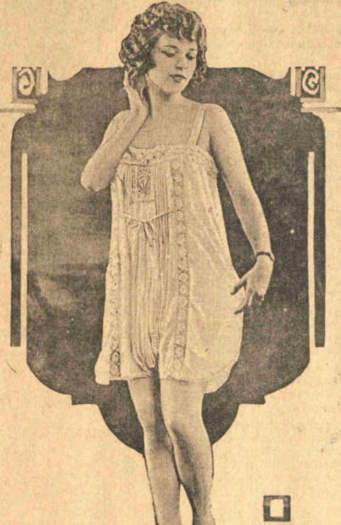
Measuring mortality is an important part of the insurance business, and the new machine might serve as a useful check on the expectancy tables set up by erudite actuaries. But probably the machine won't displace the logarithmic gentlemen who quote the odds on the so-called human race. Handbooks still flourish by the side (approximately) of new-fangled betting machines and it does seem a little more neighborly to get a run for your money from a man than from a mechanism.—Nation's Business Magazine.

To Brighten Ebony

Sometimes ebony brushes and hand mirrors become dull in appearance. They can be improved considerably by rubbing in a little white vaseline with a soft piece of material until the wood has absorbed all the grease and has taken on a rich gloss.

MODISH LINGERIE FOR SERVICE; SCALLOPS RIVAL THE FLARE

NOW in the after-holiday lull is the time to take inventory of one's lingerie supply. Whether one does it through the buying or home-sewing method new combinations, step-ins and, costume slips must be acquired, if one would keep up with fashion's pace. In underthings as well as frocks and outer wraps styles change. This season more than ever there is a notable difference in many of the undergarments. This is greatly due to the introduction of fullness about the hemline which takes the place of the heretofore slim silhouette.

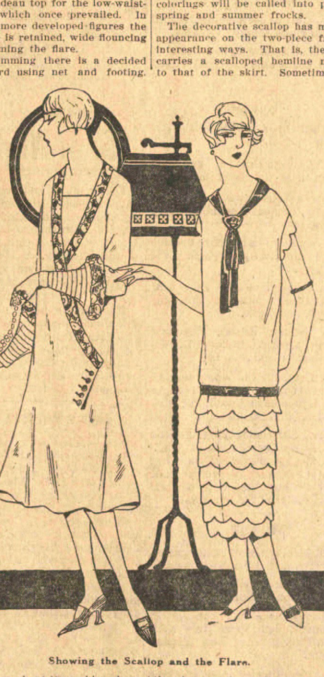


Modish Spring Lingerie.

To meet this new condition the designer of pretty undergarments must, through subtle adjustment, make necessary concessions. For instance, the latest idea is to introduce godets of lace into the skirt portions of combination costume slip and gown.

Youthful slips not only emphasize skirt brevity but they also substitute a fitted bandeau top for the low-waisted effects which once prevailed. In models for more developed figures the slender line is retained, wide flouncing or lace forming the flare.

As to trimming there is a decided trend toward using net and footing. Even the hem about the ankles shows a dainty finish of ruffled footing, often matching the net insertion which joins the seams. Net or valenciennes insertion would be equally effective for a combination such as the picture shows.



Showing the Scallop and the Flare.

A whimsical touch to colored voile undergarments is the edging of black footing. Peach, maize, rose, blue or orchid filmy step-ins or combinations can be made of sheer silk or voile with black footing finishings at little expense, and this home sewing is a most delightful pastime when midseason snows have not yet melted and indoors seems so enticing and "comfy."

Very charming also in the lingerie collection are combinations of georgette decorated with ribbon applique.

Paris says, "Let scallops reign supreme in costume designing," and they do, judging from the multitudinous number of gowns and wraps and two-piece dresses which are greatly bescalloped this season. It is a question whether scallops or flares are receiving most attention from noted couturiers at present. According to late models emanating from various renowned French ateliers, the honors are divided.

The illustration presents a very attractive exponent of the scalloped frock, also the newest interpretation of the flare.

Arranging scallops in tiers is an outcome of the trend of the vogue for scallops and then more scallops. This lovely model is of flat crepe in a fashionable old rose shade. It bears out the fact that all soft and unusual colorings will be called into play for spring and summer frocks.

The decorative scallop has made its appearance on the two-piece frock, in interesting ways. That is, the blouse carries a scalloped hemline matched to that of the skirt. Sometimes only the jumper is scalloped, the skirt adopting a circular flare. It is remarked that in most instances when the silhouette conforms to straightline models, then scallops are brought into play as a trimming.

As to the flare its interpretations are too versatile to enumerate, but one instance is of unusual outstanding interest—namely semi-fitted princess lines which ripple into a flare at the hemline after the manner of the smart street dress pictured to the left. This rather extreme style is characteristic of the coming mode.

Paris Is Wearing Black

Color is everywhere—rich vibrant colors, subtle pastel shades or those neutral monotone tints that are so smart. But against the background of color there is frequently the accent provided by a black frock, for once again Paris is wearing black.

Turbans Not for Turks

A turban, by its nature, must be or seem to be composed of rolls and windings of cloth of some description. But in the latest hat designed by Jane Blanchot, the printed velvet of which the creation is rolled does not stop on the turban. When it finishes there, the end continues into a scarf passing over one ear, under the chin and fastens around the throat.

Jeweled Heels

The twinkling heels of evening slippers are jeweled affairs with multicolored stones set into a background of enamels.

Acting Matter of Head, Never Heart

Acting is an art, not a spasm. The actress who makes her hearers weep is not one who weeps herself, but the one who seems to weep. The secret of fine acting, the secret of all art, is the suggestion, the inflaming of the spectator's imagination; and the secret of suggestion is studied repression.

The acrobat or the dancer may leave the stage exhausted, but an actress who knows her business no more swoons at the finish of her big scene than Whistler had to be revived with smelling salts on completing an etching. The poor actress puts her heart into the role, the trained actress puts her head into it.

George Arliss has said it perfectly in one short sentence: "The art of the actor is to learn how not to be real on the stage without being found out by the audience."—DeWolf Hopper in the Saturday Evening Post.

A Half-Stew

A North side man tells this one:

"I was downtown on a recent Sunday evening and, seeing an oyster sign on a restaurant window, I decided a stew would be just about what I wanted at that moment.

"Going inside, I said to the waitress: 'A half-stew, please.'

"When the steaming plate reached me I saw that the girl had certainly brought me a 'half-stew,' as six halves were floating about instead of six whole oysters."—Indianapolis News.

TWENTY per cent more corn was produced in 1925 than in 1924, according to the corn survey of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. An increased production of 587,886,000 bushels brings the 1925 figure to 2,900,581,-000 bushels. This, plus the carry-over of 1924, makes the general marketable 1925 corn crop of 2,961,581,000 bushels the largest in five years. While the corn crop was nearly a failure in the Southwest and the average yield was low in almost the entire cotton belt, the corn belt itself, in practically all sections north of the Ohio and Potomac rivers, produced an excellent crop of fine quality.

The large excess production, however, and the fact that there is fewer live stock on the farms and some curtailment in feeding operations, have made corn plentiful and low in price. Prices dropped steadily from the top price in January of $1.82 to 82 cents in November in Chicago. Receipts fluctuated violently with an up-turn grade beginning in October.

The United States is the corn nation of the world, producing 70 per cent of the entire crop. New uses for corn promise to increase consumption of this grain appreciably. Particularly significant is the manufacture of corn sugar, which is increasing in commercial importance.

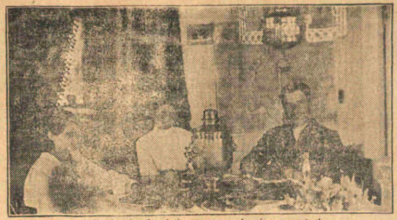
Soviet Russia Now Plans Bigger Wool Production



A Russian family of the prosperous farming peasant class.

The visit to the United States, at this time, of Michael S. Pereferkovitsh, manager of the live-stock department of the Soviet Russian government, Prof. Michel F. Ivanoff of a Moscow agricultural university, and N. N. Klebnik, official interpreter, carries with it all the significance of a step to progressive and modern methods in the new Russia.

According to these three representatives of the Soviet government, Russia now has about 80,000,000 sheep and hundreds of millions of [illegible] of other live stock.

[illegible]bouillet rams have been purchased by them, not to increase the number of sheep, but to improve [illegible]. It is expected that a better [illegible] will be produced by [illegible] breeds. In this connection [illegible] shearing machinery was [illegible] to supplant the old-time hand [illegible] is in itself is expected to [illegible] crop about 7%, not [illegible] machine shears closer [illegible], but because it re[illegible] evenly and in an [illegible], leaving no ridges [illegible].

[illegible] is anxious to enlarge its [illegible] with a view to pro[illegible] wool for manufacturing purposes. Another committee from that country has been studying textile mills in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts.

Admittedly, there is great need in Russia for farming implements as the Russian farmer now has practically all the land he wants, but is unable to develop all of his ground because of lack of farm machinery.

Another great need is dairy machinery such as milking machines, cream separators, pasteurizing machinery, horse and cow clipping machines and butter-making machinery.

M. Pereferkovitsh said he intended to buy more than 5,000 sheep, but owing to misinformation as to the best buying season, he arrived in this country too late to get all he wished, and so expects that next year as many as twenty men will be sent to this country to make these purchases.

Russia is doing everything possible to improve farming and dairying methods. Graduates of agricultural schools are teaching farmers and dairymen modern methods and the use of modern machinery.

Many things point to Russia as one of the world's great future sources of dairy products.

VALVE-IN-HEAD Buick MOTOR CARS
G-16-25

The Credentials of BUICK

Examine the credentials of the builder of any car you think of buying. Be sure there is stability behind the car. Be certain that it will not some day join the ranks of the million and more unmarketable "orphan" cars whose builders have quit.

Buick motor cars are backed by vast resources of men, equipment, investment and success. The Buick factory is a mile and a half long. The Buick engineering staff is the largest in the service of any motor car manufacturer. The Buick sales and service organization numbers 4000, with millions invested in showrooms and Authorized Service Stations all over America.

And Buick leads in public preference, the indispensable factor in motor car success. For eight consecutive years, the public has invested more money in Buicks than in the cars of any other member of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce.

Not one of the million "orphans" on the roads today was built by Buick. None ever will be!

Better Buick Six Cylinder Valve-in-Head motor cars range in price from $1125 to $1995, f. o. b. Buick factories. Among the Buick open and closed models there is one that will meet your desires exactly.

Obituary

Nellie Edith Burger was born in Adams township May 11, 1871 and departed this life on January 12, 1926 at her home in this village.

She was united in marriage to Frank Foster of Hillsdale and to this union were born three children, Leland of Lansing, Hazel Soules of Hanover and Cleo at home. She is also survived by three grand-children, a step-mother Mrs. Betsy Burger, one step-brother Will Corey, other relatives and a host of friends.

Mrs. Foster's father C. C. Burger preceded her in death seven years ago and her mother when she was but two years of age.

She was a true wife, and a self-sacrificing mother. She tried to live the Golden Rule, was exceptionally honest and a true home missionary, never letting her left hand know what her right hand was doing.

She was a member of the Friendship Club and L. O. T. M.

Funeral Services were held Friday January 15th at the Congregational church at 2:30 p. m. Rev. Virgil Hunt officiated, and burial was in the North Adams cemetery.

Card of Thanks

We wish to thank all most sincerely, who assisted us in any way during our recent bereavement, Rev. Hunt for his words of comfort, others for the beautiful expression by floral tribute, of their sympathy for our sorrow in the loss of our wife and mother.

Directors of Co-operatives Should Know Problems

One of the serious weaknesses of many agricultural co-operatives is the tendency of members of boards of directors to shirk responsibiliry in the matter of management.

"Too frequently" says the U. S. Department of Agriculture, "The individual member looks upon his elevation to the office of director merely as a recognition of his standing in the community. Such an attitude is unfortunate and until every director comes to feel that he has accepted a trustee-ship for the successful conduct of business, co-operative enterprises will fail of attaining the full measure of success they wish to achieve."

The trusteeship, says the department, obligates every director to inform himself thoroughly respecting the operations of the business with which he has become vitally connected. In addition he will need to understand thoroughly the broader principles upon a thorough working knowledge of which depends to a large extent" the degree of success and progress of the business.

If lack of interest is a weakness says a department economist, the wrong kind of interest is equally bad. Too frequently one finds the board interfering instead of directing. It is the duty of the board to formulate policies and see that these policies are carried out by the executives. Dictation by the board of the petty detail of day to day operation is not formulating policies; it is interferance. Such interference can only result in unstable and unsatisfactory management.

Probably the most frequent cause of unwise management, he points out, is a lack of essential facts, or if these be at hand, an willingness to face the facts. To the extent that the board of directors makes a real effort to understand the demand for its products, and to formulate price and merchandising policies on the basis of all the facts. rather than on the basis of mere opinion, he says will its activities contribute to whatever measure of success is achieved.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Nye of North Dakota Seated in Senate by Close Vote—Farm Relief Prospects.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

SENATOR BORAH, who had said he would vote against seating Gerald P. Nye, the appointee of Governor Sorlie of North Dakota to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Ladd, changed his mind when the case came to a vote last week. The consequence was that Mr. Nye was seated by a vote of 41 to 39. While most of the Democrats and more radical Republicans applauded, Senator Frazier escorted his new colleague up the center aisle to Vice President Dawes' dais and the oath of office was administered.

The acceptance of Mr. Nye was said to be due partly to the fact that he is to be counted among the opponents of American adhesion to the world court. Furthermore, some of the senators were averse to rejecting a man who is avowedly a champion of the Middle West farmers, not desiring to vex the agriculturists. Yet another reason that influenced some votes was the feeling that North Dakota should not be deprived, for seven months, of full representation on a technicality. The senate's vote establishes a precedent, upholding the contention that a senator is both a "state officer" and an "officer of the United States," and that his state properly has something to say as to the method and machinery of his election.

HENRIK SHIPSTEAD of Minnesota, the only Farmer-Labor senator, took a hard fall out of the world court resolution Wednesday in a three-hour speech in the course of which he undertook to demonstrate that the court, instead of being an agency for the preservation of peace, is a part of the war machinery of the League of Nations.

"The power," he said, "to enforce the decisions of the court by war is vested in the League of Nations by the treaty called the covenant.

"Thus we have a clear program for inaugurating all kinds of 'legal' wars on the assumption that the wars levied under this arrangement will be 'legal,' and under the further assumption that wars in the past have been 'illegal.'

"How many governments in the history of the world have started 'illegal' wars?

"All of the governments that have started 'illegal' wars, please say 'aye.'

"Silence. Senators I hear no sound.

"All governments that have started only 'legal' wars, please say 'aye.' Senators, all the governments in history shout in chorus, 'aye'!"

Senator McKinley of Illinois spoke briefly in favor of the resolution of adherence to the court, declaring that neither our Monroe Doctrine nor our Philippine protectorate had got us into trouble with other nations nor would our entry into the world court.

"There is a crying need at this time for a foreign market for our corn, our wheat and our hog products," Senator McKinley said. "Europe needs all the food we can sell her. One hundred millions of people in Italy, Germany, England, Austria and Hungary are living on half rations. Why? Because working conditions have never become settled since the war. What will settle them? An assurance of continued peace."

CONGRESS seemingly stands ready to provide relief for the farmers if only the farmers can agree on what they want. At this writing they are still split into factions and are unable to get together on the question of what legislation will best do the work. The meeting of the National Council of Farmers' Co-operative Marketing associations took some two hundred delegates to Washington and they, together with other farm leaders, told Secretary Jardine, congress and the country at large their views—which were various and diverse. In a general way most of them favored the administration measure providing machinery for the promotion of co-operative marketing, and consequently that bill was reasonably certain to be favorably reported by the house agricultural committee. The co-operative men, or many of them, do not stand with the farm paper editors and the farm bloc leaders in the matter of controlling crop surpluses to boost farm product prices, and in this they are in line with the administration. However, the Dickinson bill is looked on kindly by the middle-of-the-roaders, and its main features were highly commended by Frank O. Lowden of Illinois in a speech of great significance.

Mr. Lowden, frequently mentioned as a potential corn and wheat belt candidate for the Republican nomination for President in 1928, enunciated the farmers' demand for a specially protected domestic market affording as profitable returns as the protective tariff affords the manufacturer profitable returns. He advocated the plan to segregate the export surplus and enhance the domestic price above the world market price which has been embodied in the Dickinson bill. He declared the doctrine of crop surplus control was vital for the salvation not only of agriculture, but of the very nation itself.

C. L. Richeson of Iowa, president of the National Corn Growers' association, told President Coolidge that the so-called revolt of the corn belt has been exaggerated. He denied that the farmers have declared war on the protective tariff and asserted that they could work out their own salvation if given such aid in disposal of their export surplus as is proposed in the Dickinson bill. The credit situation in Iowa, he said, had been greatly improved by the loans of the two intermediate credit banks established in that state recently.

JOHN W. LANGLEY resigned as a representative from Kentucky when the Supreme court refused to review his conviction for violation of the prohibition laws. He now asks the Republicans of his district to elect his wife to fill the vacant seat in congress, asserting that she knows better than anyone else the needs of the district.

In Chicago, Mrs. Jacob Baur, a well-known business woman, has announced her candidacy for congress from the Ninth district, now represented by Fred Britten whom she will oppose in the Republican primaries in April. Mrs. Baur, like Congresswomen Kahn and Norton, favors the liberalization of the dry enforcement law.

UNCLE SAM seriously objects to the retroactive provisions in Mexico's new alien land and petroleum laws, and his objections have been transmitted through Ambassador Sheffield to A. J. Saenz, Mexican foreign minister. The Obregon government was warned that the United States considers the new laws inimical to the interests of American property holders and in violation not only of international law, but also of the agreement made between Mexico and the United States in 1923.

In its reply the Mexican government took the stand that Mexico is a sovereign nation and can make any laws it sees fit. It also asserted that the laws had not been promulgated and so the protest was premature. This was offset, however, by a statement issued by the department of industry and commerce which said the laws were promulgated on December 31.

The legislation in question is designed to carry out that article of the Mexican constitution which provides that only Mexicans and Mexican companies have the right to acquire ownership in lands, waters, and their appurtenances, or to obtain concessions to develop mines, waters, or mineral fuels in the republic of Mexico.

MAJ. GEN. WILLIAM LASSITER has sailed from the Panama canal zone to take General Pershing's place as president of the Tacna-Arica plebiscitary commission. Pershing will soon return to the United States but meantime he has scored a signal victory at Arica in the passage by the commission of his resolutions for investigation and punishment in many cases of outrages committed by Chileans against Peruvians and the establishment of complete law and order before the plebiscite is held. Senor Edwards, the Chilean member, acquiesced fully in the resolutions.

JUGO-SLAVIA'S debt funding mission arrived in Washington last week, and on the same day King Alexander made the statement that he regarded the debt to America as one of honor, to be settled on that basis up to the limit of the country's resources.

Senator Henri Berenger, the new ambassador from France, also reached Washington. His special mission is to bring about a settlement of the French debt. The Italian debt settlement probably will be approved by congress, though the objectors, led by Rainey of Illinois, kept up the attack. Count Volpi is now in London hoping to get from the British better terms than were granted by the Americans, but this is considered unlikely.

ACCORDING to the final report of the Couzens senatorial committee that investigated the amortization of war facilities, the internal revenue bureau permitted improper allowances in that connection that have cost the government a total of $210,665,380. Allowances involving "discovery depletion," it is asserted, benefit the oil industry to the extent of $37,500,000 annually, the total having been much higher than this while war time tax rates were in effect. The loss to the government in taxes due to erroneous valuations of copper mines, it is further declared, amounts to $60,000,000 annually.

INCREASED prices of rubber due to control by the British government have resulted in the formation of two American organizations "to protect the American public and the rubber industry with respect to future supplies." The first, the Rubber Association of America, announced it was planning the expenditure of $10,000,000 a year for five years to plant rubber trees in areas under American control or where favorable conditions would be assured. The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce announced the formation of a $10,000,000 organization by automobile manufacturers to produce, purchase and deal in raw rubber, as well as to manufacture rubber tires.

HOPE of settling the anthracite strike in the near future has gone glimmering. The joint conference of operators and miners, which began in December, broke up last week because of the deadlock over the matter of arbitration. The operators charged President Lewis with seeking to rule or ruin and said he had suggested to them that they might raise the price of coal $5 a ton "as long as he got what he wanted." This Lewis hotly denied, retorting that the operators were determined to prevent any settlement. The operators refused to permit the arbitration of prices of coal, and the miners would not accept arbitration of wages unless it was guaranteed that wages should not be lowered.

FLOODS and violent winds that were prevalent throughout Europe have been followed by a severe cold wave, and though this has checked the rising water, the people are suffering intensely. Ice and snow are all over the continent as far south as the Midi and Naples. In Russia all elementary schools have been closed because of the cold. Spain has been swept by destructive gales

DOCTOR LUTHER has again been named chancellor of Germany and asked by President von Hindenburg to form a new cabinet of representatives of the Centrists, Democrats, German People's party and the Bavarian People's party. Erich Koch had found it impossible to form a "big coalition" ministry because the Nationalists and Socialists would not take part.

IN THE Navy department appropriation bill submitted to the house last week it is recommended that all lighter-than-air aeronautic activity by the navy be discontinued pending the results of its co-operation with the Air-Craft Development corporation of Detroit in the development of a new type all-metal dirigible. The bill proposes that the Los Angeles shall be put in storage and the establishment at Lakehurst reduced to the minimum. This is contrary to the advice of Rear Admiral Moffett, chief of the bureau of aeronautics.

Snow and Ice Reign in France and Italy

Paris.—Both France and Italy have suffered from severe cold waves. Central and northern Italy, and southward as far as Naples, were blanketed with snow.

In France the mercury dropped abruptly from 60 degrees Fahrenheit to zero and below at some points. Snow also fell at various places.

Where floods were raging the water has been converted into frozen swamps over which howled a bitter easterly gale. The lowest temperature recorded was at Briancon, where 5 degrees below zero was registered. The thermometer stood only just above zero in Touraine and Burgundy, Central France, and even the sunny south, were affected from Perpignan to Mentone.

A heavy fall of snow ravaged the flower-raising countries around Nice and Cannes, doing damage estimated at millions of francs. At Toulouse the snow was a foot deep. There were also white mantles at Bordeaux, Montpellier, Avignon and other cities where snow has not been seen once in ten years.

Violent storms raged in the Mediterranean which played havoc to shipping. Much damage also was done by the gales to shipping and ports on the west coasts. The British torpedo boat destroyer Wolfhound collided with the small coastal sailing vessel Miarka, which was cut in two and sank. Her crew of six men were landed at Brest.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Ionia—Struck on the head by a log he was helping load on a wagon, when a chain caught on the timber and swung it around, Clifford Biehler, 18 years old, of Freeport, died while being taken to a hospital from the farm of Stephen Miller, in Campbell Township.

Pontiac—A three-legged cockerel, cross between a White Rock and Wyandotte, captured first prize for unusual entries here in the Eastern Michigan Poultry show. Ernest Daley, of Ortonville, is its owner. The third leg is not as fully developed as the others, because of disuse.

Ypsilanti—"The Charleston, if correctly danced, is perfectly proper and may be danced at the State Normal College parties," declared Mrs. Fanny Cheever Burton, social director of the normal, in a statement issued from the office of the dean of women. "We are frequently asked if the Charleston is allowed at college parties," says Mrs. Burton. "The answer is yes."

Ionia—Dr. Robert H. Haskell, medical superintendent of the Michigan State hospital, has accepted the position of superintendent of the Wayne County Training school, at Northville, and will enter upon his new duties as soon as negotiations are completed. He has accepted the invitation of a special committee, whose action will be ratified by the full board in a few days.

Hadley—Four Toledo bandits, three of them slightly wounded, are held in the Lapeer county jail at Lapeer and the $5,000 in cash which they took from the Citizens Bank here Wednesday afternoon is back in the bank vaults because of the unerring marksmanship of Owen Earhart, a deputy sheriff, and the ingenuity of Benjamin Franklin Hadley, postmaster and manager of the local telephone exchange.

Caro—One male inmate, whose identity has not yet been ascertained, was burned to death in a fire recently which completely destroyed Cottage A at the Michigan Farm colony, Wahjemega, and a second is reported missing. There were 19 epileptic inmates in the cottage when the fire, which was caused by an explosion of a furnace, broke out. Loss on the building and contents is estimated at $75,000.

Ann Arbor—Entrance into the University of Michigan will be harder in the future, according to plans now being carried out by Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the university. Dr. Little has appointed a committee to handle the added work, with Registrar Ira M. Smith, as chairman Tightening up of the entrance requirements is one of the points which was stressed by Dr. Little in his inaugural address last November.

Pontiac—Justice Joseph B. Moore, who retired Jan. 1, from the bench of the Michigan Supreme court where he served 30 years, will be the guest of honor at a banquet to be tendered him the evening of Wednesday, Jan. 20, at the Bloomfield Hills Country Club by members of the Oakland County Bar association. Justice Moore was judge of the sixth judicial circuit, comprising Oakland and Lapeer counties, at the time he was elevated to the Supreme court bench.

Onaway—Four men were burned to death and three injured in a disastrous $1,000,000 fire that destroyed thousands of feet of lumber and the main plant of the American Wood Rim company here recently. While the bodies of the four employes trapped by the flames were burned almost beyond recognition three of the bodies have been identified as those of Fred Van Phoff, L. D. Smith and a man named Tate. The body of the fourth victim had not been identified.

Ann Arbor—In an effort to extend their religious work more thoroughly to the students of the University of Michigan, the First Presbyterian church of Ann Arbor has voted to buy property in the heart of the fraternity district, and build a church within easy reach of the students. The present church, located nearly a mile from the campus, has in the past failed to draw the student congregation. It is expected that the change will add greatly to the religious attitude of the students.

Lansing—One man is dead and seven other persons are recovering from the effects of gas fumes as the result of the use of improvised stoves at an old-time dance in Haslett, a village near here. C. E. Smith, garage proprietor, sponsored the dance, which was given to awaken interest in Henry Ford's attempt to revive old-time dances. The garage was cold and barrels were used as charcoal burners. Shortly after the dance started eight persons toppled to the floor. Smith died from the effects of the gas fumes.

Monroe—In his address here at the county building, O. B. Price, soil specialist, of the extension department of the M. S. C., showed the average results gained by fertilization of the crop treatment in various counties in the state and explained what proportion of the ingredient of the fertilizer had been used to make the crop treatment more profitable. He also urged the farmers to study carefully and then apply the proper ingredients of a fertilizer. Other addresses on fertilization will be made in the county at a later date.

Lansing—With the issuance of vouchers for $2,700,000, which the state owes the counties for their share in the 1925 automobile weight tax, Frank Fitzgerald, business manager of the highway department, promised that the reward money due the counties will follow soon. Fitzgerald denied a statement that the counties may have to wait indefinitely for the $1,500,000 reward money due from gasoline tax collections. Minor difficulties that arose in dividing the sum are being ironed out and the counties will receive their share

For this I have been sneered at and jeered at by all the cynics and sophisticates—I use these terms because the apter ones may be libelous—on newspapers and the theater. I have been called a self-seeker, a charlatan, and a mountebank. (The authors of pornographic plays, the swimmers with the tide, are not self seekers, and it never seems to occur to anyone that the easy method of self seeking lies in joining their number.) But the time has come when the American dramatist has his choice of three things. He can write the other kind of play and 'go out to fight for it. Or he can join an ever increasing minority in the peace and quiet of the library.

OVERCOMING EVIL WITH GOOD

Of these three alternatives there need be no doubt which I prefer, and, so soon as I become convinced that there is no public, or only a negligible public, for serious and important drama, I shall adopt that alternative. But I am not yet convinced and, meanwhile, my health and strength, and whatever powers I possess, are pledged to a better theater through the only means that make it possible, through creating public support of that kind of a theater. There is no force in censorships and prohibitions. "You can't change human nature by an actof legislature." There is no force anywhere except in what Dr. Chalmers called "the expulsive power of a new affection" the elimination of evil by the support of good—the kind of force that sounded the knell of bull fighting in Spain by popularizing foot ball.

No one can destroy the theater. It is too deeply rooted in the thought and affection of the populace. You can have a good theater, or a bad theater, as you have good government or a bad government —by voting for it, by organizing to vote for it, by standing back of it, by throwing the whole weight of your support and your influence in its favor. No one ever got either good government or a good theater by staying away from the polls. And whichever theater you have is certain to be the biggest influence in national life, The Bureau of Internal Revenue reports taxes paid last year on one hundred million tickets of admission to places of amusement in the City of New York. Is this a power to be ignored?

CRUDE IDEALS OF SUCCESS

To me the appalling thing about this power is not so much its evil employment as its waste. The effect of vicious plays seems to me somewhat overestimated. The effect of idle plays, or silly plays, of plays holding up false ideals and ideals, reflecting life as it never was or will be, cannot be overestimated. Personally, I deplore nudity on the stage and screen less than constant insistence upon the notion that the only success worth while is that which results in ownership of a six cylinder car. That culture, education, tranquility are negligible things in life. That the important factors in our existence are rich men, chorus girls, criminals, and women with a past. That the only new and important situation is brought about by the love of one lady for another lady's husband, or by the question of which graduatee convict first gets the pistol out of the table drawer. I regret turning over the influence of so great an institution as the theater to the burning question as to whether the girl with the pink finger nails marries the boy with the slippery hair. And, to use a banality, I view with alarm the prospect of a next generation that gets its ideas of humor from the use of the custard pie as a projectile, of manhood and courage from the frequent employment of the six-shooter, and of womanhood and romance from the standards of both now current in Hollywood.

There is only one way to combat this I am determined to write so long as I regardless, or boastful of the charge that I am asking support for the type of play I am determined to write so long as I remain in the theater. That one way is by appealing to and stirring up the people who want the other kind of thing, and by adding to their number. By indicating and demonstrating to the average man that a joke may be as funny in good English as in bad English, that drama may be as stirring when concerned with important matters as when devoted to piffle, that no dull play is a good play and no good play can possibly be a dull play, that entertainment may be derived from the exercise of the mental faculties as well as well as from their suspension. The worst enemy of art and religion is the man who makes them forbidding. The manager who produced "The Demi Virgin" has not done more harm in the theater than that group of self congratulatory critics and others who insist that only misery cynicism, and unintelligibility can be art.

THE CHURCH AND THE THEATER

The duty of the church in the theater seems to me as clear as its duty in any other department of life. I do not believe in a church silent or submissive or aloof. I repeat that nothing is to be gained by censorships or prohibitions. The church should throw the whole weight of its membership into the support of decent and intelligent drama, of drama that is doing the same work the church is doing. The producer of that kind of play should be as certain of one kind of support as the producer of the other kind is certain of the other. Clerical endorsement made "The Fool" possible. It should make possible more plays of that pattern than prosper by following the reverse pattern. Clergymen should advocate attendance at good plays. Church organizations should be pledged to a kind of underwriting of them. Church participation in drama, through amateur performances, should foster interest and understanding. A system of prizes, of honors important enough to be sought after, should encourage the writing and production of those plays. Five years of that kind of effort would give us a theater that stood with the church and the university instead of with the forces of evil. Among commercial managers—and we need hope for no others—the most effective argument is that "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" made more money than "Up in Mabel's Room"

Dr. George R. Andrews. acting for the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, is now at work on a movement of this kind. In that movement he will have the co-operation of the best element in the playhouse. There is no more important job in America. Its success will remake the theater. Eventually it may remake the world. —Michigan Christian Advocate.

Farm Cooperation Up For Conference Talk

A special "school of cooperation during which the fundamentals of farmers' cooperative organizations will be discussed and studied, has been scheduled as an added.

Cooperative effort has been given increasing consideration in recent years as one of the most vital questions to be met in solving general agricultural problems of the country. The school at M. S. C. will aim to develop and express material of value to Michigan's own cooperative organizations, of which there are hundreds.

The program for the school will cover everything from the general scope of cooperation, down through different phases to the sales end of the game itself. Walton Peteet, nationally known authority in the farm cooperative field, will be one of the leading speakers from outside the state. The economics department at M. S. C. is planning the school.

List of special agricultural associations and groups which will hold conferences at East Lansing during Farmers Week runs above 30. Among them will be: The Michigan Farm Bureau, Crop Improvement Association, State Horticultural Society, Michigan Livestock Breeders and Feeders Association (with 17 special breed associations meeting under the parent organization), Michigan Soils Association, Michigan Muck Farmers Association, Michigan Poultry Improvement Association, Michigan Country Life Association, A School of Methods for Grange Lecturers and others, Michigan Association of Crop Reporters, and the Michigan Press Association.

Farm Week Parade To Show Transportation

The story of man's development of transportation facilities, from the Indian woman and her earthen jar to the aeroplane, will be shown graphically in a special "parade of transportation" which will be a feature of the Farmer's Week at M. S. C. early in February.

The many units in the long story of this growth will be reproduced exactly wherever possible, while correct models mounted on floats will fill out the rest of the story. It is even hinted that the last exhibit in the parade will show the man of the future "new day", who will travel through space without visible means of support, other than possible delicate wings.

The rest of the parade, which has come to be expected as a regular entertainment stunt at the Farmer's week, will include the same lineup as former years. In addition to the college livestock, all divisions of M. S. C. will be represented by delegations, and a long chain of farm machinery will add to the general interest. The college military forces, headed by the famous military band, will lead the parade.

A pen of white leghorns, entered by the Hanson Farm, of Corvallis, Oregon, is leading the International Egg Laying Contest at M. S. C., at the end of the first quarter of the year's test. Another white leghorn entry, from the Harry Burns farm, Millington Mich., is in second place. Barred rocks, entered by F. E. Fogle, Okemas, Mich., stands third. The ten birds in the leading pen had produced 450 eggs on Jan. 9, the last official report on the test.

Carelessness Costs Us Money You Bet

Secretary Deland reports that owing to carelessness last year 24,831 automobile owners laid away their titles or deeds to their cars and this season they couldn't find them. This shows that the owners of automobiles in this state are reckless class and should be "jacked up" at least twice per week. Now it cost better than $24,000 to replace these titles besides the postage and so it goes. Some are careless by reason of overcrowding their conoodles and others are just simply careless because they don't have enough to think of to keep their head-pieces in running order. Mr. Deland says there are in Hillsdale Co. 7157 pleasure cars, 807 commercial autos, 18 motorcycles, 71 licensed trailers and 14 automobile dealers and this county contributes yearly $87,275 to the license tax and $39,285 was returned to the county as its share of the road improvement fund. Deland's office handled over 30 millions last year and the first of this year took in over two millions in auto license tax for 1926.

John M. Haller, chief of the title division in Secretary of State DeLand's office says there were 317,852 used automobiles sold in Michigan last year. He is the boy who keeps complete check on all title provisions of the auto laws. His 1925 report shows 259.600 new titles issued, a few of them being for cars brought in from other states.

James B. Haskins, Howard City publisher and member of the new state fair board, says the ice rinks at the state fair grounds are the largest artificial rinks in this country. On Sunday, Jan. 10, the rinks accomodated 12,000 skaters he says. After a day and night skating bee about 10 tons of ice cut by skates is swept off the rink.

A Port On The Atlantic

Michigan is soon going to be able to boast of an ocean port on the Atlantic seaboard, or what is the equivalent. It is only a matter of a few years when the new canal for sea-going vessels will be carrying great ocean freights and the farmers and manufacturers will be shipping live stock, grain and automobiles to Europe, in fact the first steps are already taken. We read that the Canadian government has finally let the contract for deepening the Welland Canal which is to be a link in this system. Very few of our readers have not heard of this much talked-of scheme and it was wonderfully accelerated when the late Senator Charles Townsend was in Washington. Mr. Townsend believed in heeding the demands of his constituents; without doubt he foresaw the needs and eventual possibilities of this artery far better than any other man on the job, and if he had lived, the waterway might have matured five years earlier.

When completed it will bring Detroit 650 miles nearer Europe figuratively speaking, than it is now. By this means it will be possible to carry 1,000 bushels of grain from Detroit a distance of 1,000 miles for from $20 to $30, whereas now it costs from $150 to $200. This one saving is in itself sufficient to warrant a wonderful success for the route.

With the tremendous manufacturing interests of Detroit the amount of raw materials that will be imported direct from Europe and the export trade of furniture, automobiles, tires, steel and iron goods, can rcarcely be estimated. To say nothing of freight traffic, the passenger travel to and from Europe must certainly be quadrupled. Those who anticipate visiting London, Paris, Berlin, Rome the Holy Land and India will receive practically the same steamship rates from Detroit, that are now given from New York.

Reports from Canada indicate that some of the citizens are opposed to building an International bridge across the Detroit river, so it is possible the project may be held up for a few years, but the waterway must come. Canada wants it—America needs it, and the World demands it: the only interests that are fighting it are New York and Boston. When it comes real estate is going to do even better than it has heretofore.

The Frank Lane Company of New York City has signed contracts to operate ten steamers to run from Detroit to Europe, beginning this spring.

Twelve years ago small residence lots without improvements on Detroit's east side opposite Belle Isle 7 miles from City Hall, sold for $350.00. Today no such lots can be found. They are covered with beautifully equipped homes and are worth $400 to $500 per front foot and getting more valuable each minute. The City of Detroit has recently annexed Redford and other snburbs which 12 years age were miles out in the farming country.

"What's in a name?" Everything. Its good to have the name of paying promptly. Renew.

Aside from such a serious thing as a death, an undeposited check is a nuisance to lots of people. Banks and business houses keep their books carefully balanced. If at the end of a month a check that has been issued has not been put through for collection it means a lot of unnecessary bookkeeping for the person who issued the check and for the bank.

"Then, too, there is the danger of loss. People often write their names across the back of a check and then carry it around for a day or two before banking it. An indorsed check is as negotiable as money. To be safe always indorse it to your bank. Write 'Pay to the Order of ——' then the name of your bank and below that sign your name. That protects the check from being used, if it should get out of your hands. But never waste any time about depositing checks you receive."

"Not after what happened to Jim and after hearing you tell me all these things, Aunty!" said Molly. "I'd be scared to keep a check a minute more than necessary."—Anne B. Aymes.

Khedive's Ex-Chef Gives Cooking Tip

H. Gedojian.

Great chefs are born, not made. Rarely if ever do they rise to the heights in their profession by dint of perseverance. In Europe and the East a chef with the true gastronomic instinct is treasured jealously. He expects and obtains the treatment of an ambassador. His dishes are the pride of his master, to be boasted of to friends in the cafes and bazaars.

Such a chef is Haroutoun Gedojian sometime chef to the family royal of the khedive of Egypt, now the owner of a bizarre gold coast restaurant in Chicago. In his forty-three years as a chef extraordinaire, Haroutoun's word has been law in the cuisines of three Egyptian princes and one princess the mother of the khedive. When Lord Kitchener was sirdar of Egypt before the trouble in the Soudan Haroutoun cooked for him.

One of Kitchener's favorite dishes according to Haroutoun, was schisch kabb, a dish made from milk-fed baby lamb. Prince Jamiel, another of his masters, was particularly fond of dried cream and honey, a preparation which is one of Haroutoun's zealously guarded secrets. Prince Saad Pasha was a keen admirer of a confection Haroutoun makes entirely out of flour, butter and nuts.

In many of his admirable dishes Haroutoun uses evaporated milk which is simply fresh cow's milk sterilized in cans and with sixty per cent of the water removed. Because of a homogenizing process through which evaporated milk is put, the fat globules in the milk are broken up into microscopic particles and distributed throughout the milk, where they remain in homogeneous suspension.

This breaking of the fat globule gives a distinct buttery flavor to every drop of the evaporated product, a flavor which ordinary market milk does not have. Haroutoun says he uses evaporated milk in preference to market milk in the preparation of all sorts of baked dishes, as well as in cooking.

Give Pigs Salt To Prevent Abnormalities

Iodized salt is the answer to goitered pigs as it is to goitered human beings, according to Professor John Evvard, "the hogman of Iowa", who in his talk before the Radio Farm School of the Blue Valley Creamery Institute stressed the importance of minerals in the profitable feeding of pigs

"I know of whole herds of brood sows fed in Montana, Idaho and similar sections that have produced a great number of hairless pigs simply because there was not enough iodine in their ration", Prof. Evvard said. "To prevent this condition we now have iodized salt in the feeding of livestock just as in the case of humans. This is ordinary salt in which either sodium or potassium iodine is incorporated. It doesn't take much of this iodine compound to do the business, but the precious little that is needed very badly indeed.

"Experiments with sows in different gestation periods shows that the same sows previously producing hairless pigs with undeveloped thyroid glands, if fed iodine to the extent of one part in seven thousand parts of a pound will produce normal litters. Said Prof. Evvard. "Sometimes the incessant rooting of the pigs, the turning up to the blue grass and corn field and other distress signs by the pigs is but a call for salt, but because of our lack of understanding of these signs we ignore their appeals."

Several Dogs Too Many

Just a word with you, Brother! Do you own that cur over there that is this minute nosing around the front of a store trying to locate an imaginary rat or perchance in search of Old Brown's big Thomas cat? Yep, you own him, eh! Lets be candid and talk the matter over You love that weazened piece of flea-bitten dogology now don't you Of course, he is such a comfort to the children, and your wife must have him for company when you are out to lodge, eh! You have kept old Towser, for lo, these many years, and he has never failed you at dinner time. He seems like one of the children.

That's right Brother, he does. Now when you go to the tax collector what do you claim for your pup? Do you admit he is one of the best pieces of dog timber in the county, can track a rabbit to Chicago and tree a hippopotamus? You do not. The chances are you deny faithful old Towser. You let the good old soul go to the devil! In short you make such a hullabaloo the tax man is obliged to issue a warrant for your arrest. My God man, think on these things! Now that long-haired pup over there is dear to you. You respect his wants almost as much as you respect your mother-in-law. You calculate that pup knows more about the family needs than the wife of your bosom, and you bet you'll keep old Towser as long as he can draw a breath.

In your mind you are cussing the township for you believe they are stinging you just because you are keeping a nice friendly dog. The other day the Supervisors met over at Hillsdale and paid several thousand dollars to sheep owners for damage done by reckless doggies just like your's.

Here's where you ought to bury your face in your hands and take one more long think, Brother.

In your experience as an owner of a canine, flea-bitten and mangy, have you ever imagined that pup wasn't worth his salt? Of course you have not.

As we look out of our window and see the literal hundreds of dogs running about, snooping into everything they can find, and under every bodies' feet, we sometimes wonder if the American people are becoming a set of long-eared rocky mountain canaries. Anybody who will keep a canine, pay the necessary dog tax, feed the animal enough to keep a ten-years-old boy and then run the gauntlet of irate sheep owners, is pretty nearly that long-eared bird, but there are thousands of them in this county and some in North Adams.

As a matter of fact a dog is a dog—he eats unmentionables by choice he reeks of carrion and maggots, and smells like a buffalo robe that has been scorched, but he is a dear just the same. If you should go to Hillsdale or Detroit you would find a large delegation of female long eared birds carrying the smaller variety of poodle or leading him about the avenue attached to a small chain, and nine-tenths of these damsels have shirked the duty of motherhood so many times they are ashamed to look at themselves in the mirror, all of which goes to show that society is slightly decayed in spots.

Bank Robbing Is Discouraging

Over at Hadley Michigan the bandits tried to do business by holding up a bank but owing to the fact that a few Hadley citizens possessed that rare quality called nerve, the robbers didn't get by with it. These fellows went into the bank and bound the cashier and a customer to chairs and started stealing the cash when citizens opened fire on them. Three of the gents were wounded and the fourth was taken before he had gone very far. The robbers obviously were a little green at the business or we might have had a different story to tell. Sorry to say very few of the real expert cracksmen are captured. It turns out these bandits were young married men who had been accompanied by their wives part way and they told the ladies they would be back soon as they were going north to hunt. The new form of vigilance committees which are rapidly being organized in this country will before long take care of most of the bank bandits unless they come at 2:00 in the morning or thereabouts.

Maccabees Unite

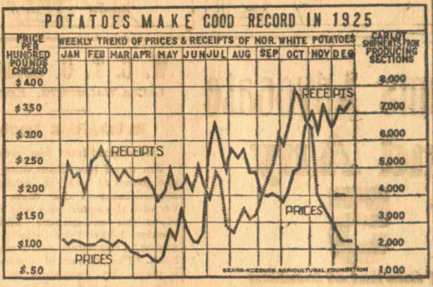
The Maccabees and the Ladies of The Maccabees, Michigan's pioneer fraternal benefit associations, will soon become one—after more than thirty years existence as separate societies. Both societies have approved the merger, and it awaits only the approval of Leonard T. Hand, state insurance commissioner, to become effective. The resulting society will be one of the strongest fraternal benefit associations in the world, with 250,000 members, assets of more than $29,000,000 and giving whole family protection including men women and children. Approximately 46,000 Maccabees and Ladies of the Maccabees live in Michigan which is the birthplace and home of both orders.

A. W. Frye, supreme commander of The Maccabees, will remain as chief executive and Mrs. Frances E. Burns, of St. Louis, Michigan, for thirty years great commander of the L. O. T. M. will hold a high position in the women's branch. The merger, which is being effected in the interests of more complete home protection at lower cost, is said to have been the last wish of Major Nathaniel Boynton, popularly known as the "father of The Maccabees", who advocated the merging of all the Maccabee societies twenty years ago.

The Legion Is Square-Toed

There comes to [illegible] reports from various newspapers throughout the state that the American Legion is not strictly honest and is mis-applying the public funds given over to their keeping by the state of Michigan. Secretary of State DeLand is personally interested in seeing that the Legion is given its just credits for safe handling of this fund and accordingly will appoint an auditing committee to look over the books of the Legion and check up all incidentals.

J. Joseph Herbert who is Commander of the Legion in Michigan plans to organize a post in every community of the state and he wants the general public to know what this beneficiary money has been used for and how. For several years he has been busy caring for disabled veterans, taking care of the orphans and widows eliminating red tape which always follows in the wake of every public movement from Washington. It appears there are hundreds of ex-service men who are either wounded or badly diseased from their experience in the World War, who have not and can not get the square deal unless they are helped. Circumstances are such that some of them cannot prove their claims, although this government has each and every man catalogued at Washington if he served in the World war army anywhere. It is possible and probable if the actual need arose the bunch at Washington could even give you the color of every man's eyes, yet there seems to be no material help for some of these veterans who went across and served as punching bags for the none too-soft machine bullets of the Heinies. Commander Herbert is about to open a campaign to organize a number of new posts in Michigan which it is presumed will help most of these boys who went across to prove their claims. We suppose that same as in the Civil war there are some whose scandalous conduct or bad moral carriage while in foreign fields has interfered with their chances for compensation but such cases will eventually be disposed of some way. Thousands of World war men have returned to this country broken in health and their ambition to buck the human problems is small—they are practically derelicts. Commander Herbert does not feel these men should [illegible] neglected.

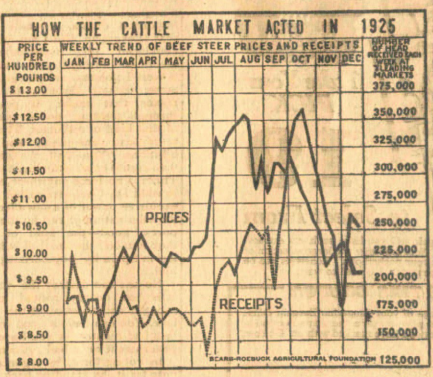


POTATOES were a very profitable crop in 1925, according to a survey made by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The acreage was the smallest since 1919 and the yield the lowest since 1917. Following four years of overproduction and very low prices, the 1925 season started off with a good price, which increased daily. The peak will be reached in spring shipments.

The annual consumption of 3½ bushels per capita, including seed, is 370,000,000 bushels. The 1925 crop is estimated at 323,243,000 bushels or 46,757,000 bushels under normal consumption.

The 1925 crop is 24 per cent less than the crop produced in 1924, but the ratio of consumable potatoes for the two years may vary still more in favor of the 1925 crop.

With the acreage cut severely all over the country in 1925, the opening prices started out on a higher scale than the peak prices for 1924 and began to increase at digging time until they reached in some instances $3.50 and $4 per hundredweight at local shipping stations. Every grower should save seed for next spring, as all indications point to high-priced seed potatoes for 1926 with an exception that the acreage planted will be larger in 1926.



THE large demand for both feeder and fat cattle, finds the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation in its cattle marketing investigations, has inspired a much greater confidence in the future of the industry. The first recovery of the beef cattle market came early in 1925 with a steadily progressing trend of prices from February to August. The average prices paid to farmers, states the Foundation, in the first ten months of the year ran 65 cents higher than the prices of last year and the highest since 1920. Chicago prices were also the highest for that period for the last five years.

Liquidation of western cattle herds was much less noticeable in 1925 than in any year since 1919, showing that the cattle industry is gradually getting back to a state of normalcy. The total number of cattle, slaughtered under federal inspection in 1925, was 5 per cent greater than in 1924.

Baby beef, made from young cattle that have been pushed to a desirable market weight of around 1,000 pounds at an early age, brought the highest prices. Public demand for smaller cuts of choice beef have made the half-ton baby beef popular on the market.

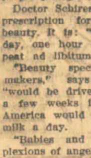
SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

THE farmer produced just about as much stuff in 1925 as in 1924, and it was worth a hundred million dollars more, according to the annual year-end survey of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. The average of all farm prices is now 154 per cent of the pre-war average, as compared with 149 per cent last year at this time. The real significance of this is indicated more clearly by the relation of returns from the sale of farm products to wholesale prices of commodities which the farmer buys and consumes. This means, states the Foundation, that the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar has risen from 66, the lowest point following the war, to 90 for 1925 and indicates that agriculture is recovering.

The low peak, prior to the war, of values of farm products came in 1914 with a valuation of $11,517,000,000.00. The high peak values for farm products came during the war with a gross total of $24,854,000,000 for 1919. Then came the four critical years in which farm prices fell below cost of production and values became correspondingly low.

In 1924 the total value of all the farm products raised in the United States was estimated at $17,355,000,000. This year the production is estimated at $17,454,000,000. The cash income to the farmer for his 1925 work will be right around $10,000,000,000.

Be a Milk Tippler, Says Dr. Schireson



Dr. Schireson.

Peaches and cream complexions of American women have their foundation in a milk diet, according to Dr. Henry J. Schireson, famous Chicago dermatologist and facial plastic surgeon.

Doctor Schireson has won fame by beautifying motion picture, musical comedy and vaudeville stars and many society women of America. He transformed Fanny Brice's nose, rejuvenated Eva Tanguay's face, removed sixty-four pounds of adipose tissue from Truly Shattuck in one operation, straightened the cross eyes of the leading lady of Singer's midgets, and has performed other corrections for making people young and beautiful.

Doctor Schireson has one infallible prescription for the attainment of beauty. It is: "One quart of milk a day, one hour of sunshine, and repeat ad libitum."

"Beauty specialists and cosmetic makers," says Doctor Schireson, "would be driven out of business in a few weeks if all the women of America would drink their quart of milk a day.

"Babies and children have complexions of angels for the reason that they are fed largely on milk. Milk used externally or internally is a beautifier. Anna Held, I believe, was the first actress who adopted the milk bath. While this was a novelty at the time, and her press agent undoubtedly made the most of it, the principle in itself was sound. But a beauty secret of even more value is the daily quart of milk taken as a part of the diet.

"The milk-fed girl is easily distinguished by the velvety texture and the healthy color of her skin. Milk is a wonderful body builder, because it contains every structural element. It is, in a way, an elixir of life.

"Authorities agree that milk is the most nearly perfect food but it is an extremely delicate one as well. Heat sufficient to kill all bacteria is the essential of absolutely pure and sterile milk. One of the advantages of evaporated milk, which is simply fresh cow's milk with sixty per cent of the water removed, is that it is entirely sterile and is more easily assimilated than ordinary market milk.

"Milk is mentioned forty-seven times in the Bible. The Promised Land of the Israelites was said to flow 'with milk and honey' and Ovid graded milk as second only to nectar, the drink of the gods."

Sincerity Among Friends

Generally speaking, among sensible persons, it would seem that a rich man deems that friend a sincere one who does not want to borrow his money, while among the less favored with fortune's gifts, the sincere friend is generally esteemed to be the individual who is ready to lend it.—Disraeli.

> TETE-BOULE
> SYNOPSIS.—With David, half-breed guide, Brent Steele, of the American Museum of Natural History, is traveling in northern Canada. By a stream he hears Denise, daughter of Col. Hilaire St. Onge, factor at Wailing River, play the violin superbly. He introduces himself and accepts an invitation to make the post his home during his stay. He finds the factor worried and mystified. The "log chateau" is a real home. From St. Onge he learns of the mysterious creature of evil, the Windigo, and the disappearance of a canoe and its crew, with the season's take of furs. Then at night the Windigo gives a weird performance. Even Steele is mystified. David, Steele's Indian, and Michel, St. Onge's head-man, leave for the scene of the canoe's disappearance in an attempt to solve the mystery. St. Onge tells Steele that Lascelles, the company's manager at Fort Albany, seeks his ruin in order to compel Denise to marry him to save her father. Steele and Denise fall in love. Steele finds the track of the Windigo—huge and much like a bear's. David finds the same thing.

As he met Denise at the door of the factor's quarters, Steele said quietly: "Let's not talk of the bear trail tonight, mademoiselle." And the grateful look she gave him was ample reward for his tact.

"As I feared, monsieur, the men found nothing down river," said St. Onge as they sat down to the simple meal.

Not knowing whether Michel had as yet confided in the factor, Steele didn't mention the strange trail.

"It is certainly a puzzle, Colonel."

"Yes, a riddle which will be solved in only one way, monsieur—by time. Some day when we have left the Wailing River we may hear of the fate of my men."

"Then you have no faith in the Windigo theory of their disappearance?" Steele boldly challenged, with a curl of the lip.

The tired eyes of St. Onge twinkled. "So far as our Indians are concerned, monsieur, the Windigo will drive us out of the valley. But I am not prepared to say that the Windigo have my fur."

Brent Steele was narrowly on the point of demanding that his host put his cards on the table face up. St. Onge's failure to take his guest fully into his confidence was irritating to a degree. As he ate in silence, the American promised himself that there should shortly be a showing of hands or he would go south at once. Then the brooding eyes of Denise St. Onge met his and he realized what it would mean to leave Wailing River to its fate—what memories he should leave behind when he started south for the Nepigon.

That evening, three men, heads together, smoked on the beach. Slowly and in detail Michel and David told Steele of their search and discovery of the strange footprints.

"What were they like, Michel?"

"Dey were long lak' de bear, but no bear een des countree mak' dem so big."

"Queer t'ing de bear w'at mak' de track," broke in David, "was starv', for dey not seenk far een de mud. An' he have seex-seven toe on fore feet."

"Just like the ones I'll show you in the morning!" exclaimed Steele. "And you found no trail of the men with the canoe?"

"No sign but 'round de camp—no trail in muskeg."

"Well, Michel, what do you think? Could the brute that made the track you saw, howl like the one on the ridge here?"

The Iroquois' small eyes narrowed to slits. He puffed hard for a space before answering. "De howl on de ridge was no bear—bear onlee 'yell w'en he get hurt. Michel not know w'at howl on de ridge but he fin' out before de long snow melt."

"What do you think made the trail, David?" Steele grinned into the set face of his friend.

David shook his head. "I nevaire see so beeg bear track."

Then Steele told of his search of the ridge for signs of the night wailer, and of the tracks he had seen that afternoon. But cudgel their brains as they would, the three men were at a total loss for a solution of the riddle of their origin.

The night shut down but the three men on the river shore still sat smoking, hard at their council of war. In the middle of a sentence, David suddenly stopped, raising his head as though listening. Then, silently rising, he plunged into a clump of alders close by! A low curse—the sound of a scuffle.

"By gar! W'at you got, Daveed?" demanded Michel as he and Steele followed to the brush.

"I show you somet'ing!" was the muttered reply, as the dark shape of the Ojibway dragged an indistinguishable, struggling mass from the alders.

"Tete-Boule!" gasped Michel, peering into the face of David's prisoner. "W'at you do dere?"

"So you t'ink to hear somet'ing, Tete-Boule?" growled the angry voice of the Ojibway shaking the man he held in the vise of his two hands as a husky dog shakes a rabbit. "You crawl lak' de mink, but I smell you lak' de wolf smell de wood mouse," and the man from Nepigon shifted a hand to Tete-Boule's throat. The mouth of the trembling eavesdropper gaped for air.

"Now I geeve you somet'ing to leeson to, Wabeno! Shaman! Maker ov de Beeg Medicine! Eef you don' be ver' careful, David, de Nepigon Wolf, will tear de devil out ov your t'roat." And with a wrench he sent Tete-Boule sprawling on the beach.

"Guess he won't eavesdrop again in a hurry!" laughed Steele, as the cowed Indian disappeared in the shadows. But Michel seemed so strangely silent that the American asked:

"What's the matter, Michel, don't you like to see him handled so roughly?"

The Iroquois made no reply.

"Wake up, Michel, and tell us what you think?"

"I t'ink," said the head-man slowly, "dat de long snows will be red in dees valley."

"What, you don't think that fool Tete-Boule will make trouble?"

"Tete-Boule ees no fool." He would say no more.

The house was silent when Steele, filled with the events of the day, went to his room. Late into the night his thoughts were busy with the hours on the ridge with Denise St. Onge, with memories of her flushed response to his emotion, of her abandon to the feeling which had swept her when she played her "Farewell," of her reticence and yet her desire to make clear the situation which her father seemingly feared to reveal to Steele. Then the matter of the tracks in the mud; what manner of beast could be loose in the "bush"? In the morning they would take up that trail and follow it, but when they lost it in the dry going, what next? Well, they had a plan for the next month, but the Frenchman would first have to show his cards. If he refused, there was nothing to do but get on to Nepigon. On the way there was Ogoke and Monsieur Laflamme. That ought to be interesting. But little did Steele realize as his drowsy brain dwelt for an instant on the call on Monsieur Laflamme, free-trader, just how interesting that visit was to be.

* * * * * * * *

At daylight three men were bending over tracks which ran through a wet hollow less than a mile from Wailing River.

"Well, Michel, did you ever see a black bear that would leave these behind him?" asked Steele as David and the head man carefully inspected the peculiar trail.

"Ver' beeg track but ver' strange bear," laconically vouchsafed the kneeling hunter.

"How about it, David?"

David bared a set of strong teeth in a characteristic smile.

"W'en we start up river for de Nepigon, I tell you. You laugh at me eef I say w'at I t'ink now."

Michel took up the trail forward while David and Steele followed it back only to lose it shortly in the dry birch leaves. On their return they found Michel waiting.

"She don' run far," he announced. "I don' followed eet far in de dry bush."

Then the three made a wide circle, but failed to pick up the elusive tracks. Disappointed, they were returning to the post by another route than the trail to the ridge overlooking the "Vale of Tempe," when Michel, who was leading suddenly stopped in his tracks, raising his hand in warning.

Stiff as the spruce around them, the three stood listening. Faintly to their straining ears came a low chanting, accompanied by the rhythmic beating of what sounded like a drum. Steele turned a questioning face to David, who grinned broadly, nodding his head in time to the far drum beats.

"What in thunder!" queried the curious scientist.

"You hear dot down on de Nepigon, one tam," dryly returned the Ojibway.

"It sounds like it. Somebody doing some conjuring, eh?"

"Tete-Boule, de beeg shaman, mak' heseff some medecine dees morning."

"Is he driving away the Windigo, or is he trying to get you bewitched for shaking him up last night?"

"I t'ink he try to call de Windigo for to mak' de beeg medicine togedder," laughed David.

"Do the post people know that Tete-Boule is a Wabeno, Michel?" Steele asked of the silent man who had vouchsafed no comment.

"Tete-Boule mak' medicine for long tam, to drive away de Windigo. De people t'ink he ees beeg shaman, for sure."

"Well, the first thing for St. Onge to do is to get rid of this nuisance, Tete-Boule. He keeps the post Indians stirred up with his mumbo-jumbo, and ought to be kicked out. What do you think, Michel?"

For answer, the tall Iroquois drew an ugly skinning knife from its sheath in his belt. Then he said, "It be good t'ing eef I put dees een hees back?"

"No, not without orders from your chief," replied Steele, amused at the literal interpretation given to his suggestion. "But this Tete-Boule will make trouble all winter with his sorcery."

As they talked, the low droning continued, accented by the beating of the drum.

"Let's see what he is about," suggested Steele, and they crept forward.

Within a hundred yards they made out a small, round skin tipi from which the sing-song emanated.

"Naske awass, Windigo!" moaned the voice inside. "Ahuah! ahuah!"

"He tell de Windigo to go away," whispered David to Steele.

Then Michel wormed his way to some small balsam near the tent, while the others watched.

Presently a low mewing from the Iroquois stopped short the wailing in the tent. Then from the balsam rose the caterwauling of a lynx in the mating season.

The drumming started furiously, accompanied by vociferous shouting. The scream of the lynx rose to a maniacal shriek. The drumming ceased, and the maudlin cries of a creature frenzied with fear filled the tent. Presently the flap was thrust aside, and a grey-faced Indian scrambled out and fled like a deer in the direction of the post, leaving behind him a white man and an Ojibway doubled with laughter, and beside them, his face set like stone, a tall half-breed deep in thought.

"Why did you do that, Michel? He will only make things worse at the post."

"I try eef he scare ov de Windigo, heeself."

"Well, are you satisfied?"

"Yes. Eet ees ver' strange he ees so scare." And the head man shook his head doubtfully. "He talk to de Windigo, an' w'en he cum, he run."

Back at the post Steele related to St. Onge the events of the morning.

"This Tete-Boule, Colonel, is only a source of trouble here. He is filling the minds of the Indians with the Windigo, and then makes medicine to drive him away, doubtless for a consideration."

St. Onge shrugged with indifference. "It will not matter. I am expecting a packet from Albany any day ordering me to abandon the post."

Steele stared at his host in surprise. Where was the old fighting blood in this veteran? What hidden cause had paralyzed his nerve? And his love for his daughter—that at least should drive him to fight through to the bitter end.

They were on the river shore and alone, so Steele grasped the opportunity for which he had waited. The matter between them had to be cleared up if he were to give his best efforts and those of David in the days to come.

"Colonel St. Onge," he began, "I am deeply interested in your situation here. I have offered the services of David and myself, in an attempt to aid you in your trouble; but I must say, candidly, that you are not meeting me half way. If I am to put in the next three weeks in an effort to run this thing down, I must first have your full and complete confidence. I must know—what you know—and think. This is due me. If you cannot take me into your confidence, I shall be compelled to thank you for your hospitality and bid you goodby, deeply as I shall regret it."

St. Onge listened patiently, as the speaker thought, hopelessly, to the ultimatum.

"Let us sit down and talk it over, monsieur," he replied.

The two men moved to a rock and lighted their pipes.

"Monsieur Steele," began St. Onge "I am in a net from which I see no escape. You came here a stranger claiming to be a scientist, interested in the study of Indian customs and folk-lore. That is all I knew about you. As it was, I told you too much that first night."

> Evidently this Tete-Boule has something to do with the Windigo. Who is back of him?

Crude Hooks in Use by Early Fishermen

In France several caves have been found in which men are believed to have lived about 200,000 years ago. In these were found what are probably the oldest fishhooks so far known to have been used by man.

These first-known hooks consist of a stone ground down into the shape of a small banana with a ridge cut in the middle, the string, or whatever was used for a line, having been tied around the stone in this ridge. Cave men of ages ago took this banana shaped stone and covered it with meat. Then they kindly allowed a fish to swallow the whole thing.

Then the fisherman would give a pull on the string, or whatever it was. The "hook" would straighten out horizontally and therefore refuse to come out of the water without the fish, so when the fisherman hauled in, the fish with the hook caught in his gullet, would keep the crude fishhook company.

Around the lakes of Switzerland scientists have found various kinds of hooks considerably later than those crude relics from France. Many of the Swiss hooks are of bronze, some having barbs; but the really ancient ones were barbless and consisted of two hooks at right angles to each other.

President Polk was the oldest of ten children.

Ancient Peoples Not Really So Backward

Inhabitants of the earth 5,000 years ago were not so backward as one might think, discoveries by members of a joint expedition of the University of Pennsylvania and the British museum to Ur of the Chaldees have shown.

Flint blades, about the size of safety-razor blades, that were indestructible and never needed honing or sharpening, were found. The blades were still as sharp as when used, without holders, by the prehistoric dandies.

A sewerage system in the temple of the Moon God, used to dispose of blood from animals used for sacrifices, equaled many of those today, according to the scientists.

Relics will be divided equally between the two museums. They show that many things thought to be modern inventions were used in Ur of the Chaldees more than fifty centuries ago, and, it is said, prove that life then did not differ greatly from ours.

A Lesson

Will Hays, the movie mogul, said in New York the other day:

"The English and French and Germans want to take our film supremacy away from us, but they haven't even learned yet that a film can't succeed without a happy ending, so I don't think we're in any danger.

"These foreigners ought to take a lesson from the young couple at the performance of Hamlet. At the end of the performance, the girl said:

"'Wasn't it silly of that Shakespeare fellow to drown Ophelia and kill Hamlet off? Why, he ought to have married them, the chump.'

"'Well, I ain't no highbrow critic,' the young man agreed, 'but that's how I'd 'a' fixed it up.'"

Ice Cream Anniversary

The year 1926 marks the seventy-fifth anniversary of the manufacture of ice cream as a commercial industry. It was in 1851 that ice cream was first manufactured and sold in Baltimore by Jacob Fussell, who is known as the father of the ice cream industry.

"I couldn't see why he didn't gain. I never dreamed that my constipation was responsible until the doctor told me.

"He explained that faulty or slow elimination of waste matter allowed poisons to form and be absorbed by the blood—and this meant tainted milk for baby.

"He prescribed the Nujol treatment and it made a world of difference to both of us. Now that I know how dangerous constipation is and how easily it can be prevented, I am never going to allow myself to get into that bad condition again."

Mothers are the best friends of Nujol. When precious new lives are at stake they seek the remedy that medical authorities approve because it is so safe, gentle and natural in its action. Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It does not affect the stomach and is not absorbed by the body.

Nujol helps in Nature's own way

Nujol simply makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination, without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly in accordance with the directions on each bottle. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

THE prices for lamb have been relatively high in 1925, with lamb supplies available for slaughter only slightly below normal figures, according to an analysis of the lamb market by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. In the sheep-producing states pastures and ranges have been good. Conditions in the whole area west of the Rocky mountains are vastly better than they were a year ago.

The sheep industry was much more profitable in 1925 than it was in 1924. Lamb prices in Chicago averaged $15.35 in November, 1925, as compared with an average of $6.65 for the same month in the five years from 1909 to 1913. The top price was reached in January, at $18.50 per hundredweight, and the low price of $12.50 came in May. Both prices and receipts have fluctuated up up and down through the entire season, but efforts to expand production have kept market receipts down because ranchers were retaining their ewe lambs with which to replenish and increase their flocks. The number of ewes slaughtered from July to September in 1925 is the smallest for that same period during the last four years.

The number of lambs on feed both in the corn belt and in the Western feeding districts is smaller than last year and some advance in the present price of lamb seems probable from now on. There will probably be a larger lamb crop, however, this spring and a moderately lower level of prices as these lambs come to market during 1926.

Among those from North Adams who attended the W. C. T. U. meeting at the Presbyterian church in Hillsdale last Sunday evening were W. A, Lawrence and daughter, Anna, Cleve Crater, Montie Shults. Jay North, Henry Porter, Rev. H. E. Wylie and son, Wyman Stott and wife Miss Genevieve Evens, Miss Ethel Brewer. The address by Rev. W. W. Whitehouse is very highly spoken of.

William Schilling and wife of Glendale, California, remembered the Editor this week with a nicely illustrated folder depicting the floats in the parade of the "Rose Carnival" at Pasadena, California. It is truly said of California she is the "Queen of Rose States" Some of these floats are monstrous affairs composed of roses, others are composed of oranges. Mr. and Mrs. Schilling are enjoying good health. They also sent a box of orange buds.

One of the cheapest things money can buy

FREIGHT transportation charges are so low as compared with other costs of production that goods can sometimes be shipped by rail many miles for less cost than they can be trucked a few blocks through a city.

Differences in prices for the same article in two neighboring stores are frequently much greater than the total freight charges involved.

It is this low level of rates and high-grade freight service that enables all of us to have in our homes necessities and luxuries from all over the country, and at the same time to so extend the distribution area of our own products that they may be marketed profitably all the way from Maine to California.

No country in the world other than our own enjoys such efficient railroad service at such low cost.

There was a good attendance, notwithstanding the storm. Next week's rehearsal will be held on Wednesday evening at the home of George Walworth.

Jonesville is becoming quite a popcorn culture center, as a carload of it was shipped from that station last week to Keefus, Cole and Krieter of Hudson. It is sold per hundred pounds and last season brought $3.50 per hundred. Val Price of near Jonesville is claimed to be the largest producer of popcorn in this vicinity as his crop last year footed up between 14 and 16 tons. Brooklyn Michigan has been up to this year a big crop center, but a considerable loss to the business is the recent burning of a store house for this commodity at that place.

On Sunday evening the congregational church presented the famous masterpiece of Victor Hugo "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" on the screen. The crowd though not large, made up by enthusiasm and interest in the picture. Those who saw the film report that never before had anything appealed to them so forcibly and vividly. The heroism of the misshapen outcast of Paris streets and the rescue of Esmeralda seemed fully as interesting as the book itself. While Hugo chose more or less of the gruesome for his themes, yet his power of thrilling his readers stands without a peer.

Fire Ate Up Good Property

Jesse Spangler and son, Earl, of Reading, seem to be the most unlucky people in this country, so it appears at the present time as they have suffered the loss of another barn, On Monday evening their barn two miles north of Reading burned to the ground together with two horses, a Studebaker touring car hay and grain. Earl Spangler is a brother-in-law of Rev. Virgil Hunt of this village

Mr. Spangler had been to town for groceries and, drove the car onto the barnfloor and had gone to the house when he heard the horses plunging in their stalls. He rushed back to the barn and found fire everywhere. Endeavoring to lead the horses out was useless as the blaze had got too much headway, but one horse considerably singed, was taken out, and two dogs were consumed. With the Studebaker car a Ford truck, Fordson tractor, a Case threshing machine, grain drill, feed grinder and other valuable stuff went up in smoke. Total loss is estimated at $4,000 and insured in the Hillsdale County Mutual. Reading fire department responded to the call and kept the flames from other buildings.

A big barn had previously burned and the residence went by fire two years ago on the same farm Why the fates should strike three times in the same spot is beyond comprehension. Cause of the fire Monday evening is not positively known but is supposed to have been the automobile as it was warm and indications point to an explosion of the gas tank as by no other means ceuld fire have spread so indiscriminately. The whole interior of the building became ignited during the time required to walk to the house. Mr. Spangler had not yet opened the house door when he heard the disturbance. Looks like firebug work.

They Couldn't Stop It

The sad deaths of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Abbaduska of Waldron will serve as a solemn reminder to all that care in driving a machine can never be too strenuous. The fireman of the train stated that he saw the automobile plainly but supposed Mr, Abbaduska had it under control. When the fireman discovered the mistake it was too late to stop the train. Witnesses of the accident say they never saw a more complete wreck than that sedan. Other than the broken glass and the cushions there was no means of knowing whether the machine was a touring car or a sedan.

The Abbaduskas were well known throughout the county and their tragic death is regretted by a large number of friends. The Standard Oil Company has made a ruling that every driver of their trucks must stop and listen at any track crossing and we verily believe that such a law should be put on the statute books of Michigan. There is absolutely no other way of controlling the hundreds and thousands who will never heed danger and are sent to the great Beyond as a sacrifice to the God of Haste.

RIGHT METHODS

In a Meat Market are absolutely necessary in order to keep the insiduous waste from interfering in keeping both stock and fixtures neat, fresh and wholesome.

A place to buy your Steaks, Chops and Roasts not contaminated by objectionable odors, arising from aforesaid wastes, is what we guarantee our customers. Groceries especially require sanitary surroundings.

It might have been YOUR COW!

Newspaper stories tell regularly of valuable, high-producing cows killed by nails or other junk in their feed.

That may happen any day to the cow you value most, unless you use a dairy feed that is free from dangerous foreign materials when it leaves the mills.

Every feed manufacturer owes it to you dairymen who feed his ration to see to it that his product is clean when it reaches you.

Dairymen get a guarantee of this "cleanliness"—this freedom from foreign materials with every sack of Larro. A special electro-magnetic process makes it impossible for wire, nails, tag hooks, screws, etc. to remain in the finished feed.

This insurance costs you nothing; it may save you much. Feed Larro—the SAFE ration for dairy cows.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is used: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

Women and Wireless

Many women are finding careers of one kind or another in wireless as entertainers. There are openings as lecturers for women possessed of expert knowledge of matters of particular interest to their sex. The field, however, is somewhat restricted by the fact that women's voices are generally inferior to men's for broadcasting purposes, although, as a broadcasting official pointed out recently, this may be the fault of the microphone, not of women's vocal organs.

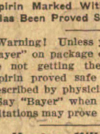
Hard to Kill This Man

Remarkable endurance of a native is told in a report received from Rhodesia, South Africa. The police discovered a native wandering about the veldt blinded and with one hand missing. He had injured himself dynamiting fish, and for more than a month wandered in the bush living on roots, grass, and leaves. When he was found he was suffering chiefly from starvation, the stump of his hand having practically healed.



Builds up weak bodies

"One whole year I dreaded mealtime. Indigestion caused cramps, vomiting and "jumpy" nerves. Since taking Tanlac I sleep sound, wake refreshed, eat well and am full of old-time vigor." H. A. Sirlin, 494 Greenwood St., Fond du Lac, Wis.

From Mother Nature's storehouse we have gathered the roots, barks and herbs which are compounded, under the famous Tanlac formula, to make Tanlac.

If your body is weak and undernourished, if you can't sleep or eat, have stomach trouble or burning rheumatism, just you see how quickly Tanlac can help you back to health and strength.

Don't delay taking Tanlac another day. Stop at your druggist's now and get a bottle of this, the greatest of all tonics. Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senate's Tax Bill Reduces Revenues $352,661,000—World Court Debate.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD.

SENATOR SMOOT, chairman of the senate finance committee, formally reported to the senate the new tax bill Wednesday and it probably will be called up for debate and action within a few days. The prospects for fairly early passage of the measure are good and tax payers are advised to delay filing their schedules until the Treasury department gives them notice.

Official treasury estimates furnished the finance committee show that the finance committee bill reduces revenues by $25,500,000 more than the house bill, the total loss under the house measure being $327,161,000, as against $352,661,000 under the finance committee bill.

The estimates show that in the calendar year 1926 the retroactive estate tax provision will mean a loss of $20,000,000, the capital stock repeal will mean a loss of $68,500,000. The cut in cigar taxes will mean a loss of $4,000,000 more than under the house bill, stamp tax repeals will cost $2,500,000 more in revenue than the house bill, and admission tax provisions will reduce revenues by $5,000,000 more than the house bill.

Repeal of the federal estate tax as recommended by the senate committee is favored by administration Republicans, but will be fought on the floor of the senate and even if passed there, may not be accepted by the house, which voted for continuance of the estate tax at reduced rates.

Senator Simmons of North Carolina announced he intended to offer a modified sinking fund provision on the floor of the senate under which he believes the entire public debt can be wiped out in 26 years. He would provide that all foreign debt payments should be applied toward the sinking fund, but he would increase the basic amount of the sinking fund from two and a half per cent of the domestic portion of the debt in 1920 to three and a half per cent.

THERE were fireworks in the senate last week over the World court resolution. Proponents of the measure sought quick action but Senator Blease of South Carolina started a filibuster Tuesday, talking for many hours. Next day Hiram Johnson of California and Jim Reed of Missouri made spirited attacks on the resolution. Both sides were preparing for a fight over cloture and there was a lot of discussion of the question of setting a definite date for taking a vote. Then Vice President Dawes took a hand with characteristic vigor. Speaking over the radio on revision of the senate rules, he cited the methods of delay being used by opponents of the World court, and succeeded in riling Reed and Copeland, who said he had unjustly placed the aforesaid opponents on the defensive before the country. Lenroot, Curtis, and other senators said that as the debate had been going on intermittently since December 17 last, it was about time cloture was applied. The administration is anxious to have this World court question settled quickly so that the tax bill can be passed, and probably most of the people in the country would like to see the upper house get down to attending to important domestic legislation.

IN THE house committee on agriculture two proposals of legislation for the relief of the farmer were considered seriously. One was the export bounty plan offered by C. Reinold Noyes of St. Paul, and the other was the export corporation plan devised by Carl Vrooman of Illinois several years ago and passed by both houses in 1921 but killed in conference. The latter plan provides for the creation of a farmers' export financing corporation, with an initial capital of $200,000,000 and the power to issue $800,000,000 in debentures. The capital would be advanced by the government, which eventually would be reimbursed. The corporation would be authorized to extend credit on sound security to foreign purchasers of American surplus grain, cotton, tobacco, hogs, and beef cattle.

On the floor of the house Representative Tincher of Kansas undertook to support in a speech the contention of President Coolidge that the tariff is of benefit to the farmer. The Democrats bombarded him with questions, and Jones of Tennessee followed with an address in which he declared that the farmer gets no help from the tariff. Representative Strong of Kansas introduced a bill creating a federal board, composed of the secretary of agriculture, the secretary of commerce and five members appointed by the President, to determine crop surpluses and assist farmers in marketing them. The board would assume no liabilities for the government.

ADVOCATES of a strong navy got into action when the house began consideration of the $331,431,787 naval appropriation bill, the outstanding features of which are decreases which will require the withdrawal of ships from active service, restriction of maneuvers and exercises, reduction of personnel, and the closing down of the Lakehurst airship plant.

Britten of Illinois charged that the measure was framed on a pacifist basis and that the committee on appropriations had ignored the recommendations of the secretary of the navy, the navy general board and the President. Considerable opposition developed to the item of the bill appropriating $300,000 for the experimental production of a metal clad airship.

PRESENTING his credentials to President Coolidge, M. Berenger, the new ambassador from France, told the Chief Executive that "France is resolved to settle the debts contracted for her defense as promptly and as fully as her present and future possibilities will allow"—which, of course, is no more and no less than has been said repeatedly by official France. Mr. Coolidge replied that it was his honest hope that a fair and honorable adjustment of the debt would be reached in the near future. The negotiations, at least, will not be delayed. The house has ratified the debt settlements with Italy, Belgium, Latvia, Esthonia and Czechoslovakia.

WITH only one negative vote the house voted $50,000 to pay the expenses of the American delegates to the preliminary conference on disarmament. Germany announces that its representative in that conference will be Count von Bernstorff, who was German ambassador to Washington when the war broke out.

MEXICO proposes to promulgate and make effective her new land and oil laws, regardless of the protest of the United States. Last week Foreign Minister Saenz issued an official statement in which he denied that these laws were either retroactive or confiscatory. He said they are based on a general principle, accepted in the United States, that foreigners cannot acquire certain rights unless they previously declare their intention of becoming Mexican citizens; but he pointed out that the laws permit rights legally acquired by foreigners prior to their enforcement, "to be kept by those who have acquired them until their death."

Secretary of State Kellogg took issue with the statements of Senor Saenz. "The position of this government," said Mr. Kellogg, "has been and still is that the so-called land and petroleum laws contain provisions which are plainly retroactive and confiscatory in their effect upon property rights heretofore legally acquired and held by American citizens in Mexico under prior existing Mexican laws. This position, which does not in any sense question Mexico's sovereign right to legislate on her domestic concerns, has been made perfectly clear in the most frank and friendly terms to the Mexican government, both formally and informally."

PROHIBITION enforcement agents in New York raided eleven foreign-owned ocean liners in the harbor there and seized more than ten thousand bottles of liquor worth between $50,000 and $100,000. Among the ships were the Adriatic and the Franconia. Writs for the destruction of the liquor were prepared at once, but this was not the most serious side of it. Federal Attorney Buckner will institute libel proceedings against the vessels.

CONVICTION of Col. William Mitchell by the court-martial was approved last week by the War department board of review, which considered only the legal aspects of the case. The sentence does not go into effect until it has been passed on by President Coolidge and it is believed by many that he will reduce the five years suspension to two years, at the end of which time Colonel Mitchell will be eligible for retirement.

DOCTOR LUTHER, reappointed chancellor of Germany by President von Hindenburg, has formed a new ministry that is expected to put into effect the Locarno pact. Stresemann remains as foreign minister. The Nationalists and Socialists are left out and Luther will have to have aid from either the right or the left wing to obtain a majority in the house. The Nationalists, who are trying to wreck the Locarno treaties, will not help him, but probably the Socialists will in a pinch. Mainly because Peter Reinhold, an expert on economics, was made minister of finance, the business men of Germany are warmly supporting the new cabinet and stocks have risen on the bourse.

PREMIER COUNT BETHLEN of Hungary is trying hard to maintain a middle-of-the-road course in the midst of all the row stirred up over the thirty-billion French franc forgery plot, and may be able to prevent a revolt by either the ultra-radicals or the ultra-Fascists. He is planning to reform the cabinet and it is announced that a parliamentary commission of 25 will be named to investigate the forgery plot. The Fascists will endeavor to balk this inquiry. During a heated debate in parliament Bethlen asserted the counterfeiters had not planned to revolt. "It was an act of patriotism" he said, "but the government must oppose such patriotism."

POOR old Damascus has been bombarded again by the French and what was left of the Shagour quarter was destroyed by shells because, the French alleged, the inhabitants were aiding the rebels. The population, it is said, has been reduced virtually to a state of famine.

SWEDEN and Denmark have signed an unlimited arbitration treaty which outlaws war between those countries. It provides for the arbitration of all questions, not excluding those of "national honor" and "vital interests." A similar treaty already is in effect between Norway and Sweden.

RUSSIAN officials of the Chinese Eastern railway refused to transport Chinese troops free, whereupon Chinese soldiers seized the trains and precipitated what may become a real crisis. The Russian embassy at Tokio announced that unless China complied with the soviet demands in the matter, immediately releasing the trains and freeing railway officials who were imprisoned, Russia would send an army into Manchuria. She holds the Chinese government responsible for losses and damages occasioned and will insist on compensation. The foreign consuls at Harbin also filed with the Manchurian officials a vigorous protest against the seizure of the trains because of the obstruction of the mails.

STORIES that representatives of soviet Russia are co-operating with Mohammedan leaders in arousing national and international discord are to be investigated by Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, who has just been sent to Egypt and the Near East by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Doctor Pritchett also will make a study of the educational, social and political movements in that part of the world so as to advise the trustees of the endowment as to policies that might be adopted to improve conditions.

CARLOS SOLARZANO having resigned as president of Nicaragua, the office has been assumed by Gen. Emiliano Chamorro. The United States does not recognize the Chamorro government because it is established by unconstitutional means.

War Department Picks Rubber-Growing Areas

Washington.—Procurement experts of the War department, impressed with the seriousness of the rubber situation as it relates to national defense problems, have charted geographical areas where they would prefer to have crude rubber production encouraged. These areas, four in number, were selected after careful studies, chief consideration being given to their climatic and strategic advantages. First priority is given Central America and Porto Rico, second to the South American fields, third to the East African coast and fourth priority is awarded to the Philippine islands.

Reasons for these priority ratings are held as confidential by the War department, but will be disclosed in secret to the house commerce committee investigating the rubber monopoly question. Secretary Davis is planning to give the committee a detailed accounting of the procurement scheme his experts have devised for war-time rubber supplies.

The army's full mobilization plan, known as the six field army mobilization, would make the military rubber requirements for the first two years of a major war 150,000 tons. If all importation should be shut off, it is estimated that current reserve stocks in private hands and increased reclamation of old rubber could provide the army's needs, but would absolutely strip the country of rubber for use in any other way.

Advises Middle-Age Women
Rockford, Ill.—"About five years ago at middle life, I was in very poor health. I suffered a great deal and was oftentimes very despondent. I had dizzy spells and was nervous all the time. It would be impossible for me to exactly describe my feelings. STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Monroe—The board of education has authorized Charles W. Crandell, superintendent of public schools, to install the Educational Thrift bank system of Ypsilanti in the local schools. Dansard's bank will be used as a depository.

Lansing—The Iron Mountain Gas Co. will be permitted to issue $100,000 in bonds to rebuild its plant and extend its service, members of the state public utilities commission indicated. The necessity for expansion was attributed to growth occasioned by the location of a Ford industry near Iron Mountain.

Wyandotte—An association of justices of Wayne county outside of Detroit will be organized at a meeting called for the purpose by Justice John R. Valois, River Rouge, to be held at Highland Park, January 27. The purpose of the association is to get acquainted in a business and social way and to discuss the various problems that may arise in the different portions of the county.

Lansing—The city of Onaway is threatened with one of the most tragic evacuations in Michigan history, according to state employes and others who have visited the town since its major industry, The American Wood Rim company, was destroyed by fire recently. Its population, which was well above 2,000, already has dwindled materially. Scores of families are packing their belongings praparatory to moving, it was said.

Jackson—Chairman H. L. Potter, of the Republican State Central committee, knows nothing of any move to oust Milton Carmichael of Detroit, as secretary of the committee, he said. A dispatch declaring that Potter will call a meeting of the commission for the purpose of removing Carmichael and restoring Dennis E. Alward of Lansing, secretary of the state senate, as state central committee secretary was not substantiated by the state chairman.

Lansing—The De Land-Rogers-Colgrove highway finance controversy continues unabated. DeLand, secretary of state, recently attacked Judge Colgrove, of Hastings, president of the Good Roads commission, for suggesting an increase of the gasoline tax with retention of the present weight tax scale, and assailed Rogers, highway commissioner, for wasteful spending of the state highway monies. DeLand declares that automobile owners are now burdened to the limit with highway taxes.

St. Joseph—St. Joseph took the first steps to carry out the State's wishes with reference to sewage disposal, when the city council authorized the city engineer, James Hampton, to make a preliminary survey and draw up estimates of the cost of a modern sewage disposal plant. The action followed a report by Ald. Dan. T. Hadder, who represented the city at the sanitation conference in Lansing recently. Benton Harbor has not acted as yet and St. Joseph will go ahead independently of her sister city.

Ferndale—Officials of Royal Oak, Ferndale, Pleasant Ridge, and other towns and villages along Woodward avenue as far north as Pontiac, will hold a joint meeting in Ferndale soon with representatives of the Detroit Motorbus and Star Motorbus companies, to hear proposals for additional transportation between the cities and towns. The plans will be presented to the Michigan state public utilities commission in Lansing, January 28. The proposed line will run from the Windsor ferry to Pontiac.

Lansing—It appears probable that Governor Alex Groesbeck will call a special session of the legislature, possibly in February, to strengthen his political position in the state and provide a grand finale to his third term as another election draws near. It was announced in the attorney-general's department that action by the legislature will be necessary to consummate the deal with the Grand Trunk railroad whereby the road surrenders its right of way paralleling Woodward avenue. This will be used as an excuse for the call.

Royal Oak—James D. Newsum, 26 years old, 1118 Longfellow avenue, Royal Oak, has been appointed director of finance by the Royal Oak commission, for a term of one year. As director of finance, Newsum will take over duties which were assumed last year by the mayor and city treasurer and his first task will be to present a budget for 1926. Newsum was born in Olney, Ill., graduated from Detroit City College, is a World War veteran and at one time was purchasing agent for the Concrete Steel company, of Detroit.

Big Rapids—An improved water supply for Big Rapids and a modern method of sewage disposal, the latter costing $300,000, are two problems before the city commission. The commissioners have been informed that Muskegon River water is unsafe for domestic use. They may go to Belding to inspect the water works system there. Independent sewers, which empty into Mitchell Creek and the Muskegon River, must be united by an intercepting sewer leading to a disposal plant if the city is to comply with State requirements.

Saginaw—The Saginaw oil situation took on more than a local development angle with the arrival of representatives of the Sun Oil company, an independent in the field, who have started installation of oil drilling machinery. They will work without any derrick and will start at once. The company has 1,700 acres under lease. The Saginaw Prospecting company has started number four well and located number five. The first three wells are producing steadily. Number three, the last one produced forty barrels a day.

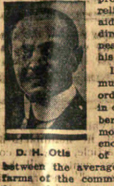
MAKING FARM RECORDS TALK

By D. H. OTIS
Agricultural Director,
American Bankers Association.

Any one who has driven an automobile in a new country knows the value of a good road map. Farm accounts, properly kept, are a reliable road map to aid the farmer in directing the business management of his farm.



D. H. Otis

In farming communities where records have been kept in considerable number it is not uncommon to find differences in net income of $1,000 per farm between the average and the poorer farms of the community. It is also frequently found that there is a difference of over $1,000 between the average farm and a few of the better farms of the community. These differences of from $1,000 to $2,000 per farm in the net income are of vital concern to any farm in any community.

Where to Get the Facts

Farm records and inventories will reveal the reasons for these differences. The various colleges of agriculture and the United States Department of Agriculture have a collection of records and farm management surveys from which they find it possible to construct standards or guides showing actual attainments under good systems of management. Figures of this kind are available to county agents and farmers who desire to use them. It is also possible to organize farm accounting groups in a community and with the help of the College of Agriculture to develop community standards showing what the average and what the better farms are doing. These standards or examples of what the more successful farms are doing, when handled in such a way as not to divulge the identity of the owners, are a wonderful help in pointing out to the less successful farmers the weak spots in the business management of their farms.

How to Use the Facts

The farmer who keeps a careful record of the factors relating to the business management of his farm is in position to compare his farm with the average and with the best in the volume of business, as number of acres, total investment, number of cows, total receipts and total expenses. He can check on his diversity of income by comparing his income from sale of cows, sale of livestock, livestock products and sales from miscellaneous sources. His quality of business can be studied by comparing such items as income per acre or income per cow, etc.

By such a process the farmer is in position to make his records talk to him and point out the weak and the strong features in his farm operation. There is no tax that we pay today that compares with the tax we pay for our ignorance. This is true on the farm as elsewhere. Farm records, including inventories from which it is easy to form financial statements, will do wonders in reducing the tax of ignorance and placing farm business on a business basis and inspire confidence in the farmer, himself and with all those with whom he deals.

Rank Health With Three "Rs" Is Plea

By MARIE K. JOHNSON

As an educational subject for children, health should hold equal rank with the three "R's" in the curriculum of public schools. Doctors declare that without a healthy, sturdy body it is impossible for the child to have a healthy, happy mind.

Marie K. Johnson.

Neglect of childhood defects may result in permanent physical impairment later on. Many childhood ills are traceable directly to malnutrition.

High school students especially need a variety in foods for at this age their growth is rapid. The protein or "building food" should be abundant for high school boys and girls. When they buy their luncheons high school pupils are apt to display a preference for chocolate sodas, cream puffs and candy. An appetizing luncheon put up at home is much to be preferred to the sort the boy or girl might obtain at the corner store near the school.

Meat is all right for the school luncheon but it should be put up in tempting form. If sliced thin it is more appetizing in sandwiches than if in thick pieces. Beverages or soup may be carried in thermos bottles but the bottles must be carefully washed and aired daily after using.

Milk is recommended for an important place in the boy's or girl's diet because of its proteins, minerals, phosphorus and calcium, necessary for the development of the body and in the case of calcium and phosphorus for the building of bone and teeth. Evaporated milk has come into favor as a health builder for children as well as adults because by removal of 60 per cent of the water it is rendered more than twice as rich in food value as ordinary milk and by a process called homogenizing more digestible than bottled market milk.

Crisp lettuce and celery, carefully washed and dried, may be so wrapped in oil paper that they will be fresh and in good condition at lunch time. Lettuce should not be used in sandwiches for wilted lettuce is almost indigestible.

Over two hundred bankers in Iowa recently made an arrangement to attend the Iowa State University for a two-day period and study farming and farm problems. The bankers will sit as students under the professors in the agricultural department, and will dig right down to the bottom of the many subjects which are of mutual concern to themselves and the farmers. This action on the part of the bankers of Iowa shows a real spirit of interest and a determined intention to understand.

Clark County (S. D.) Bankers, have appointed an agricultural committee of five to aid the county agent in putting across the latter's program of work, with especial emphasis on a ten-acre corn contest and eradication of tuberculosis in the county.

There is no road to eminence except the rough and rock-strewn path of toil and hardship.

Experts in peppermint culture in this state are advising the men who raise mint to get into the business heavily next season as the demand for peppermint oil is going to exceed the demand by a large majority and prices are liable to go higher than a cat's back. The process of manufacturing peppermint oil is very simple as little apparatus is required to do the work and in localities where the mucky nature of the soil is good for the plant there is more money to be made in the business than in raising most other crops.

The Coal Situation

There is not much hope held out for the hard coal situation to be settled this winter so say the experts. President Lewis who incited the murdering scrape at Herrin Illinois and his colleagues are on the job this time for certain and he positively refuses to accept any settlement. As a man we don't think much of President Lewis. He may be struggling for a principle but the logical definition of such excuses as he puts up would be more properly called "cussedness." The papers in the mining district of Pennsylvania most of them no doubt influenced by the capitalists, are telling us that the operators are in terribly bad and that every day the mines are closed they are losing great sums of money, which may be true and then again it may not. We are quite positive if the mines remained closed until next fall the operators would never starve but the general public by that time might decide that coal was absolutely an unnecessary evil.

It is commonly supposed the operators and miners are never on speaking terms but such is not true. In some sections of the mine country the miners have dug holes for a short distance down and are taking out coal with a windlass for their own uses. Now all this is going on right under the nose of the company and in their own mine, yet there is no objection. Looks funny now don't it? By a chance it might be possible the mine owners are standing sponsor for the needs of their striking workers, keeping them supplied with fuel and provisions until such time as it is possible to get an agreement with old man Lewis, "the Big Noise" of Unionism. Literary Digest came out with a cartoon the sentiment of which struck us as being very pat though the idea was whiskered with age. It represents a couple of life guards with life belts ready to cast into the deep yet quarreling lustily as to how it shall be done while the poor suffering public out in the deep is just sinking for the last time. Of course the life guards are the miner and the operator while the drowning one is the coal consumers. While the great American public actually sweats blood for the need of fuel these two mannikins are allowed to continue their Punch and Judy performance. Our Government at Washington has power to reach out and grab every piece of privately owned waterpower or forest reserve which some day might be of great value, it has power to print millions of dollars worth of envelopes thus crowding the honest printer to the wall, it has power to declare private property a nuisance and take it for roads and public parks but when the men who dig out fuel which all of us must have get sulky and refuse to work, the Washington contingent is absolutely paralyzed.

Local dealers are non-committal concerning the strike. They will guarantee to you that no anthracite will be seen in these parts until the miners have been at work for several weeks, and then the price will be so high no one will consider it. We are surprised the price of soft coal is so low; seems as if there should be a little impetus added to bituminous prices. Some of our larger city papers are trying to frighten the operators into submission by telling them the public has quit using anthracite and are compromising with bituminous and oil burners—which a pure fabrication. One paper goes on to say that city homes are being equipped by the thousand with oil burners. As a matter of fact the only oil burners which are considered at all safe by insurance companies are so criminally dangerous that none but the rich feel safe in installing them—and moreover so far as known these oil burners have so many faults they are practically a failure. Already the farmer in the this section has got onto the toboggan with his timber and he's going up in wood prices.

Latch String Out For Farmers Week

The latch strings of all doors at the M. S. C. will hang on the outside next week, when the college plays host to thousands of Michigan farmers and their families during the annual Farmers' Week conferences.

An imposing list of brilliant speakers has been completed for the meetings of the week; conferences of more than 30 of the state's leading farm organizations are set; interesting and valuable exhibits on many phases of rural life are in place. In short, the stage is set for the 1926 edition of what is generally accepted as the largest and most important agricultural conference of the year in Michigan

The crowds at Farmers' Week in recent years have averaged around 5,000, and those in charge of arrangements at M. S. C. predict at least as large an attendance this year. With the majority of visitors coming to East Lansing by automobile, weather and roads conditions are expected to play an important part in the attendance figures. Railroads of the state are giving special rates for Farmers Week visitors, however, and this too is counted on as an attendance factor.

the solid rock nearly 300 feet is probably the most famous of ancient wells but the Chinese reached a depth of nearly 1500 feet, using methods similar to modern ones. In Syria near Tyre artesian wells were drilled and the water rises 20 feet above the surface in stone towers. Ancient Water Systems

The early inhabitants of the earth being more interested in the availability and abundance of water than in its quality or purity made their homes along the seaboard and water sourses in general trusting to Nature's inexhaustable reservoirs without fear of their pollution. But as the population increased and moved inland the necessity of pure water soon outgrew the natural supply. and artficial methods of raising water was employed. SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

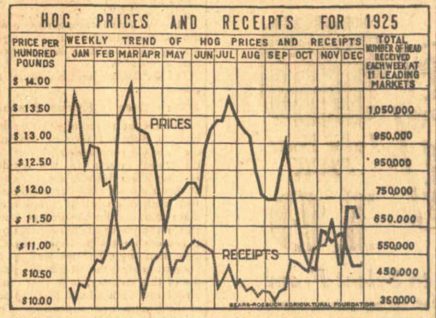
WHILE farm production has not yet assumed a proper relationship to consumption as a whole, states the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, American agriculture has been more properly balanced during the past year than it has for five years, and is slowly reaching correct proportions.

Only three staple farm crop groups, reports the Foundation, showed a decrease in gross farm prices for 1925 as compared with 1924. The crops included were hay, cotton, corn, wheat and one or two small miscellaneous crops. On the other hand, the products which increased substantially in price for 1925 over 1924 were cattle, hogs, sheep, fruits, vegetables, fluid milk, butter, cheese, tobacco, poultry and eggs.

The American farmer is beginning to place some figures on the right-hand side of his ledger for the first time in five years and renewed feeling of national farm prosperity, due to increase of farm prices, is being reflected in the business and industrial prosperity of the entire country.



SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

HOG prices in 1925, according to a market analysis by the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, have been the highest since 1920 and the number of hogs slaughtered nearly 20 per cent less than in 1924 and 1923, when production was at a record level. With prices approximately 50 per cent higher this year than last year, hog producers have had an especially profitable season. The range of prices has run from $10 to almost $14.50 per hundred pounds, the peaks being reached in March, July and September.

The ratio between prices of hogs and corn prices turned favorably for the feeder last spring and is now the best that it has been since 1922. Last spring's pig crop in the corn belt, which is now coming on the market, was estimated to be 10.6 per cent less than the pig crop of the spring of 1924. This indicates that rather high prices are likely to be maintained during most of the 1926 season, unless a very large crop of hogs is produced and pushed rapidly into the markets. Excepting the months of January and February, receipts at the eleven leading markets of the country have gone below the 675,000 level and from June to October have been below the 550,000 mark.

SEARS-ROEBUCK AGRICULTURAL FOUNDATION

THE 1925 wheat market has been one of many surprises for the growers of both winter and spring wheat, states the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation. Owing to unfavorable weather conditions last winter, which caused a large abandonment of winter wheat acreage due to the winter killing of nearly ten million acres, or 22½ per cent of the area sown in wheat, the total crop production in 1925 reached only 669,365,000 bushels as compared to 862,627,000 bushels the year before. With the exception of 1917, this is the heaviest abandonment of wheat area on record. The final harvest averaged only 12.8 bushels per acre, which is the lowest average since 1904. Spring wheat, which looked very promising at first, also lost heavily through injury from rust. The yield per acre was cut down to 12.9 bushels, which is 3.3 bushels below the 1924 average.

The carry-over of wheat from 1924 was moderate. From 635,000,000 to 650,000,000 bushels are required for domestic consumption. Exports up to the end of December were nearly 60,000,000 bushels, and the remaining exportable surplus is small. Both winter and spring combined production totaled 193,262,000 bushels less than in 1924, making it the smallest wheat crop since 1917 in terms of production, and in proportion to population, the smallest wheat crop since 1890.

Because of a belief in a world shortage, wheat prices early in 1925 reached a high level, going up to $1.98. When it became evident that the apparent world shortage had been exaggerated, the market declined rapidly and went as low as $1.46 in April.

programs of their own during the week.

The Barn Question

Quite often in riding through this section of Michigan one will see a new barn towering above the tree tops and many of the splendid structures have what is known as the French or Gothic roof with little or no combing.

Carpenters of the past did not believe it possible to construct a Gothic roof on a barn without extra cost and some fine head work. but to-day the same plan is regarded as feasable and practical. Without the use of expensive milled work such roofs are speedily and firmly constructed by means of springing the rafters to conform to the cotour. Plank are nsed, and drawn down by means of wedges, held in place and spiked.

Scientific men have dug into the archives of the past and decided this form of barn originated right here in Michigan as early as 1885. In Isabella county such barns were built using 2-inch plank sawed on a curve and fastened together to form circular rafters. Later this method was found too slow and expensive, so 1-inch boards sawed on a curve 4 feet long and spiked together, carefully breaking joints. were used,

There are occasional roofs of this design in this township, and it is obvious their clean-cut construction and beauty add many dollars to the value of the farm, also the other feature is a large, unbroken hay and grain storage.

By this means it is possible to obtain a clear swing from purlin plate to peak of 30 feet without brace or beam. Of course hard common sense must predominate in such plans since if the side walls are not firmly tied a terrific spreading strain is brought to bear on the studding. It the big doors are left open during a gale the wind might wreck the structure. In addition to cross ties near the comb of the roof such barns should be built with trestle work at the end studs to prevent high winds from forcing in the walls.

Abraham Lincoln rose to power and influence because he left out of his life the dissipation and trivial things that tend to distract.

Zez Confrey Mixes Salads and Songs

Zez Confrey, famous composer of the musical classic, "The Kitten on the Keys," is hailed by his friends as the most versatile of America's popular song composers. Those who know him say he can mix a salad or a song oddity with equal success, which is saying considerable since his portrayal of the delightful pranks of a certain young feline frisking over the ivories has been recognized as the model of American syncopation.

Zez Confrey.

But Mr. Confrey has other "firsts" in his repertoire, his acquaintances declare. Country bred, he is a judge of horse flesh, and also knows a good cigar.

The simple life is Mr. Confrey's idea of happiness. Every so often Manhattan gets too crowded for him and he boards a train for the country and the companionship of a certain murmuring brook. Inevitably he comes back with one of the merry tunes for which he is noted.

A bachelor, Zez keeps open house for his friends. If he invites a few of the boys over for a midnight supper, he does the cooking himself. Invitations to his lively little dinners are sought after. There are two dishes to which Mr. Confrey is partial. So are his friends. His recipes for the two follow:

- 12 eggs
- Salt
- Pepper
- 1-3 pound mushrooms
- 1 slice pimento
- 2 tbsp. butter
- 12 slices toast
- 1½ cup evaporated milk diluted with
- 1½ cup meat stock (This may be prepared from bouillon cubes)
- 2 tbsp. flour
- Parsley

Saute the mushrooms in two tbsp. butter, taking care not to burn; make a white sauce of two tbsp. butter, flour, evaporated milk and meat stock. Cook five minutes. Add the cooked mushrooms and chopped pimento. Break eggs and drop into hot fat, being careful to keep egg in a globular mass. Just as soon as they are a golden brown lift out and drain. Place an egg on each piece of toast. Allow two pieces for each serving. Pour over all the mushroom sauce and garnish with parsley.

Pineapple-Cheese Salad.

- 10 slices pineapple
- 1 cup cream cheese
- ¼ cup chopped nuts
- 2 tbsp. evaporated milk
- Crisp lettuce leaves
- 1 tbsp. pineapple juice
- 1 tsp. sugar
- Green and red mangoes
- Creamy salad dressing

Combine the cheese, nuts, evaporated milk, pineapple juice and sugar, and blend into a smooth mass. Cut pineapple circles in half. Spread cheese mixture on a slice of pineapple and press the other half circle of pineapple on top of cheese as one would a slice of bread in making a sandwich. Cut diamonds or triangles from green and red mangoes and press into the edge of the cheese mixture between the pineapple. Lay two of the prepared pieces of pineapple on a crisp lettuce leaf. Serve with creamy salad dressing. This serves five.

Superintendent Quits Job when Board Allows Pupils To Have Dance

Because of the jazz music of to-day dances tend to demoralize boys and girls, in the opinion of David Gibbs, who has resigned as superintendent of the Meridan schools. He handed in his resignation Monday night after the board of education agreed to a trial dance at the school. The board's rules provide that no dances shall be held in the school without the sanction of the principal and superintendent. Dr. Gibbs believes there has been no change in dancing conditions since three years ago when high school dances were stopped because of unruly conduct.

He says that in a nearby town the janitor collected many empty whisky bottles after a high school dance recently.

Dr. Gibbs has held his office 15 years.

A WISE STEP IN KANSAS SCHOOLS

The recent action of the Topeka Kansas, School Board in making the Life of Jesus a regular part of the school course in the grades and the High School, is significant of the trend of public sentiment and conviction that something more than secular training is needed for the youth of this generation. If there is anything more significant than any other one feeling at present among the thinking people of this country, it is that religion has a definite and large place in the program of education. The absence of it from the courses prescribed and made compulsory is felt to be an absence that reveals the danger of a one-sided and imperfect definition of the whole thing known as education.

The public schools of America ought to be permitted to teach the living principles that Jesus taught! This can be done without conflict over the principle of separation of church and state. Conduct is a thing which is of universal and necessary importance. Behavior toward one another is not a thing of sectarianism, or theology, or doctrine. The way folks behave is the common way of all peoples, of all creeds and faiths. The teaching of behavior can be separated from perplexing questions of theology, or the theories of different religious bodies.

And, after all, the things that Jesus taught belong to all mankind. What thinking father or mother in America who wants Johnny or Mary to grow up into decent, clean, law-abiding, truthful and happy lives, could possibly object to their learning how to attain these objectives from reading the Life of Jesus and committing to memory the Beatitudes and the substance of the Sermon on the Mount? There is not a scene in the life of Jesus as pictured by the Gospel historian, not a word that fell from his lips, that could by any possibility harm our young folks, and on the other hand all the incidents in Jesus' life and all His teaching about human conduct are invaluable for the training of early childhood, and the study of that matchless Life will do more than any other study to start life off in the right direction—and prevent youthful crime.

The Kansas experiment will be watched with great interest, and we hope it will be followed by all the states. This is no legislation prescribing something that will lead to disagreement over essentials of doctrine or belief. It is simply a recognition of the eternal need of religion, as conduct, being made a part of an educational system. How can character be formed, if little is ever said about it in the classroom, and most of the time is spent in learning facts? To have the life and teaching of Jesus put into the daily course of study in the public school curriculum, is wisdom, and it will bring results in future manhood and womanhood

M. H. S. S. GET CREDIT FOR STUDYING THE BIBLE

A plan which permits Michigan high school students to secure credit for studying the Bible, was announced today by the state department of public instruction. A syllabus has been prepared containing six years of study. Students beginning when they are in the seventh grade, may study in Sunday school, church or at home, with full liberty relative to interpretation and tenets. When the course, as outlined in the syllabus has been completed, examinations will be offered. Credit not to exceed one and one half high school units may be awarded.

SCHOOL BOARD APPROVES BIBLE STUDY IN SCHOOLS

At the regular meeting of the Jonesville School Board Monday night it was unanimously voted that "The Board approve of non compulsory Bible study in the school as arranged by the Department of Public Instruction" of Michigan.

It is expected that those electing it in the seventh and eighth grades may have such a course beginning with the next semester. Bible stories for the lower grades regularly was also approved by the local School Board.

He Has Offered Up His Goat

Hillsdale College Campus among the other notable jokes has just discovered a new one. This time it is "Jack, The Peeper" and he was seen peeping into windows and otherwise conducting himself in a scandalous and highly obnoxious manner near the College. It is not stated whether he was trying to spy on some co-eds or just simply trying to locate a plant. At any rate he was chased out into the country by a band of husky citizens and firemen in big automobiles. They overtook him out Osseo way so tis said and some of the blood thirsty huskies thumped him up in good shape. All efforts to bring about a confession on the part of the President of the institution failed. He says it is a "no publicity" case and has decided to cover up the misdoings of Jack.

It is rumored the rascal has been selling automobiles in Hillsdale so he will probably be obliged to stop the business for the winter or until the excitement wears off. So long as officials of the College prefer to shield said peeper we see no reason why he can't come back in the spring and begin where he left off.

Chick Disease Takes Heavy Toll In State

White diarrhea killed more than three million chicks in Michigan last year.

There is now a positive test to determine this disease, and J. A. Hannah, extension poultry specialist at M. S. C., says the college tested more than 11,000 birds last year and is prepared this year to test three times that number.

The disease is not apparent in older fowls, but is sure death to young chicks which are infected when they emerge from the egg. The only means of eradication, therefore, says Mr. Hannah, is to test the older birds to prevent the flock from producing infected eggs

Practical tests show that flocks which showed an 85 percent infection three years ago, are now reduced to six percent infection by yearly tests and elimination.

Any farmer wishing to test his flock may get full information by writing to the poultry department M. S. C., East Lansing.

Farmers To Hear Of Better State Fairs

Better state and county fairs for Michigan will be the subject of careful study during Farmers' Week at M. S. C. next week. Wednesday Feb. 3, has been set aside as "Fair Day", with most of the talks at the general meetings that day devoted to this important agricultural subject.

Leading the list of speakers who will consider different angles of the problem of building the best possible fairs and expositions will be Governor Alex. J. Groesbeck, who is booked for an address in the afternoon and another at the special Farmers' Week banquet in the evening.

L. Whitney Watkins, state commissioner of agriculture and chairman of the state fair board; Senator Chester M. Howell of Saginaw; secretary of the Michigan fair association; President Kenyon L. Butterfield, Dean R. S. Shaw, and Secretary H. H. Halladay of M. S. C., and others are scheduled on the "fair" program. At the banquet on the evening of Feb. 3, representatives of a dozen leading agricultural organizations of the state will express briefly their ideas on the fair question.

Other special features of Farmers' Week this year will include: the opening of the new M. S. C. horticultural building and a special horticulture day on Thursday, Feb. 4; a livestock day on Feb. 2, with many livestock associations meeting that day; the annual meeting of the state farm bureau, including a banquet and Old Time Party on Thursday, Feb. 4; an enlarged parade and pageant on Feb. 4; a special singing contest for Granges; livestock judging contests for farmers; a special "power" exhibit, covering everything from the horse to electricity; and the usual exhibit and meeting plans which have made Farmers' Week the greatest gathering of its kind in the state each year.

Crime The Result Of Ignorance Of The Bible Laws

Albert B. Hines, Director of the Boys' Club, New York, asserts that 80 percent of the crime in U. S. A. is committed by men or boys who have had no religious training.

Dr. William J. Cox, Philadelphia, writes:—In nine States, he finds. the very name of God may not be mentioned in the public schools, "but anything about any religion under the sun except Christianity is permitted to be taught." He found that in Chicago in the five years up to 1915, out of 55,000 persons below the age of sixteen who had passed through the hands of the police, Fewer than one-sixth had even heard of the ten commandments. In a New York high school with 1985 pupils, when a test case was given and they were told to write anything they know at all about The Ten Commandments, Only 434 were able to write anything. Several graduates of the Newark, New Jersey, high school informed him that they were preparing to become teachers of Socialism, and confessed that they had never heard of the Ten Commandments.

W. Dinnie, Ex-Commissioner of the New Zealand Police, was an earnest advocate of Bible teaching in schools "which would result in more purity of thought, speech, and behavior." So he wrote on September 14th, 1922.

Harry P. Lewis, New York District Attorney (Crown Prosecutor), states:—"Is it to be wondered at that 66 percent of violators of criminal and penal laws are between 18 and 21 years of age, when children are not even taught to know the Ten Commandments. He said: "There is a need of some sort of moral and religious training in the board schools."

A syndicate is being organized here for the purpose of financing a project to reclaim chewing gum from tables and chairs of soda fountains and public eating places. It is claimed that enormous deposits are to be found under furniture of every public place throughout the United States and Canada. The syndicate, with harvesting and manufacturing plants distributed throughout the country expects to be able to place a better chewing commodity on the market than has ever been chewed before, and at a greatly reduced price. The discoverer of the new method claims that shop girls and stenographers can not, at the present prices, afford more than six sticks of gum a day, and that this important living cost can be cut in half. New and varied flavors can be brought out in manufacturing the reclaimed article, i. e., that coming from lumber centers will have a distinct "snoose" flavor, while Italian sections of the large cities will produce the garlic, etc. It is reported that news of the new syndicate's proposed plans caused Wrigley to squirm.—Shevlin Equalizer, Bend, Oregon.

The centenary of the discovery of ease was recently celebrated at Guy's ease was recently celebrated at Guy's hospital, where, a hundred years ago, Dr. Robert Bright made the definite statement that in his opinion a sailor admitted to the hospital complaining of dropsy, and of a large and inflamed heart, owed his condition to disease of the kidneys. Bright's name ranks today among the half dozen greatest of English physicians. Before him the symptoms of the disease with which he will always be associated had been observed again and again, but they had been correlated by no one with damage to the kidneys. His history was peculiar and significant of the spirit which makes for discovery. North America's Richest Virgin Land for $15 to $20 per Acre

"I haven't the chance that Dad had. When he was young land was cheap, but now—"

If that has been your point of view—if you have felt that your father had a chance which is denied to you—think of Canada, the New Giant of the North, with three hundred million acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. You know what has happened in the Western States; use your imagination to picture what must happen in Canada. See the new Iowas rising out of the Canadian prairies!

The soil is newer, richer—and cheaper. Railroads have already opened up the new country. Canada's railroad service is the pride of the Canadian people, and the freight rates on the farmer's products are lower than in the United States. Dollars saved in freight are dollars added to the farmer's bank account. Roads, schools, churches, market towns, rural telephones—they're all there now, awaiting the new settler—awaiting you.

Every Advantage is With Canada

Lower freight rates are not the only advantage. There is lower taxation—no taxes at all on the farmer's house, live-stock, improvements, machinery, and personal effects! And bigger, better crops. The new, rich soil gives a bigger yield per acre, and the high quality brings a better price per bushel. Canada's wheat crop for 1925 is now officially placed at more than 422,000,000 bushels —an increase of 160,000,000 over 1924. Canada's barley crop for 1925 was 113,000,000 bushels—the greatest on record. Oats increased 116,000,000 bushels over 1924. Other crops—dairying—fruit-raising—all kinds of mixed farming—are rapidly increasing. Canada is going ahead!

Canada's farm lands are rich, fertile, and cheap. Only one-fifth of their great area is as yet under cultivation; the other four-fifths offer you your opportunity—the greatest farm opportunity in the world to-day. Good virgin land, close to railways, can be bought at $15 to $20 an acre, with long terms of payment if desired. Free homesteads farther back.

Write for a Canada Book. It's free—pictures, maps, railroad connections, living conditions, full detailed information, including Government's plan for aiding settlers to get suitably located and started right.

SYNOPSIS.—With David, half-breed guide, Brent Steele, of the American Museum of Natural History, is traveling in northern Canada. By a stream he hears Denise, daughter of Col. Hilaire St. Onge, factor at Wailing River, play the violin superbly. He introduces himself and accepts an invitation to make the post his home during his stay. He finds the factor worried and mystied. The "log chateau" is a real home. From St. Onge he learns of the mysterious creature of evil, the Windigo, and the disappearance of a canoe and its crew, with the season's take of furs. Then at night the Windigo gives a weird performance. Even Steele is mystified. David, Steele's Indian, and Michel, St. Onge's head-man, leave for the scene of the canoe's disappearance in an attempt to solve the mystery. St. Onge tells Steele that Lascelles, the company's manager at Fort Albany, seeks his ruin in order to compel Denise to marry him to save her father. Steele and Denise fall in love. Steele finds the track of the Windigo—huge and much like a bear's. David finds the same thing. Tete-Boule, Indian in St. Onge's employ, is caught listening to Steele's talk with David and Michel, and roughly handled.

"What you told me has been respected, sir," interrupted Steele, irritated at the manner of the older man.

"Yes, monsieur," mollified the factor, "we have found you a gentleman. But for a time I suspected you of being a member of the provincial police, and that would have complicated matters."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, if it were ever known up river that the police had stayed here with me for some time before acting against Laflamme, the post might be burned over our heads. They are a lawless crowd, monsieur."

"According to your story you are bound to lose the post whatever happens."

"Yes, but there is Denise."

"I don't understand."

"Monsieur, Laflamme has never stopped at anything. He might not stop there."

"You mean that he—is in love with Mademoiselle St. Onge?"

"Precisely!"

"And might attempt to take her by force?"

"He might attempt anything. He has never respected the law—is a desperate man."

"But they would hunt him down. He could not get away in this country. He would be a madman to attempt it."

"He is a madman, monsieur."

Steele was tempted to laugh in the face of his host. He would shortly have the opportunity of measuring this madman with his own eyes. St. Onge certainly was painting him in strong colors. But they had wandered from the point.

"I have asked you for your confidence," he began abruptly. "If you cannot see your way clear to allow me to aid you, I shall regret it." He was thinking of the girl up at the house.

"Monsieur Steele, we have decided that you deserve our confidence—Denise and I; but I fear it will do no good now. They have got us."

"They?" demanded the American.

"Yes," and the blood mounted to St. Onge's bronzed face as he talked. "I told you that Lascelles had pursued my daughter since the winter we spent at Albany. And now, with the disappearance of this fur, the post can be closed, as it shows a loss under my management. He can force me from the company's service—ruin me. In France I have no property left; it is all gone, and I am an old man, monsieur."

The face of St. Onge was yellow and wrinkled.

"But you will not consent to your daughter—" vehemently protested the younger man, when he was interrupted, with:

"Ah, monsieur, you do not know her. I fear that already she may have involved herself. I have just learned that she sent a letter by the last canoe to Albany."

Steele's deepest instincts revolted at the thought. It was monstrous—unbelievable! Small wonder he had found her playing her heart out at the rapids. He knew now just what hopelessness, what heartache, lay beneath the "Farewell" she had played on the hill. To shield her father's old age from the bitterness of failure and possible penury here, in this new land, she had deliberately offered to destroy that glorious youth of hers—at last capitulated to this intriguing cur of an inspector.

"But that is not all," went on St. Onge. "Shortly before your arrival a canoe brought this letter from Ogoke."

Steele's lean face lighted with curiosity as he started to read the letter handed him by the factor. Then the muscles of his jaw bulged as his teeth ground in anger.

"Monsieur St. Onge,

"Revillon Freres, Wailing River.

"For the third and last time I am writing you in an attempt to make you see the light as a sensible man. I have reason to know that Lascelles is now ready to force your hand. The post has proved a failure, as he intended it should, and you have now to decide between leaving the company or giving your daughter to a man you despise.

"The offer I have made to you, I repeat. From Ogoke Lake we can keep the Revillon Freres, and the Hudson's Bay company out of the Wailing River valley, and control the Swift Current and Drowning River trade as well. In five years we will retire rich.

"I offer your daughter a name honored for generations in Three Rivers. Although I have spent my life in the North, my education has been of the best—not picked up in the barrack room like that of Lascelles. Monsieur le Colonel, the time has come when you are forced to make a choice between us. Join with me, and in a few years your daughter will live in luxury in Montreal or Quebec, and your old age will be provided for; choose Lascelles and you will never see the ice break up on the Wailing, for your Indians will leave you. I have loved your daughter since I saw her at Albany, and can make her happy. Consider carefully before you decide to become the dog of Lascelles. If it is to be that rat of a sous-lieutenant, I warn you now that you will find my arm long. Until the snow flies I will wait for your canoe.

"LOUIS LAFLAMME."

Steele returned the letter to St. Onge with the comment, "Monsieur, you were a soldier of France. To a letter like this there is but one reply—for a soldier." There was a glitter in the eyes of the American as they met those of the older man.

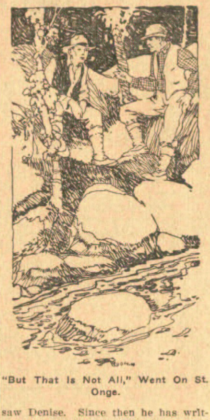
"For a soldier," repeated the Frenchman with excitement, "there is but one reply, 'On guard!' I would kill her with my own hand before giving her to that renegade. Why, there is a white woman now at Ogoke—and to write this insult!"

The American leaped to his feet. "Colonel," he cried, "Laflamme says you won't see the ice leave the Wailing. Let's call that bluff! With your leave, I'll come back on the snow, and we'll watch the ice go out together!"

The hands of the two men met as they silently pledged each other. Then Steele's face sobered as his mind turned to the greater problem that confronted him.

"But Lascelles—how does Laflamme know so much about him?"

"Laflamme was at Fort Albany, four years ago, attempting to make a deal with Lascelles. He was suspected of trying to lure him from the Revillon Freres' employ. It was there he first saw Denise. Since then he has written us many letters. Once he stopped here on his way up river, and threatened to take her away by force if she did not listen to him. She lives in constant fear of him."



"But That Is Not All," Went On St. Onge.

"That explains much," replied Steele. "And the letter she sent to Lascelles—when did it go downriver?"

"With the search party from Albany. Long before you reached here—as much as two weeks."

"And this letter evidently accounts for her depression—her sadness."

"Yes. This matter—and her fear of Laflamme. She believes that he will keep his word—try to use force. As for the letter, she refuses to tell me what she wrote, but I can guess."

"And of course Lascelles will show up here before the river closes, since she has at last listened to him?" Her inexplicable, "There is no way out for the lost," was now clear.

"That is what I fear—"

"But what do you intend to do, monsieur? You must have some plan," impatiently demanded Steele.

"What can I do? I've told her that I shall never consent to it; that I would kill her and myself first."

There was no solution of this problem in the mind of the American. It was a situation which seemed hopeless indeed. If she refused to listen to her father she surely was too proud to brook interference from a stranger. She had burned her bridges, yet something must be done—something to prevent her self-destruction. But what? And then, he remembered with a start, there was this Windigo matter.

CHAPTER V

The following morning the three friends were loading their canoe preparatory to ascending the river on a round of the fall camps of Indians trading at the post, when the flash of a paddle far upstream aroused their interest.

"Dat ees queer t'ing," commented Michel, scowling darkly. "Eef M'sieu Laflamme come to mak' trouble, he weel fin' plenty here."

At the mention of Laflamme, David's small eyes narrowed; the muscles of his thick forearms worked nervously as though he already felt his fingers at the throat of the free-trader. Steele's curiosity was keenly aroused, for it was too late in the year for the canoe of a trading hunter to visit the post; this boat was undoubtedly from Ogoke. What new scheme had Laflamme in mind? It would be four weeks before the winter would break —the limit he had given St. Onge for his answer.

It was not long before the hard-driven craft was close enough to disclose but a single occupant. And shortly, as it neared the shore, Michel called:

"Bo'-jo! bo'-jo! Pierre! W'at you do here so far from de Feather lake?"

The Indian grounded his boat on the beach and shaking the hand of the head-man, replied in Ojibway as David and Steele joined them:

"Bo'-jo, Michel! The hunters at the Feather lakes are leaving for the Medicine Hills country. For three nights the Windigo howled on the burnt ridge by Big Feather lake. The people are weak with fear; they will not trap there this winter."

"Did you hear the voice of the Windigo, Pierre?" asked Michel gravely.

"No, I was netting whitefish at the Lake of the Deep Water. When I returned to the camp they were leaving. There will be no trap lines in that valley this long snows."

"Did the people see the tracks of the Windigo?"

"No, their blood was cold in their veins. They did not stay to look for a trail. Why should they? They were afraid."

"But why did you leave your family for the Windigo to eat and come here; last spring you traded your fur at Ogoke?" rasped Michel so savagely that the Ojibway backed away, for the raw-boned Iroquois was feared the length of the Wailing.

"I need shells for my gun, and Ogoke is far," weakly replied the other, his eyes shifting uneasily.

The swart features of Michel twisted with anger. "You lie, you have plenty shell!" he replied, fiercely, returning to English for Steele's benefit. "You travel here to mak' trouble wid your beeg talk of de Windigo." And the long arm of the exasperated headman shot out a crushing blow in the face of the Ojibway.

As the Indian staggered back with a cry from the attack of the infuriated Iroquois, Steele stepped between them, and pushing Michel aside, ordered sternly:

"That's enough!"

The cowed Indian, nursing his bleeding lips, and protesting his innocence, left the men on the beach and joined the post people who were excitedly discussing the coming of the stranger and his reception at the hands of Michel.

"Evidently you don't like that Pierre," laughed Steele. "What made you so mad?"

"I t'ink he cum here to talk to Tete-Boule," was the significant reply. "Dey weel mak' de medicine tonight to scare de Windigo."

"What, is he a shaman—a conjuror, too?"

"He claim he ees beeg medicine man, one of de Midewiwin, so I t'ink he put de devils een me now." Then Michel related what had passed between him and Pierre.

"But you can't blame him for fearing the Windigo, or for coming here if it is nearer his hunting grounds than Ogoke."

The inscrutable Iroquois faced Steele with snapping eyes.

"Many long snows fall, m'sieu, seence de 'Jibway starve out on de Wailing riviere. Maybe ten—maybe more. Many die all tru dees countree dat long snows, for eet was de year of de rabbit plague and dere were no moose. Dees Pierre cum to Fort Mamatawan dat spreeng an' say hees woman die, but I go to hees camp dat summer, an' I fin' her bones een de bush een two, three place—all roun' He keel hees woman—and left her in de snow for de wolverines an' fox—she nevaire starve. He ees no good. He cum here to mak' de trouble an' scare our people."

Pierre also apparently has a part in the conspiracy. Is Laflamme back of the Windigo scare?

Changes in Men's Dress

The wig and the pigtail went out of fashion early in the Nineteenth century and gentlemen wore their hair rather long and freely oiled. Loose cossack trousers, high-waisted vests, and voluminous cravats were in fashion, the shirt collar was often worn turned up with the points showing above the cravat. The coat cut away squarely in front went out of date late in the Nineteenth century.

East Indians Protect and Feed Wild Animals

A visitor walking along the dirty, dusty streets of Ahmadabad, India, a city which has 250,000 inhabitants, is often surprised at the number and size of the feeding places for birds. Some of these are built of marble and cost several thousand dollars. Sometimes there is a simple feeding platform supported by a single column. The platforms, which are from 12 to 20 feet above the street level, are reached by little stairways.

The wild birds come fearlessly to these feeding places and mingle with the pigeons and English sparrows. The feed is spread out on the floor and covered with a well-constructed roof which protects the birds from the fierce heat of the sun and also from the rain.

The Jains are the wealthier class of Indians. In their temples boxes are provided into which the worshipers drop coins for the purchase of bird feed. For the Jains, in common with all Hindus, do not believe in taking animal life.—Boys' Life.

Quaint Custom

By a curious law dating back to 1779, all the grapes left on the vines after the harvest in the vineyard at Beziers, France, go to the benefit of the poor and the owners can be fined for picking the culls.

"Why, Uncle Jim! You look ten years younger!"

"When I saw you a couple of months ago, I made up my mind you were getting old. At least you looked it."

"Yes, Billie, and I felt old. No appetite, couldn't sleep nights — one day just like another, and none of them any good. I knew constipation was at the bottom of it, but it seemed the more laxatives I took the worse I got. Then one day I saw Nell giving Nujol to my little grandson. The doctor had prescribed it for the baby, but I found out it's just the thing for old fellows like me, too.

"I tell you, Billie, it keeps me feeling fine all the time. My appetite's back and I sleep like a child. If I look any younger, Nujol gets the credit."

Nujol helps Nature in Nature's own way

Middle age brings on a decrease in the natural lubricating secretions in the intestine. Then you need Nujol. It supplies the deficiency of the natural lubricant. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is gentle, safe and natural in its action.

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. Nujol simply softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles. It is not a medicine.

You can take Nujol for any length of time without ill effects. It should be taken regularly in accordance with the directions on each bottle. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today and begin to enjoy the perfect health that is possible only when elimination is normal and regular.

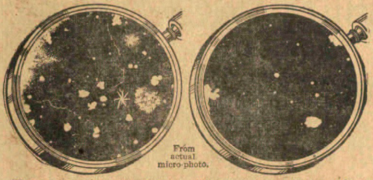
Changed Methods in Handling Milk



Where proper sanitary measures are neglected the bacteria in a drop of milk look like this.

Where sanitary precautions are taken there are few harmful bacteria in milk. The white specks are bacteria.

How much do the farmers and dairymen of the United States pay in toll to bacteria in milk? In process of arriving at the answer to this question, representatives of leading milk and dairy products companies of New York recently met with officials of the State Agricultural Experiment Station, with the Department of Farms and Markets and the College of Agriculture at the Experiment Station, Geneva.

The bacterial count is being used more and more as a basis for determining how much per pound a farmer is to be paid for his milk. Getting the bacterial count under a given figure means millions of dollars annually to Uncle Sam's dairymen. Dairymen, themselves, are alive to this question, and where the milk produced is a material part of the income from the farm, complete sanitary precautions are being taken to insure a low bacterial count in the milk.

Precautions start at the beginning of milk production and continue clear through until the time the milk is in the hands of the consumer. To begin with, properly ventilated, easily cleaned stables are provided; plenty of bedding is given the cows; platforms are built the right length to accommodate the particular breed of cows that are kept; the gutter is built wide and deep; the animal is clipped about the udder and flanks periodically. The cows are groomed carefully every day and just before milking, loose particles of dirt are brushed off, or, when the cow is clipped, wiped off with a damp cloth. Small top milk pails are used to receive milk from the cows. Utensils such as milk pails, milk cans, milking machines and separators, are thoroughly sterilized after each milking.

The fresh-drawn milk is immediately removed to the cooling tank where it is cooled to a temperature of 50 degrees to 60 degrees Fahrenheit.

On receipt at the dairy, the creamery or the condensery, the same extreme sanitary precautions prevail. White garbed workers who have passed medical inspection, who observe rules of personal cleanliness as well as hygiene in the handling of milk and milk products, go about their duties efficiently and intelligently. Immediately after the pasteurizing of whole milk, it is bottled and capped. The date of bottling is stamped on the cap and the milk is usually sold before 36 hours have elapsed since pasteurizing.

What a difference over the old-time methods of handling milk!

It is these changed methods in the handling of the nation's milk supply that has swelled the individual consumption of milk to more than 54 gallons per year.

Michigan Farm Women Drive Own Cars, Survey Reveals

More than 76 percent of Michigan farm women drive their own cars. A study of conditions surrounding 577 typical farm homes, by Mrs. Mary C. Puncke of the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, brought to light that 76.6 percent of the women in these typical Michigan farm homes have cars at their disposal and drive them.

A number of other interesting things concerning conditions in the Michigan farm home and the woman who presides over it were revealed in the survey. For instance it was found that 51.5 percent of the women still carry water from an outside source; and that only 33.4 percent of the homes enjoy the luxury of a sink and drain. More than 47 percent still use the old wash board for the family laundry, and only 6.5 percent reported power washers on the premises. Only 6.5 percent of the homes were found to have bathtubs. Butter is being made by nearly 70 percent of these farm women and while the old tradition that the "butter and egg money belong to the "missus" still rules in about half of these homes, the "missus" almost without exception, spends it for groceries, shoes, and school books for her family. The keeping of income and expense accounts is reported by 8.6 percent of the women in the homes covered.

Mrs. Puncke's survey, which covered farm homes in Michigan and other middle western states, brought out some sharp contrasts in existing home conditions in Michigan and some of her neighbor states. While fewer women in Michigan were reported as carrying water from outside sources than the average in other states, the number of Michigan farm women who reported hand power washers in their homes was almost twice the average elsewhere. Although bath tubs are scarcer in Michigan than in some other states there is a larger number of women in the state who drive their own cars. And while the number of Michigan women making butter is more than the average for surrounding states, not nearly as many women in this state keep expense accounts as compared to women in other sections.

The Pitiful Case of Evelyn Thaw

The glamour of the famous Thaw murder case several years ago has passed into history, but the cadavers of those dissolute times are with us yet. Harry has escaped from the asylum by some means and is allowed to roam the country at will, presumably thru' the magic influence of money, but poor old Evelyn, what of her?

How she has deteriorated! At the time of her escapade with her paramour, the grey-haired White, Evelyn Nesbit Thaw was depicted as the beautiful but erring daughter of New York's great underworld and her pictures were seen on many of the front pages of the land. The reporters made the most of her licentious life and championed her case far and wide. As a member of the Florodora chorus in New York city she danced her way to fame or (ill-fame) while the reading public went dotty about the case

Poor Harry had to take the abuse red a stark lunatic who by some chance had escaped the bug-house, when as a matter of fact he was the most sane of the two. The newspaper lies which were framed up on the public at the time were enough to shame Old Nick. What were the results? Prosecutor Jerome endeavored to fix a stigma on Thaw and send him to the noose but the indictment would not hold and the asylum reached forth its ghastly paw and gathered him in. He settled down for a few years to amuse himself as best he might until public sentiment forgot his misdoings.

Stanford White, as brought out in the evidence, was a whited sepulcre and decayed to the core, but owing to the difference in social standing, was lauded as a martyr. His chiefest amusements were ruining young girls and practicing dissipation. Thaw was of the same stamp, except he was more amateurish and brazen. Between the two men there was little to choose.

Harry is still at his old trade, made possible by an immense fortune, and goes about the cities engaged in chasing the blue stockings, occasionally running afoul of the authorities.

He is a parasite on society and on his own family, but it appears Evelyn is by far the worst sufferer.

She is a ragmuffin outcast whom nobody owns—a sensual drunken hag—with the same prospects ahead as any common prostitute. Not much can be said at her funeral obsequies when they occur, and no famous divines will strive for the honors. According to tradition her funeral should be held at "the little church around the corner," but probably it won't be.

Her logical demise will be in a charitable Bellevue and her resting place the cold clods of some potter's field. Her life should be a horrible example to flappers of the present time who want to cut a great swish. The wages of immorality is oblivion.

Bert Brown who recently went to Florida. returned home on Saturday via Chattanooga, Tenn., and did considerable sight-seeing along the route and reports that Florida is splendid for winter residence. He inspected Lookout Mountain and other historic points and while in Florida saw a number of acquaintaces from this vicinity.

Flutell Thompson and wife returned from California last Friday called home prematurely by the illness of Daniel Hoxie. Mr. Hoxie is improving we understand. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson report they are more than pleased with California, especially in the vicinity of Pasadena where their son-in-law, Jay Carney, and family reside.

Miss Donna Lynch and J. W. Lynch spent last week end at their home. Miss Lynch took up her new duties at the Marcy school this week having received a promotion to Auditorium work. She was guest of honor at a luncheon at the Whittier last week given to her by fellow-teachers at the Smith house in honor of her promotion. Miss VanDyke, her former principal, is also entertaining for her this week.

The Woman's Club was entertained at the home of Mrs. A. J. Calhoun Monday Feb. 1st, with a good attendance. Some of the ladies were dressed in colonial costume. The following program was given: Roll call, Washington or Lincoln Anecdote. Patriotic music by the club in charge of Lois Holcomb. "Story and Romance of the Flag", Mrs. Mildred Hunt. Parliamentary Drill in charge of Miss Ethel Clement.

A short piece of light fence board fastened to a turkey's back will prevent flying over a fence, so say the agriculturists. Cut a notch or bore a hole in the board and with a cloth string tie the board to the wings. When the wings are raised they strike the board and flying is prevented. The length of the board should be equal to the thickness of the turkey's body, and should lie crosswise of the body.

The sad killing of Delmar Page near Coldwater last Tuesday at two o'clock in the morning is a reminder that we need capital punishment in Michigan. Such desperadoes should be placed in the electric chair speedily. Delmar showed the metal men are made of. He was willing to surrender his life to protect the cash. The robbers escaped about 15 minutes ahead of Sheriff Midgley who had been called by the wounded man. The gas station is isolated from other habitation.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist church met at the parsonage Tuesday.

The Womans Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist church met with Mrs. J. F. Duguid Wednesday afternoon.

The Womans Circle of West Adams was be held at the home of Mrs. Grace Williams Feb. 4 on account of the illness of Mes. Mable Goodacre.

The Woman's Missionary Union of the Congregational church was very pleasantly entertained at the Congregational parsonage by Mrs. Hunt on Wednesday afternoon. A talk on "Home Missions" was given by Mrs. Fay Elliott of Hillsdale, who is well known in this village. Mrs. Hunt gave a solo and refreshments were served. A large attendance is reported.

In the absence of Miss Christine Grippen the fourth number of the Senior Lecture Course was given by Miss Irene Thomas on Tuesday evening at the Congregational church in this village. Miss Thomas is an amusing mimic and her clever elocutionary work is of high class, particularly the rendering of juvenile types and the Jew tradesman. The house should have been crowded but was not comfortably filled owing in part to the poor advertising service which the Course has received this season. Most Lyceum Bureaus furnish free of charge boiler plate to be used preceding the event in the local newspaper and all that remains to be done is to carry these plates to the printer and even this has failed here. Suitable advertising of the lecture course would have materially increased the ticket sales. The morning following this entertainment parties some distance out in the country called here by telephone asking for the date of last night's show, but of course it was too late. This is a lamentable fact and the faculty should see to it these Lyceum people are advertised as they deserve otherwise the performance will fail.

Just A Moment, Please

Most of our readers are probably familiar with the loss sustained by Mr. Burl Shambaugh in the burning of his house recently purchased. The house burned to the ground on Thursday of last week supposedly from a defective chimney. The damage to Mr, Shambaugh is considerable and in view of the sickness in his family, the misfortune is doubly severe. All monies paid on the petition will be turned over to Mr. Shambaugh to do as he pleases with. We request on behalf of Mr. Shambaugh that as many as feel able, contribute to this worthy cause. In view of doctors bills and other necessary expenses any assistance will be most heartily appreciated. You can remit to Mr. Shambaugh or Mr. Denning. We are all subject to losses and no one knows who will be next.

Parent-Teacher's Meeting

Next P. T. A. meeting will occur Monday evening February 8th at the school building in this village and it is hoped a large number will be present as something of interest is to be given. Dr. Don C. Lyons expert dentist of Jackson will be present and give a lecture on children's teeth and their needs. This is one of the most vital subjects concerning young folks of the day and should be heard by everybody. Dr. Lyons is a graduate in dentistry and is from the Mayo clinic at Rochester Minnesota. In his practice at Jackson for some years, he has made a specialty of children's dental diseases, and he will bring to your attention an array of facts that will surprise you, The mental acumen of children and their progress in school is often seriously retarded by bad teeth and resulting causes.

The aim of the P. T. A. is to improve the social and physical condition of the students by means of a better understanding between teacher and parent.

At a recent meeting of the Board of the North Adams Library Association, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year; Pres. Mrs. Wolcott; vice pres. Mrs. Bauman; sec.-treas. Murel Owen; Executive Committee, Mrs. J. Jones, Mrs. Blackmer and others to be appointed to act on Board.

It was voted to pay Librarian Fifty dollars a year for services at the Library, which will be opened to the public Saturdays from two till four p. m., and 7:00 to 8:00 in the evening.

For the benefit of high school students the Library will be opened every Wednesday afternoon from three till four. New books have been ordered, a list of which will appear next week. Mrs. Bertha Stranger will act as Librarian for the year.

Anyone having a large bookcase book rack or shelves, or common chairs which they wish to sell at a reasonable price, or donate to the Library, please notify Mrs. Wolcott or Mrs. Bertha Stranger. New books are being ordered and the present shelves are full. A long table is also needed for magazines, reference books, etc.

Death of Beecher Speer

Beecher Speer living east of this village two miles passed away at his home from appoplexy after a short illness of only two hours, Tuesday about 3:00 p, m. Mr. Speer had been in his usual health, in fact he had felt extra well the past few weeks, and his death came as a shock to the many friends in this vicinity.

Beecher C. Speer was born in Lodi, Washtenaw county, Michigan in November 1851, and entered the Beyond February 2, 1926 aged 74 years, 2 months and 16 days. He came to Hillsdale county when two years of age settling with his parents on the farm across the highway, now owned by J. Edgar Kempton and wife.

Here 72 years of his life have been spent in hewing out the foundations of a home. He was married to Miss Carrie Kempton in 1871, and to them were born three children, Jeptha P., of Hollywood, Florida, Mrs. Isabel Hawley of Seattle, Washington, and Bert at home, all of whom survive, with one grand-child, Ronald Hawley.

Funeral services will be conducted at the home at one o'clock standard time, Sunday, February 7th, Rev. Virgil Hunt of the Congregational church officiating and interment will be in the local cemetery.

In a Meat Market are absolutely necessary in order to keep the insiduous waste from interfering in keeping both stock and fixtures neat, fresh and wholesome.

A place to buy your Steaks, Chops and Roasts not contaminated by objectionable odors, arising from aforesaid wastes, is what we guarantee our customers. Groceries especially require sanitary surroundings.

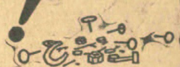
It might have been YOUR COW!



Newspaper stories tell regularly of valuable, high-producing cows killed by nails or other junk in their feed.

That may happen any day to the cow you value most, unless you use a dairy feed that is free from dangerous foreign materials when it leaves the mills.

Every feed manufacturer owes it to you dairymen who feed his ration to see to it that his product is clean when it reaches you.

Dairymen get a guarantee of this "cleanliness"—this freedom from foreign materials with every sack of Larro. A special electro-magnetic process makes it impossible for wire, nails, tag hooks, screws, etc. to remain in the finished feed.

This insurance costs you nothing; it may save you much. Feed Larro—the SAFE ration for dairy cows.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is usea: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Senate Votes U. S. Into the World Court, but With Strong Reservations.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

BY A vote of 76 to 17 the senate has decided that the United States shall adhere to the permanent court of international justice, better known as the world court. Thus the long fight over this question has come to an end and the administration forces have triumphed with the assistance of all but three of the Democratic senators. However, it is a modified victory for the proponents of the world court, for America's entry is so hedged about with reservations that it may be many months or even years before it actually is a member, and there is no certainty that it will ever be a party to a case before the tribunal.

In the first place, it is provided that all other member nations must accept the American reservations, and the process of obtaining these acceptances may be a long one. Refusal by any one nation, no matter how insignificant, invalidates the senate action. Then—and this is especially important—one of the reservations provides that recourse to the court for the settlement of difficulties between the United States and any other state can be had only by agreement through a treaty between the parties in dispute. Since every treaty is subject to senate approval, this means that no cause involving the United States can be submitted to the court without the approval of the senate by a two-thirds vote.

Five other reservations were adopted almost unanimously by the senate, as follows:

That adherence to the world court "shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the treaty of Versailles."

Permitting the United States to participate in the council and assembly of the League of Nations equally with all other nations in the election of judges of the world court.

That the United States should pay a fair share of the world court's expenses by congressional appropriation.

That the United States may at any time withdraw from the world court and that the statute of the court shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

That the court shall render no advisory opinion, except publicly and after due notice to all states adhering to the court and after opportunity for hearing any state concerned, and that the court shall not, without the consent of the United States, entertain any request for any advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

These reservations were put in their final shape by Democratic leaders and John Bassett Moore, the present American judge in the world court. All others which were offered by opponents of the resolution were rejected.

It is worth while recording the names of those who voted against the resolution on the final ballot. They were: Republicans: Borah, Brookhart, Fernald, Frazier, Harreld, Johnson, La Follette, Moses, Nye, Pine, Robinson (Ind.), Schall, Watson and Williams. Democrats: Blease, Reed (Mo.). Farmer-Labor: Shipstead.

Just before the final vote was taken Senator Johnson of California had a last word to say, a dramatic warning to his colleagues that they were taking the first step into the League of Nations, altering the traditional policies of the United States, and "cutting loose to sail on an uncharted sea."

Senator Borah, leader of the opposition to the world court, declares the fight has only begun and that he and his associates intend to launch a movement at once to get the country out of the court and will make this an issue in the election of senators next November. He says he does not see how we are going to remain outside of the league if we stay in the court.

HAVING disposed of the world court matter, the senate on Thursday began consideration of the tax reduction bill, which was made its unfinished business so that it could be kept continuously before the chamber. Chairman Smoot of the finance committee hopes to have the measure passed by February 10, but certain of the western senators have promised a long fight against the provisions for repeal of the inheritance tax and of publicity for income tax payments. Norris of Nebraska has offered an amendment providing that returns "shall be open to examination and inspection as other public records under the same rules and regulations as may govern the examination of public documents generally." The effect of this would be not only to permit public inspection of amounts paid by taxpayers, but also to throw the returns, which at present are secret documents, open to any one desirous of perusing them.

WITH only three votes against it, the administration Haugen measure establishing a co-operative marketing division in the Department of Agriculture was passed by the house. The big fight in congress is over the Dickinson farm surplus bill. Experts are far apart in their opinions of the wisdom of this measure. Such agriculturists as Frank O. Lowden are warm in approval, while many trade economists, notably John W. O'Leary, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, feel that it is in effect a price-fixing measure and would prove disastrous to those whom it is intended to benefit.

Representatives of the eleven states that compose the corn belt met in Des Moines Thursday to formulate a relief plan designed to place agriculture on a money-making parity with manufacturing and business enterprises. This plan embraces three main features: An export corporation to dispose of surplus agricultural products; provision by congress for a federal farm board to stabilize agriculture and put it on a parity with other business; removal of the pure food law discriminations against corn sugar. An executive committee of two from each of the eleven states was named to draft the plan into a measure and to push its passage in congress.

TERRIFIC gales swept the north Atlantic last week and all the liners were delayed. The storm took its toll of lives when the British freighter Laristan foundered off Halifax, twenty-five members of her crew being drowned. Another British freighter, the Antinoe, was disabled by the tremendous seas and the United States liner President Roosevelt, commanded by Captain Fried, stood by for four days, making repeated efforts to save the crew of twenty-five. The heroic work of Fried and his men was finally successful, though two of the rescuers lost their lives. Capt. Herbert Hartley of the Leviathan said the gale was the worst he had seen in thirty years.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE formally approved the court-martial sentence of Col. William Mitchell, but changed it so the colonel should receive half pay and his allowances "during the pleasure of the President." Two days later Colonel Mitchell resigned from the army, and it was believed his resignation would be accepted. It is understood Mitchell will go on the lecture platform to continue his campaign for development of aviation, but many persons believe he will find it difficult, as a civilian, to hold the public interest.

CHANCELLOR LUTHER presented to the German reichstag the names of his new cabinet members and an outline of their policies, but was met with glum silence except for the howling of Communist deputies. The Nationalists objected to his omission of the conditions they demand as the price of Germany's entry into the League of Nations. The Socialists were disappointed by the vagueness of his reference to German membership in that body. They were also annoyed still more by his rejection of a popular referendum of the claims of the Hohenzollerns and other former reigning families against the republic. Next day, announcing himself as absolutely in favor of fulfillment of the Locarno pact, Doctor Luther issued an ultimatum to the warring factions, demanding a vote of confidence for his government. He made more definite his recommendation of membership in the League and thereby gained the silent support of the Socialists, but even so it was evident that the fate of the cabinet hinged on the chance absence of a very few deputies.

The reichstag gave Luther his vote of confidence by 160 to 150, those who abstained from voting numbered 131, mostly Socialists. This slight majority was obtained only after President von Hindenburg had threatened to dissolve the reichstag if opposition continued.

Wednesday was the sixty-seventh birthday of the former kaiser, and the Berlin Fascists who celebrated the anniversary engaged in a sanguinary battle with the Communists who were burning Wilhelm in effigy. The police were forced to fire on the mob, wounding many.

VISCOUNT TAKAAKI KATO, premier of Japan, is dead of influenza, and political conditions in Tokyo are chaotic as a result. R. Wakatsuki is acting premier. It is expected the diet will be dissolved shortly. Kato was one of his country's most accomplished statesmen.

ALL the civilized world, with the possible exception of Germany and her late allies, joined the Belgians in mourning the death of Cardinal Mercier, whose heroic stand against the invaders of his country gave him lasting fame. On Thursday Belgium paid formal tribute to the memory of her beloved primate and the king as chief mourner walked through the streets of Brussels after the coffin while minute guns boomed and massed army bands played funeral marches. With King Albert marched Prince Leopold, the heir apparent, and Marshal Foch, generalissimo of the allied armies in the war; and in the long procession were the diplomatic representatives of many nations. Services were held in the Cathedral of St. Michel and St. Gudule where the body of the prelate rested on a magnificent catafalque. On Friday the body was taken back to Malines and buried with great pomp beneath the altar of the Cathedral there.

ITALY, by what some correspondents describe as strong arm methods involving threats against peace in the Near East, has persuaded Great Britain to grant her very easy terms in the funding of her war debt—better terms than were obtained from the United States. Count Volpi and Winston Churchill have signed the agreement by which the Italian debt is settled for about one-sixth of its value.

Premier Mussolini and his government are being roundly abused by the Germans for their repressive measures in south Tyrol, where they are determined to Italianize the German inhabitants. The latest decree orders the Italianization of all German family names that were originally Italian.

TWO Spanish aviators started last week from near Cadiz to fly in a seaplane to Buenos Aires, Argentina, and before this reaches the reader they may have accomplished the feat. Their first hop took them to the Canary islands, and from there they flew to the Cape Verde islands. The next hop was to be 1,432 miles to Fernando Noronha island, or possibly 275 miles further to Pernambuco.

FRANCE believes that investigation of the great French franc forgery plot in Hungary will reveal that it can be traced to German monarchist sources, and therefore Premier Briand demanded that French officials should be permitted to participate in the police cross-examinations of the plotters, among whom are princes, nobles and high politicians. The Hungarian government made a show of yielding reluctantly, but the well informed said that the incident was really a victory for Premier Count Bethlen, since it afforded him an opportunity to bring about a full exposure of the conspiracy without incurring blame from the extremists who have been seeking to unseat him.

Aged Empire Builder Applies for Pension

Denver.—Colorado friends of Dick Rutledge, last survivor of Kit Carson's famous band of Indian scouts, who now lives in Denver, are trying to have congress pass a special act granting him a pension so that he may pass his declining years in comfort.

The veteran also served the government in other ways, once under Gen. Phil Sheridan, but was never enlisted regularly. For this reason he is not eligible for a pension unless special legislation provides for him.

In appearance the eighty-year-old plainsman is almost the double of the late Buffalo Bill, his co-scout. Like Colonel Cody, Rutledge has flowing locks, sweeping mustache and goatee. He towers 6 feet 3½ inches, greater in height by 1½ inches than Buffalo Bill

A vivid memory of Rutledge is the time he and Carson, in the spring of 1868, were attacked by 70 Apaches in a lonely pass on Trincharee mountain, near the Colorado-New Mexico line. For 48 hours they stood off the band, killing nearly a dozen before escaping under cover of darkness.

With Sheridan, Rutledge took part in several pitched battles with Indians. Once they pursued a band of Comanches and rescued two white women that had been captured three years previously. During all his adventures with Cody, Carson and Sheridan, Rutledge escaped with but two minor arrow wounds.

Infirmities due to advanced age have incapacitated the veteran.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Mt. Clemens—Agitation has been begun in Macomb county for the erection of a new county building that will also house the city offices of Mt. Clemens. The present quarters are so cramped that it is no longer possible to provide room for valuable court records.

Mt. Pleasant—The maximum civil war veteran's pension of $72 per month has been allowed William Robinson of Mt. Pleasant, according to word received from the bureau of pensions by Representative Roy O. Woodruff. Robinson served in Company H, Ninth Regular Michigan Cavalry.

Mt. Clemens—Sheriff George Smith is investigating charges of arson against Urban Kruger, of Roseville. Kruger was brought to the county jail on complaint of his family. He is alleged to have driven the family from the home and kicked the stove over. The home burned to the ground.

Lansing—A permit to operate passenger-carrying motor busses between Detroit and the Ohio line, via Fort road, Ecorse road, Telegraph road, Flat Rock and Monroe, was granted the Detroit & Toledo Trackless Coach company by the state public utilities commission. The company will operate four 29-passenger vehicles.

Armada—The Grand Trunk station here burned recently. Fire from an unknown cause completely destroyed the small frame structure, with a loss of about $3,000. The building was heated by a stove. Large grain elevators and buildings owned by the railroad, situated nearby, were not damaged, as they are south of the station, while the heavy wind was from the southwest.

Cadillac—Reports reaching the Michigan Potato Growers' Association say that the potato market is weak and the demand slow in Chicago and Eastern cities, due to the dumping of shipments by Western growers, according to George Wager, the manager. The exchange sold stock from $3.90 to $4 per hundredweight, f. o. b. Cadillac, but sales are falling off somewhat.

Fordson—The village of Fordson will hold a pre-primary convention in Henry Ford school February 6, at which time candidates will be nominated for the offices of Mayor, councilman, justice of the peace, associate justice and constable. Practically every voter of the village is expected to attend. In addition to naming candidates, those who attend will appoint a committee to examine into the qualifications of the choices. The primary election will be held March 3.

Lapeer—Fire of unknown origin destroyed the Hotel Melanie at North Branch recently. The passing of this land mark recalls the early days of North Branch to many of the older residents. Tom Melaine, who died about two years ago, built the hotel more than 40 years ago and it was known far and wide as one of the best taverns in the state. This was before the passing of the eighteenth amendment. A dance hall was run in connection with the hotel and was well patronized.

Lansing—Cities and towns in the Saginaw River basin have pledged themselves to prepare plans for disposing of their sewage and submit them to the state for approval within six months. Saginaw, Bay City and Owosso expressed a willingness to co-operate with the state in its effort to halt stream pollution. Some of the smaller towns expressed apprehension at the financial burden disposal plants might bring, but promised to act in accordance with the "best public interests."

Owosso—To protect thousands of bass planted in the lakes and streams of Shiawassee County during the past year, the Shiawassee County Sportsmen's Association will ask the State Conservation Commission to close all waters in the county to fishermen from April 1 to June 15. A similar order is now in effect in Genesee and Oakland counties. The association also will work for a closed season the year around on fox squirrels. Members declare the animals are becoming extinct in the state.

Alma—The Alma Chamber of Commerce and the St. Louis Exchange club, at a joint public meeting, authorized the appointing of a committee to appraise all residence property offered for sale and asked real estate dealers not to list unappraised property for a period of six months. The action was taken to prevent excessive increase in prices of homes because of the moving to Alma of several hundred workers of the American Wood Rim Co., coming here from Onaway, following the fire which destroyed the company's plant there.

Battle Creek—In one of the biggest real estate transactions made here in several months, the Weickgenant building on West Main street has been sold to Edward W. Large. The consideration is reported to be in the neighborhood of $125,000. Jacob Weickgenant, prominent Battle Creek business man who owned the block, announced that his portion of the business in the building known as the Weickgenant company, will be discontinued. He will, however, continue to operate his original store at 8 East Main street.

Port Huron—Establishment of a state automobile drivers' tax for the founding of a fund to care for the wives and families of men and husbands killed by automobile accidents in the state each year was advocated by Lincoln Avery, prominent attorney, in an address before a local service club. The state legislature should adopt a law to provide against the want in the family that is stricken, care for the great loss of life and to prevent the burden and financial depression that goes into homes when accident occurs.

Special Fire Train To Make State Tour

A special fire prevention train, to be known as the "Forest Fire Fighting Flyer", started this week on a three months tour of northern Michigan counties.

As the name of the train implies it will aim at spreading information on effective fire control methods and at stimulating greater interest among all people of the state in the menace of the forest fire. Many agencies are cooperating in the management of the train. Railroads of the state are furnishing cars and transportation, while the state Department of Conservation, the M. S. C., the U. S. Forest Service, and various development bureaus all contribute to the exhibit material.

The exhibit car of the train was first opened to the public at East Lansing from Feb. 1 to 5, during Farmers' Week at the college. Hundreds of people from all over the state studied the displays in the car, which showed everything from the damage wrought by forest fire to general prevention and control methods.

Starting north from East Lansing this week, the "special", which includes three cars, will make 28 scheduled stops in the north-east section of the lower peninsula, between Feb. 8 and March. Between March 15 and May 1, 52 stops will be made on five different railroads in the Upper Peninsula.

At each stop, the exhibit car will be thrown open to the public. Meetings will be sent to the school and clubs in the community. Among the speakers who will be with the train throughout its courses are: Edgar Cochrun, State Conservation Department; L. F. Livingston and N. A. Kessler, M. S. C. Agricultural Engineering Department; and representatives of development bureaus, the U. S. Forest Service, and the railroads.

Suggestions For Teaching Law-Observance To Children And Young People

It may be wise, now that prohibition is a question of law observance rather than of individual choice, to assume that the child has and will continue to have correct personal habits toward intoxicants.

It is not considered good psychology to suggest to a person that he ought not to do the thing which he has never been tempted to do, which may never have occurred to him that he could possibly be conceived as doing.

The wise teacher will take the attitude, "Of course, we are too intelligent to have anything to do with alcoholic drinks, now that we have learned how much harm they do. But there are some folks who do not yet know this, or else who are too heedless to care, and these people we must pity and seek to enlighten or restrain, for their own good, and for the good of the neighborhood and the city and the nation in which they live."

TO INCLUDE CONTEMPT FOR LAW BREAKING IN GOOD CITIZENSHIP TRAINING

It is not the modern tendency in citizenship training to tell the child that he must "be loyal to the king and to the laws which his majesty makes." We are living in a land of democracy, in fact it is rapidly coming to be a world of democracy in which every man is a king, in the sense that each is a citizen and has, or will some day have, a hand in the making of the laws by which he is governed.

So, instead, we tell him that he has a right to be happy, to live in safety, and to be protected from all harm, just so long as he respects other people's rights to the same blessings.

We tell him that he has a right to live in a clean, orderly city, and that, of course, he will have as much pride in seeing that his city is kept clean and orderly as in seeing that his room, or his house and yard, are in that condition. We will not tell him that he must not throw rubbish in the streets but we will encourage him, as a good citizen, to pick up papers that may have blown there and put them in the public rubbish barrels.

We will teach him that when he thoughtlessly does something which deprives another citizen of rights which he himself enjoys and desires, he is not being a good citizen, and a person who is not a good citizen is not of any use to himself, or to anyone else. He is not only not useful to the community, but he is a detriment to society And, of course, everyone wants to be an asset and not a liability.

We will not encourage him to make heroes of outlaws, pirates and highwaymen. We will endeavor to offset such ideas that may come to him from the wrong kind of moving pictures and the wrong kind of story books, by holding up for his admiration such altruistic citizens as Lincoln, Roosevelt, and other great Americans whom people admire because of their self sacrifice and devotion to what they believed to be right.

We shall quote to the older boys and girls Lincoln's great words:

"Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity, swear never to violate, in the least particular, the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. To the support of the Constitution and laws, let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor. Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his fathers and to tear down the character of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in the courts of justice. In short, let it become the political religion of the nation, and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay of all sexes and tongues and colors sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars."

And we shall endeavor to adopt and encourage them to adopt, this exhortation very literally, to fit the present hour and the situation which confronts us.

By developing in the child an admiration for those who have stood for the highest type of public service and patriotism, for those who have reverenced law because law is the protection of rights and and liberties against selfishness, lawlessness and disregard for the rights of others, we shall indirectly teach him to look with abhorrence and contempt upon those people who place their own selfish desires ahead of consideration for others, who dishonor themselves by violating the laws, and who put greed and appetite over against peace, tranquillity and the common good.

DEVELOP A LAW-ABIDING ATTITUDE OF MIND

If we call attention to the astonishing fact that some otherwise respected citizens are opposed to the principle of prohibition, we should comment that the attitude of such people is best expressed in the words of Chief Justice Taft, who himself was the leading opponent of prohibition as a national measure because he thought it was a question for the individual states when he said in the Ladies Home Journal for May, 1919:

"The people have spoken. This is a democracy. The Amendment has been adopted, I am in favor of its rigid enforcement. This is the duty of every citizen in a democracy. He has something of the autocratic spirit. He is willing to govern but not to governed. He is not willing to play the game according to the rules of the game. Therefore, whatever my previous view, I am strongly in favor of putting the Amendment to a test as favorable as possible for its successful operation."

The words quoted above, coming from the highest legal authority in the land, express as well as anything else, the attitude of mind which our boys and girls need to have. They know already the contempt they feel for the boy who "will not play the game according to the rules." Let this contempt be extended to include the adult who stands in that same relation to the recently enacted addition to our highest law, the Constitution of the United States. And let him feel equal contempt for those thoughtless folk who laugh at, and applaud, the violation of law and thus hinder its enforcement, for they, too, are law-breakers in spirit if not in fact.—The Union Signal.

State Farm Agents Look to The Future

Guilded by experiences of the past, the agricultural extension staff of the M. S. C. took a long look into the future during its recent conference at East Lansing, and laid the general plans for work during coming years.

The conference was held from Jan. 29 to Feb. 1, immediately preceding the annual Farmers' Week at the college. Practically all county agricultural, home, and boys' and girls' club agents of the state were in attendance at the annual meeting, the one time of the year when all the state's extension forces meet together to consider the broader aspects of their program.

Prominent among the out of state speakers who addressed the conference were: Miss Grace Frysinger, of Washington, D. C., national leader of home demonstration work; Prof. J. H. Kolb, of Wisconsin University; Ray Turner of Washington, D. C., boys' and girls' club executive; J. D. Willard extension director at the Massachusetts Agricultural College; and Deo. E. Farrell, Washington, in charge of cooperative extension work for the north central states.

A feature of the programs during the conference was a series of "achievement" reports from the more than 60 county agricultural agents of the state. Each agent told briefly of the outstanding bit of educational work along agricultural lines in his county during the year, the result being that all agents of the state gathered valuable hints on the activities in their neighboring counties.

R. J. Baldwin, director of extension work at M. S. C., presided during the sessions of the conference.

"What's in a name?" Everything. Its good to have the name of paying promptly. Renew.

Hank Dickers With The Soviets

Your Uncle Henry has just sold one hundred thousand Fordson Tractors to the Soviet government and finished delivering them in exactly seven weeks to representatives in New York. These tractors are shipped by boat from New York and by the time the last machine is loaded on board the first one will have begun plowing on the mighty Steppes of Russia.

If the Soviets conduct their farming operations as they do the government it will be a harvest of dry bones, human skeletons and blighted morals. Practically the whole of Russia's agricultural land was farmed in a devil-may-care haphazard style by Russian Moujiks up to the time the Czar was so tragically disposed of. These fellows mostly had neither the means to own or the intelligence to operate modern American-built machinery, and there is no such machinery built in Russia.

Some of the Soviet leaders have been educated in America and the result is their thick bullet-proof skulls have absorbed ideas about tickling the soil. They have found that untold millions have been lost by bad cultivation. They killed or banished every member of the ruling and money class from the land leaving affairs in the hands of the criminal class. As a matter of fact there were none among the free lower class brainy enough for the job.

For some weeks the jewels and private possessions of the Royal family have been on display in the Kremlin; they are worth many millions and are to be sold and the proceeds turned over for tractors and other farm machinery.

Here is a chance for Henry Ford to secure a few curios at a bargain price by swapping a few tractors for a crown and and a carload of "Flivvers" for a sceptre,

Nourishing Drink for Children

BABIES and children, the same as adults, grow weary of being fed the same food in the same way each day. It is true that most children take naturally to milk, but that does not mean that they must be fed it ad nauseam. On the contrary, that is the very thing to be avoided.

Pediatricians advise consumption by children of a quart of milk a day in one form or another. This does not mean skim milk, but whole milk, for the skimmed product is lacking both in butter fat and the essential food element known as vitamin A, which is found in butter fat. Many mothers do not appreciate that removal of cream from the top of a bottle of milk results in skim milk.

In evaporated milk, a product recommended by many leading doctors for the use of infants and children and which is simply pure cow's milk sterilised in cans and with sixty per cent of the water removed, there is no cream line. The milk in the top of a can is the same as it is in the bottom of the container. This results from a process called homogenization, in which the fat globules in the milk are broken up into such microscopic bits that they remain in homogeneous suspension. Every drop of homogenized milk has a buttery taste because it contains butter fat. For this reason, in evaporated milk, there is none of the flat taste one finds in drinking from the bottom of a bottle of market milk.

In order to avoid feeding the baby or child plain milk three or four times a day, many authorities recommend the use of a mixture of fruit juice and milk, a highly palatable and refreshing drink.

Following is a recipe worked out by experts for an orange-milk drink:

Mix in a fruit jar ⅞ of a cupful of orange juice, ¼ of a cupful of evaporated milk, three teaspoonfuls of sugar, ½ teaspoonful of lemon juice and a few grains of salt. Shake well before serving.

BANKERS HELP

Minnesota bankers played a constructive part in boosting the attendance at the Northwest Dairy Exposition held in connection with the State Fair in September. Five hundred members of the Minnesota Bankers Association received letters from the chairman of the agricultural committee, asking them to assist in forming delegations from their respective communities to attend the show.

The Atlanta, Ga., Clearing House gives the boll weevil no rest. In an effort to effect a concerted and statewide poison war on the boll weevil, this institution sent letters recently to all the bankers in the state asking that they assist in emphasizing the need for a wholesale war on the pest. According to a recent survey poisoning is being done on the larger farms, but not to any appreciable extent on the small farms. According to reports by the Department of Agriculture, the boll weevil infestation is heavier this year than ever before, and if allowed to go unchallenged the crop will be destroyed. Immediate and extensive action is urged.

On Carrying Checks Around

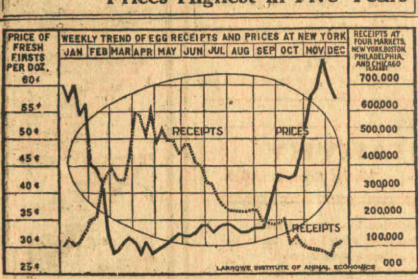
"Have you heard about the trouble Jim Sykes is in, Aunt Emmy?" asked Molly, who dearly loved to talk about her neighbors.

"Why, no," answered Aunt Emmy; "what is it?"

"Well, Aunty, you know how proud he was to get that building job from Mr. Parker. He needed the money so much. When it was finished Mr. Parker gave him a check for $3,000. Of course Jim had obligated himself to pay a lot of that out for materials and things. Well, you know what an old slow poke Jim Sykes is. Instead of taking the check to the bank right away he carried it around in his pocket and then poor Mr. Parker died. Now he must wait until Mr. Parker's estate is settled, and that may be a couple of years before he can cash the check. Poor Jim, isn't it a shame!"

"It's too bad," agreed Aunt Emmy, "but quite in keeping with most folks' carelessness about money. People should be prompt in depositing checks.

Egg Eaters Increase in 1925 Prices Highest in Five Years



EGG prices during the past year were higher than they have been since 1920, according to the annual review of the egg market made by the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. While there has been very little difference in the total production this past year as compared to 1924, the higher prices during 1925 indicate larger consumer demand.

Mr. Hoover Says This Concerning Rubber

"No amount of discussion can obscure the fact that the spot price of rubber was $1.09 per pound and three months forward rubber was $1.05 on December 10th when I asked the co-operation of manufacturers and consumers in a drive against the exorbitant price of rubber by conservation and provision of independent American supplies. We have that co-operation. The spot price has dropped 41 cents per pound down to 68 cents yesterday, and three months foward rubber was about 64 cents. Our imports of rubber for 1925 were 860,000,000 pounds. If we import the same amount for 1926, and had continued to pay the price demanded last December for rubber, our rubber bill for 1926 would have been three hundred and fifty million dollars more than it will be at the present level of prices.

We undertook this action because the monopoly had put the price to 600 per cent of the cost of production and to 300 per cent over the price that their own committee of producers had themselves announced as fair and profitable price.

Of equal importance to demonstrating that the American consumer has an ability of resistance to any of these nine govermentally created monopolies in raw materials, our industries have realized and undertaken the serious job of providing rubber supplies free of control.

Hillsdale County History

From the educational magazine "Current School Topics" we clip the following historical essay written by a 12-year-old girl near Ossoe, Michigan. The magazine stated is published at Lansing and has been sponsoring a contest from the Grade schools of the state.

Altogether one hundred essays were recently received by the publishers and the most meritorious ones are being published. Some one sent us a copy of "Current School Topics" containing the essay written by Mary Watkins of Osseo 7th Grade. We give it in full below:

Jefferson Township Hillsdale Co,

"We live in the south central part of Michigan, and in Hillsdale County. Hillsdale was so named because of the hills, valleys and dales. We live in the Township of Jefferson. It was so named because Thomas Jefferson was our president at the time of its formation, and he planned the removal of the Indians. So the township was called Jefferson,

The first settlers came from the east, especially from New York, and they settled in the northern part of this township,

Hudson, which is about fifteen miles distant, was their trading place, mostly on account of its being down hill. It was much easier for the early settlers to go to Hudson with loads of timber for manufacturing. At Hudson wagons, hoop poles and buggy wheels were made from the strong ttmber of oak and hickory. Hoops are poles made for barrels. They manufactured barrels also.

Wheat was raised, also many hogs, and they had very good grazing lands for sheep.

Oxen driven on wagons in the summer and sleds iu the winter, were the only meens of transportation unless one chose to walk.

The Pottawattomi Indians were supposed to be the first inhabitants of our locality."

Henry Ford's Old-Time Ideas

The last public question to be taken up by Henry Ford, dancing—has assumed gigantic proportions in Michigan. While it may not interest the average young person very intensively to learn about how strong these old-time quadrilles schottishes and minuets are going, yet there is a certain significance attached to them which may spell the doom of the highly sensual modern dance. No other man in this state or any other state was perhaps more fitted to inaugurate the new regime. Henry Ford with his untold millions has come up from the common people. He belongs to the hard-headed industrious middle class of America, and it may be said he indulged in the diversion of dancing in his younger days quite as much as any young man in the suburbs of Detroit. Notwithstanding his social standing and great wealth he found it not too common to gracefully offer his arm to the humble wife of a fiddler from Maine and escort her through the mazes of the old-time quadrille. Taking their que from Mr. Ford the aristocracy of Highland Park, have joined heartily in his genial suggestions to make social diversions less open to scandal. None are too pessimistic to admit that the new idea sweeping the country to refine modern dancing is but a forerunner of a still more radical change, and further than that Mr. Ford is undoubtedley the sole originator of the plan. As an inventor he ranks with the top liners What he has begun will go on and will invade the centers of fashion; it must get the support of sensible folks the world over. Each week from the publishing house in Dearborn Michigan there goes out several thousand copies of Mr. Ford's paper "The Independent" telling people all about these forgotten ancient amusements and containing also the music to the Schottische or the Waltz as danced when you and I were boys. If ever a man deserved a crown it should go to Mr. Ford for the good he has accomplished along this particular line. The doubting Thomas never claimed the modern dance was all scandalous—but he believed elements entered in which rendered the whole performance rather of a parody on good behavior—simply because a few of the more reckless young people took improper liberties with their social customs. It is an old saw that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, which is applicable to modern dancing. Modern waltzes are no more decent than the most bawdy of them, since the same positions are assumed in all cases, which combined with modern methods of dress and etiquette produce a bad impression on the spectator. Mr. Ford with his millions at the beck and call of anything that will produce decent living, has we believe scented the real danger to young life and acted accordingly. The results remain to be seen, but it is hoped the movement will not recede erelong and perhaps disappear altogether, as some other reforms have done.

Michigan Apple Growers Enjoy Many Advantages Over Competitors

Advance copies of an apple survey of the United States and Canada by Ralph W. Reese, Horticultural Agent of the New York Central Lines, deals with this fruit crop in an exhaustive manner and is certain to prove profitably interesting to consumers as well as those actively engaged in the industry. In this survey Mr. Rees calls attention to the five outstanding features which have affected the apple industry during the past twenty five years: the development and wide use of refrigerator cars; the development of cold storages; the decrease in home orchards; the centralization of the apple industry and the increase of citrus and other competitive fruits.

Mr. Rees, who for five years was extension professor of pomology at Cornell and previously with the faculties of the Massachusetts Agricultural College and Oregon Agricultural College, makes a careful study of the apple industry. Mr. Rees personally visited practically all of the apple growing territories and his reports on each section, including selection of varieties, phases of growing, marketing conditions and other details, accupies a book of more than sixty pages replete with graphs and illustrations,

Commenting on this work, Secretary of Agriculture W. M. Jardine wrote; "You are to be complimented for making available information of this nature and I am sure that such action on your part will foster closer cooperation between agriculture and its allied industries—between the business man in the city."

While there will not be a rapid change in the commercial apple production of Michigan, there probably wiil be an increase of 10 per cent to 15 percent. Considering comparatively low land values, nearness to large industrial centers the high quality of fruit which may be produced, it would seem that apple growers can well afford to increase the size of their plantings. As in other sections, it is unwise for plantings to be made by those inexperience in apple growing or by any who do not expect to make apple production one of the main features of their farming operations

Copies of this survey are being distributed to apple growers and others interested by the Department of Agricultural Relations of the New York Central Lines, Rochester, New York.

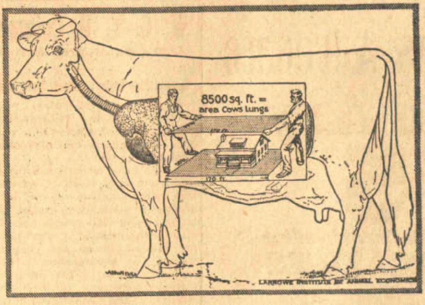
Cows Lungs Cover City Lot

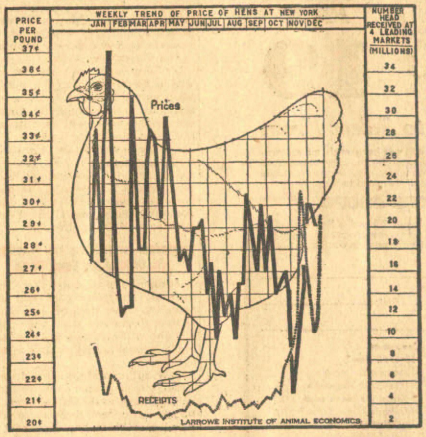


8500 sq. ft. = area Cows lungs
170 ft.
LARROWE INSTITUTE OF ANIMAL ECONOMICS

IF THE spongy sacks which form the lung of a cow were spread out flat they would cover a city lot 50 by 170 feet, according to an estimate made by experts of the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. To keep this mass of flesh functioning normally, over 3,000 cubic feet of fresh air are required each hour, which, served to cows in buckets as is water and grain, would mean 320 three-gallon pailfuls every hour for each cow.

A cow needs air (oxygen) to purify her blood, to digest and assimilate feed and turn it into heat, body repairing material and milk. Add to the well-ventilated barn a plentiful supply of fresh water, good roughage and a correctly mixed dairy ration, and you have all the essentials for abundant milk making. It is this lack of fresh air on many farms during the long winter months that is believed by practical farmers to be the underlying cause for much of the sickness among the animals.

Chicken Prices in 1925 Highest in Four Years



A STEADILY expanding market for table poultry in recent years resulted in an average 1925 farm price per chicken of 68½ cents, the highest since 1921, according to the 1925 market review of the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Prices for fowls on the New York market during the year were highest in late January when extra quality reached 37 cents a pound. Since then they have ranged between 35 cents and 24 cents until early November when the usual heavy receipts of this time of the year began to be felt. Prices then dropped to 21½ cents a pound, but recovered rapidly as the colder holiday season came on.

Increased demand for poultry in 1925 over the previous year is due in some measure to a lesser consumption in 1924, caused by a wide-spread poultry epidemic in that year. Storage stocks of poultry did not accumulate as rapidly during the past year as they did in 1924, which is an indication of continued good prices during the spring months when this poultry is taken from storage.

Comparatively lower feed costs since 1920 have made poultry profits in recent years the highest in thirty years. Present market demands and industrial conditions in general point to good prices for poultry and poultry products for another two years at least.

Cow Works Three Months to Give Year's Milk for One Person

Yearly Milk Requirements
Per Capita.
LARROWE INSTITUTE OF ANIMAL ECONOMICS

NINETY days of hard labor on the part of the average dairy cow will keep one person in milk for a year, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. At least, it takes three months for her to turn out the 1,004 pounds of milk necessary to provide the fluid and canned milk, cheese, butter and ice cream consumed per capita per year.

While this fact may be merely interesting to the person consuming the milk, it is of vital importance to the dairyman who depends upon this milk for a living. For while the 4,368 pounds of milk produced by the average cow in a year will meet the requirements of a family of four persons, by the time one has figured up the cost of the feed that has gone into the production, there really isn't very much left. The only way to permanently increase the income per cow is in greater milk production per unit, government figures showing that when a cow's milk yield is doubled the profit is tripled, and when the yield is tripled the profit is increased almost five-fold. Experiments have proven that it is entirely possible by better feeding and management to increase the milk yield of the average cow to a point where three cows could supply four families with milk. To do this, however, the hocus-pocus feeding so commonly practiced on many dairy farms will have to give way to more scientific methods. Comfortable quarters for the cows, an abundance of fresh water at all times, a plentiful supply of good hay, and a properly balanced green ration are some of the things that go far toward securing greater profit per cow.

THE WOMAN WHO WORKS

In this new order of things, with women, both married and single, broadening their business activities, a very serious problem arises. It is the problem of what, when, and where to eat.

Breakfast is always a hurry-up meal for the men but much more so for the woman who goes to business. Luncheons, of course, are taken in the lunchrooms and restaurants in the business districts and are no problem. But how about dinners? Shall they, too, be restaurant meals or can they be so planned that business women may enjoy the home cooking of which they are so fond? Take away the element of haste and anxiety and in its place put carefully thought-out menus, well planned and easily prepared, and home dinners will again regain their high favor with the working housewife.

One of the big worries is frequently with the milk. Did it come? Is it fresh? Is it frozen? Has the milkman been paid? Are the bottles washed and set out? However, there is no cause for worry about milk. Why not keep a dozen cans of evaporated milk in your pantry? There are large cans, equal to a quart of milk and smaller cans that will meet the lesser needs.

For evaporated milk is just pure, fresh milk with more than half the water missing. This water can be replaced in a jiffy, if you so desire or you can use it as cream if rich and creamy foods are desired.

Here are a few recipes that may be used by "The Woman Who Works" for forming her plans for self help and good home cooking.

Scalloped Ham and Potatoes.

1 pound smoked ham	1¼ cups water
6 medium potatoes	1 green pepper (may be omitted)
1¼ cups evaporated milk diluted with	Flour

Cover the bottom of an oiled baking dish with sliced, raw potatoes. Sprinkle with flour and pieces of ham ¼ inch square. Repeat until dish is full. Fill dish ¾ full of diluted milk. Bake until potatoes are tender.

Eggs en Casserole.

6 hard-boiled eggs	¾ cup evaporated milk
3 tomatoes	¾ cup water
2 tbsp. butter	¼ cup grated cheese
3 tbsp. flour
2 tsp. salt	Buttered crumbs

Cut hard-boiled eggs in half and arrange around the edge of a greased casserole. Slice tomatoes in center of dish. Make a white sauce of the milk, water, fat and flour. Add cheese and stir over a low fire until cheese is well mixed and smooth. Pour over tomatoes and eggs. Cover with crumbs and bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven.

LIVE stock breeders in Canada grow rich. The men who farm in your easily-reached neighbor country find every encouragement for raising high quality beef and dairy cattle.

At the great National Dairy Exposition at Indianapolis in October, 1925, the most coveted prize offered—first award for State Herd—was captured by Canadian Holsteins. The Senior and Grand Champion Female was a Canadian cow. Likewise, the Junior Champion Bull came from Canada. Of 24 animals entered by 10 Canadian breeders and shown against approximately 300 of the best dairy type animals produced in North America, 18 won individual prizes. The uniform high quality of the exhibit from Canada was conceded by all and was very generally commented upon.

Equally great are the opportunities in Canada for grain growing, mixed farming and fruit and poultry raising. Cheaper land, larger crops and bigger profits await you—along with a cordial welcome, and every facility for prosperous, independent life. Three hundred million acres of North America's richest agricultural land—virgin soil on which the best hard wheat in the world can be raised at lowest cost and marketed at highest prices!

This most productive land is fully served by railways. Freight rates are lower than in the States. Land taxes, too, are lighter. Good roads, markets, schools, and churches. Rural telephone service. Good neighbors, who probably include folks from your home district. Yet the cost is only $15 to $20 an acre—with long-term payments arranged, if desired. Farther back from the railroads, free homesteads, partially wooded, are still available within reasonable distances. In 1924 Americans took up 608 of these homesteads; during the period from January to November, 1925, Americans took up 657 homesteads in Canada.

If you are a farmer, or a young man eager to farm under ideal conditions, do not put this paper down until you write a letter to salaried officials of the Government of Canada who are at your service to assist you in moving and getting suitably located. Canada wants you and is willing to serve you. Act at once! 576

LASCELLES

SYNOPSIS.—With David, half-breed guide, Brent Steele, of the American Museum of Natural History, is traveling in northern Canada. By a stream he hears Denise, daughter of Col. Hilaire St. Onge, factor at Wailing River, play the violin superbly. He introduces himself and accepts an invitation to make the post his home during his stay. He finds the factor worried and mystified. The "log chateau" is a real home. From St. Onge he learns of the mysterious creature of evil, the Windigo, and the disappearance of a canoe and its crew, with the season's take of furs. Then at night the Windigo gives a weird performance. Even Steele is mystified. David, Steele's Indian, and Michel, St. Onge's head-man, leave for the scene of the canoe's disappearance in an attempt to solve the mystery. St. Onge tells Steele that Lascelles, the company's manager at Fort Albany, seeks his ruin in order to compel Denise to marry him to save her father. Steele and Denise fall in love. Steele finds the track of the Windigo—huge and much like a bear's. David finds the same thing. Tete-Boule, Indian in St. Onge's employ, is caught listening to Steele's talk with David and Michel, and roughly handled. Louis Laflamme, factor at Ogoke, makes application for the hand of Denise. Pierre, Indian from Ogoke, visits the Wailing River post.

"But why should he come so far to make trouble here, as you say? What is behind it all?"

For an instant, Michel seemed on the point of making a revelation. Then, evidently changing his mind, with a shrug of his bony shoulders, he answered: "We see some day."

Steele and David exchanged puzzled looks. What could Michel have in the back of his head?

* * * * * * *

With the coming of the canoe with news from Feather lakes, Wailing River was again thrown into a panic of fear of the night prowler. After a hurried talk with St. Onge, Steele started up the river, bound for Big Feather lake. He had little hope of discovering anything which would throw light on the mystery. But one thing piqued the curiosity of the three men. They were keenly interested in finding tracks similar to those near the post, for they carried the exact measurements of the latter, and in case they tallied with those at the Feather lakes, forty miles away, they would have discovered a new and most peculiar trait in animal habits, namely, a beast with feet strangely like a bear's, which had ranged forty miles within a few days.

On the morning of the second day the canoe was traveling in the easier water inshore, when Michel, poling in the bow, suddenly exclaimed:

"Kequay! Look!"

On the shore, ahead, were the remains of a fire and near it what resembled the body of a man. With a few strong thrusts of the poles, the canoe was driven to the beach. The men leaped ashore. Before them, stretched beside the dead fire, lay an Indian, hideously mutilated.

"He has been literally torn to pieces," muttered Steele. "A bear alone could have done this, and yet I never heard of such a thing."

David was on his knees searching for tracks in the dry leaves, when a cry from Michel drew the attention of the others.

"Look! Track on de shore!" and the Iroquois pointed to a patch of mud clearly marked by the prints of huge feet.

"They're ringers for the tracks near the post," said Steele, and he took from his pocket strips of rawhide of the dimensions of the footprints which had frightened Charlotte. In breadth, length and character, the tracks in the mud were identical with those near Wailing River. The three friends looked blankly at each other.

"It's the same bird," said Steele.

David removed his felt hat and scratched his broad forehead. "No bear travel forty mile and back twenty onless somet'ing drive heem," he insisted.

"But bears don't mutilate bodies like this," added Steele.

"Wal," muttered the Ojibway, "dees one mak' de mess ov dees poor feller all de same. W'at you goin' do?"

As the features were obliterated, Michel was busy examining the kit of the dead man in an attempt to identify him as an Indian trading at the post.

"De gun ees French company gun, but de kettle and knife I nevalr see before. I t'ink eet ees not Wailing Riviere hunter."

"Who could he be, then, traveling on this river so late in the year?"

"Eet ees ver' strange," muttered the headman.

"Eef dat bear, ees de Windigo," David's wide face contracted in a network of wrinkles, as he grinned at Steele, "w'at we do den?"

"Windigo or no Windigo, David, he's our meat if he steps in front of my Mannlicher—or yours. Why, what's the matter, Michel?"

The grave face of the Indian had suddenly assumed an expression so sinister as to arouse the white man's curiosity.

"By gar! We are de fool!"

"What d'you mean?"

For answer, Michel leaped into the canoe and poled rapidly upstream for a few hundred yards, while the puzzled Steele looked on. Then the Indian swung the nose of the boat down river and paddled past them in midstream.

"What in thunder is he driving at, David?"

"We are de fool for sure," was the laconic answer as Michel swept by with his eyes on his friends, then threw the bow of the canoe to the shore and landed.

"He nevaire pass here widout seein' dis camp."

Michel's maneuver was explained.

"Dat Pierre pass here two sleeps back," said Michel, joining Steele. "Dees man bin dead t'ree, four day an' de tracks on de shore are old one. De riviere rise after de rain two sleeps back. De Windigo mak' dem tracks here before de rain," and Michel pointed to some footprints which were barely covered by water.

"Suppose he did not notice this camp, what then?"

"He was hongree an' hunt for game; he sees dees camp for sure."

David nodded in agreement.

"Then why did he not tell us?"

"Dat ees w'at I ask heem tonight at Wailin' Riviere."

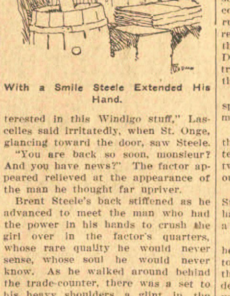
CHAPTER VI

The twenty miles of hard running river down to the fort was covered by the three skilled canoemen in a few hours. On arriving, they hastened to the trade house. Steele opened the ponderous slab door and entered, followed by the two half-breeds, to learn that Wailing River had a visitor. Seated with St. Onge behind the trade counter was a short, thick-set stranger, wearing a cap with an insignia in gold braid.

"M'sieu Lascelles," whispered Michel over the shoulder of the American.

St. Onge and Lascelles were evidently in the midst of a heated conversation in French, for they ignored Steele's entrance.

"You are as superstitious as you claim the Indians to be. I am not interested in this Windigo stuff," Lascelles said irritatedly, when St. Onge, glancing toward the door, saw Steele.



With a Smile Steele Extended His Hand.

"You are back so soon, monsieur? And you have news?" The factor appeared relieved at the appearance of the man he thought far upriver.

Brent Steele's back stiffened as he advanced to meet the man who had the power in his hands to crush the girl over in the factor's quarters, whose rare quality he would never sense, whose soul he would never know. As he walked around behind the trade-counter, there was a set to his heavy shoulders, a glint in the gray eyes, which did not pass unnoticed by the men he approached.

"Monsieur Steele, this is Inspector Lascelles of the Revillon Freres."

With a smile Steele extended a hand, hard as a spruce knot, and grasped the fingers of the puzzled and curious Lascelles.

"I missed meeting you at Albany, inspector, in August. You were over at Moose when I called."

The black eyebrows of Lascelles rose as he now identified the stranger whose presence at Wailing River he found most annoying for his plans.

"Oh, yes, Monsieur Steele, the American scientist; I thought you left Albany weeks ago bound for the Nepigon," he suggested pointedly.

"I did, monsieur, but I stumbled on a most interesting situation here—right in my line, you know. I found what I have been searching for, for years." Steele was losing no time rubbing it into the skeptical Lascelles. "You have a bona-fide Windigo in this valley, monsieur—a—most interesting situation to a scientist, I assure you. The Indians are in a panic and you will have difficulty in keeping them on their trap-lines this winter."

"You, a scientist, believe in Indian sorcery and superstition?" demanded the Frenchman, sarcastically.

"Well, now, that is somewhat difficult to answer, monsieur," badgered Steele, to the delight of the two swart-faced men with whom he had entered. "I have heard the Windigo wail in the night; I have seen his tracks; and I have just returned to report to Monsieur St. Onge that we have found up near the mouth of Stooping river the remains of an Indian torn to pieces, evidently by this same Windigo."

"What do you say?" St. Onge was on his feet.

"This morning we found the camp and body of a strange Indian—the tracks were identical with those you saw near here on the trail." Then Steele suddenly changed the subject. "Where is that Pierre who came here from the Feather lakes the day we left? Michel wishes to ask him some questions."

"He left this morning. Didn't you pass him on the river?"

A muttered curse from Michel met Steele's backward glance.

"Too bad!" exclaimed the American.

"I suppose, monsieur, you attribute the loss of our furs to this same Windigo?" broke in Lascelles.

"Oh, undoubtedly, inspector," replied Steele, with a suspicious curl of the lip, his blood slowly rising at the tone used by the man from Albany. However, above all things, he had to consider St. Onge and Denise, he told himself, and not to allow this fellow to lure him into a hostile attitude.

"I see you are joking," rejoined the Frenchman, flushing.

"On the contrary, I am very far from joking when I tell you that there are mysterious things afoot in this valley—which neither my experience nor scientific knowledge are able to fathom. You had better go upriver tomorrow and see for yourself. You seem skeptical regarding the whole matter."

"Have you never seen a dead man before, monsieur?" derided Lascelles. "I fear it has gone to your head—this Windigo matter."

St. Onge excitedly half rose from his chair, as the cool gray eyes of his guest slowly surveyed the man from Albany, from moccasins to hair; and then fell back relieved, when the American, flushed, but in control of himself, drawled:

"Monsieur, you were formerly a man of war, a soldier, while I am only a peaceful man of science. To you it is but natural that violent death should be a familiar sight, while to me it is most terrifying. Why, I find it most repulsive even to clean a fish." So innocuous was Steele's smile, and so guileless his manner, that Lascelles, conscious of being played with by the rugged American, found no words to reply, but sat in impotent rage. Then the retreating backs of Michel and David, whose shaking shoulders betrayed their suppressed mirth, spurred the Revillon man to answer:

"If you are so afraid of blood," he sputtered, "why are you hunting this man-eating Windigo?"

Steele smiled down good-naturedly at the man he would have blithely battered with his fists, and leaving the two men at the trade-house, sought out Denise St. Onge.

"Oh, welcome back! Monsieur Steele," she said, forcing a smile. "I have just heard that you have made a terrible discovery."

"Please, we will not talk of that" he insisted. "I have something to say to you before I go, tomorrow. Tonight there will be no opportunity." He wondered if Lascelles had seen her privately since his arrival that afternoon but it did not matter. "We are to make a wide circle of the country," he went on, "and will be away until I leave for Nepigon."

Her sensitive face quickened with emotion as she listened.

"Mademoiselle St. Onge," he began, "I have no right to ask this from you, but in justice to yourself I must."

She started to speak, as if in protest, then her troubled eyes squarely met his.

Is Lascelles in the plot, too? Or are these suitors pressing their suit each in his own way?

Niagara Long Magnet for the Foolhardy

The first of Blondin's brave but foolhardy feats at Niagara was performed about sixty-six years ago, when he walked a rope stretched across the gorge between the falls and the whirlpool rapids. He carried a balancing pole 40 feet long and weighing 45 pounds.

Several times thereafter he repeated the performance, once trundling a barrow across, and on another occasion carrying Henry Colcord, his manager. In 1860 Blondin walked across on stilts, and this performance was witnessed by the prince of Wales, afterward Edward VII.

Many tight and slack rope performers have since emulated Blondin, among them a woman, Maria Spolterina, who crossed with baskets on her feet. The first attempt to swim the whirlpool rapids was made more than forty years ago by Captain Webb, who lost his life in the fool hardy venture.

Five years later a Philadelphia cooper named Graham went safely through the whirlpool rapids in a barrel. A Mrs. Taylor was the first to go over the falls themselves, which she accomplished strapped in a specially made barrel.

Millionaires "Tuned Up"

An institution to tune up millionaires is being run at Bradford, England. Electrical massage and physical jerks before breakfast are the methods employed, and the big bosses of industry who resort to them become so much reduced in bulk they have to get their clothes altered. At the same time, the keenness of their business brains increased in inverse ratio to the reduction of their bodies. The proprietor says most of them come to him at the age of forty-eight.

If mistakes were crimes most of us would be in jail.

Has Many Admirers

Miss Julia S. Groo of Portland, Oregon, who won an essay contest, which netted her a $25,000 prize, has had 400 proposals to share her luck for the rest of her life.

It's so much easier to tell a lie than to make people believe it.

The Eternal Feminine

"Why do you want to stay home tonight, dear?"

"Well, Henry, our daughter's new beau is coming and I understand he is very clever at telling fortunes."

Language most shows a man.—Ben Jonson.

Thousands of women testify to the truth of this from their own experience.

"But constipation is serious, Grace"

"Not so long ago I was like you—headaches a good deal of the time, sleeping badly, and the least bit of housework tired me out. My complexion too, was bad.

"Finally, I went to see Dr. Farman. He showed me that it was constipation that was back of my troubles. He said that it was a very serious thing because poisons from clogged waste matter were picked up by the blood and carried to every body organ. And if I didn't correct it in time I might become a victim of one of those terrible organic diseases.

"He made me drop laxatives altogether, changed my diet, and put me on Nujol. I don't think I've ever felt better. I sleep well, my headaches have disappeared, and you can see for yourself what an improvement there is in my skin. Nujol has done wonders for me."

Nujol Works Like Nature

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It is neither a food nor a medicine. It does not gripe. It is gentle and natural in its action and is prescribed by leading medical authorities.

Nujol simply makes up for a deficiency — temporary or chronic — in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly, in accordance with the directions on each bottle. As Nujol is not a laxative, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Nujol
THE INTERNAL LUBRICANT
For Constipation

Ask your druggist for Nujol today and begin the perfect health that is possible only when intestinal elimination is normal and regular.

An analysis of the vote of the Senate on the World Court contains several lessons for the public. The court is supposed to settle international differences and thus help to prevent wars yet most of the senate progressives who are all opposed to war voted against the court. In other words, the progressives seemed to vote against their own convictions. The Roman Catholics to a great extent have been fighting against the measure yet all three of the Senate Catholics—Walsh, Ramsdell and Broussard voted for the measure which proves that the Catholics cannot always hold their followers in line. Strange as it seems the Klan joined hands with the Catholics in opposing the court yet Mayfield leading Texas Klansman voted for the court and against the Klan. Most of the Senate progressives are anti Klan yet they voted as the Klan desired. "Sopping wet" copeland of N. Y. joined hands with "Bone Dry" Shepard of Texas in favoring the plan while "wet" Cousins Michigan Republican joined with "dry" Ferris Mich. Democrat in approving the Court. "Honest Burt" Wheeler Montana Democrat said "yes" while Bill Borah Idaho Republican equally as honest answered in the negative despite the combined opposition of the powerful Catholics the influential Klan and the prominent Progressives only 17 Senators opposed the court which proves that the members of Congress may be more independent than is commonly supposed.

Concrete Pays On The Farm

Modern experience has fully demonstrated that the man who owns even a small farm cannot afford to be without a concrete mixer and a gasoline engine. Concrete enters into so many different structures on the farm that a power machine to handle it efficiently and rapidly is indispensible In the first place any hog breeder (and there are many) canuot properly feed his hogs, cattle or sheep without a feeding floor, which saves waste and adds 35 per cent to the gains. On top of this, it is paramount that hog food and cattle fodder be kept absolutely clean. In thousands of places where concrete is used on the farm the mixer pays for itself in short order. If you do not care to put in much money there is the small outfit readily bought of the mail order house. and we could not enumerate all the uses for concrete on this page

Among the articles of cement down on the farm we might mention troughs, tanks, floors, fence posts, roofs, porches, steps, cisterns, tile. blocks, drive ways, silo bases, foundations, window sills, chimneys, etc. etc.

Death of Mrs. Hiram Cole

Mrs. Laura A. Cole widow of the late Hiram Cole, passed away at the home of her grand-daughter, Mrs. Theo. Cronkite, 12675 Roselawn Avenue Detroit, January 25th 1926 at the age of 79 years Funeral services were conducted at the home in Detroit and interment was in Evergreen cemetery. She had been ailing for several years. She is survived by her son-inlaw, Henry Bernhardt, one grand-son, Fred Cutler one grand-daughter, Mrs. Theo Cronkite both of Detroit.

A good deal has been said lately about the gasoline engine replacing the old wind mill down on the farm for all pumping purposes, but we want to announce the wind mill is coming back, and in many instances farmers are erecting weather-proof galvanized steel towers with improved wind mills which they have found to be the cheapest power on the farm. The modern steel mill is so much better in construction than its predecessor that most of the trouble has been eliminated. Roller bearings and oil storage require only one oiling per year. and run with practically no attention. This is not an item written at the request of any dealers, but what we have personally gleaned from observation.

The Tide of Dissipation

There is something wrong with the heads of the educators of this country, so we are taught to believe. It is claimed that education has a tendency coarsen the minds and render the intellect unstable. and while the idea may be farfetchad yet it is no wonder such theories are advanced, since the Universities of this nation are today advocating methods of life that would have been considered somewhat vicious if not downright filthy a few years ago.

It is claimed by the newspapers that members of the faculty of the Leland Stanford University in California, one of the most popular in this country, have placed a petition with the administrative board of the institution to be allowed the use of cigarettes and tobacco while about their duties, and furthermore public approval has so pressed the board they have practically decided to yield to the demand and grant permission to women instructors to smoke the "coffin tacks" whenever they see fit.

If this report is absolutely official there must be a gigantic wave of aberration sweeping the educational institutions of America.

Apples Are Profitable Crop

While apples are the leading fruit of this district, there is a good diversification including pears, peaches and grapes, with some prunes and plums As this is an old apple district we find a range in age of orchards similar to that of Western New York. Baldwin does very well in this section and outranks all other varieties in total production. Rhode Island Greening, Northern Spy, Ben Davis and Russet are to be found in practically all of the older orchards. In the newer plantings McIntosh, Jonathan, Stayman and Delicious are making rapid gains. As in most of the older apple sections this district suffers from too many miscellaneous varieties, making it necessary to ship a large number of mixed cars. Orchard pests are approximately the same as in Western New York, with codling moth giving slightly more trouble. Additional cold storage facilities at shipping point would aid materially in a better distribution of the crop. Nearness to large and growing industrial centers gives a short haul on practically all fruit. Fruit in this section ripens slightly earlier than in northern Ohio and Western New York, giving it an advantage on the early markets. The district is well supplied with canneries, evaporators and by product factories, and there is usually a demand for lower grade bulk apples for the huckster trade. A long established apple industry with accumulated experience of three generations puts it on a stable basis.

Ordination of Rev. Virgil Hunt

Rev. Hunt who has been our Congregational pastor for the past two years, was ordained on Wednesday evening at the church with impressive services. The business meeting was held in the afternoon at 3:00 p. m. C. C. Mitchell of Hudson presiding. Devotionals. Rev. Warren was chosen chairman of the ordination committe. Rev. Nicholson of Litchfield was chosen as secretaey, and Rev. Warren as Chief Examiner of Religious training. After the examination, Rev. Hunt retired.

Motion made by Rev. Woon that the examination of candidate be adjudged satisfactory, and that we proceed to his ordination. Carried. Motion made to adjourn.

Supper was served at 6:30 to a good attendance. Members of the Winmore Class of which Rev. Hunt is teacher acted at waiters.

Program commenced at 8:00 in charge of Rev. Woon of Kinderhook, Singing, "The Church's One Foundation"; prayer, Rev. Warren; minutes by Rev. Nicholson of Litchfield; approved; solo, Mrs. Virgil Hunt; ordination sermon, Rev. G. A. Emerich, Pittsford; using for his subject "Choosing The Pearl of Great Price", Rev. Emerich certainly did ample justice to the theme and met the hearty approval of all who listened; Rev. Nicholson made the ordination prayer followed by The Lord's Prayer in unison by the ministers. The charge to the minister was delivered by Rev. Warren, his subject was "Put Duty First". Rev. Woon delivered the charge to the people, Loyalty, patience, finest relationship in community is between pastor and people. Singing, "Jesus Calls Us"; benediction, Rev. Virgil Hunt.

Visitors were present from Litchfield, Hillsdale, Pittsford, Clinton, Kinderhook and Hudson.

Why Sheetrock is a different wallboard

What it is: Sheetrock is gypsum plaster cast in thick, rigid sheets. It is fireproof, non-warping and permanent. It can be sawed and nailed like lumber. Takes any decoration—wall paper, paint, or Textone in the new stipple finishes.

What it does: Sheetrock makes solid, highly insulating walls and ceilings that keep rooms warm in winter and cool in summer. That means more comfort and lower fuel bills. Then, too, Sheetrock walls and ceilings make buildings dust-tight, soundproof and vermin-proof.

Where it is used: Sheetrock is the economical wall and ceiling material for many types of new construction and for all remodeling and repairs. It is just the thing for attic rooms, furnace rooms, fruit cellars, garages, offices and stores.

Where to get it: Get your Sheetrock from us. We carry it in standard ceiling heights and widths. Our trucks make prompt deliveries.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

President and His Critics Accuse Each Other of Playing Politics.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, personally in conversation with the Washington correspondents and then through a White House spokesman, told the country last week that the critics of his administration were "playing politics" and should not be taken too seriously. Mr. Coolidge alluded apparently to the investigations of the Department of Justice for failure to proceed against Secretary Mellon's aluminum company, to charges by Senator Norris that the President exerted questionable influence to keep the tariff board from making sugar tariff recommendations before the election of last fall, and to attacks made on the federal trade commission. Mr. Coolidge said these charges were unfounded, that the government was not derelict in enforcing the law and that such attacks were seasonal, coming in years in which Presidential elections were held.

No sooner were these statements made public than Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi arose in the senate to express his great indignation at them. He described Mr. Coolidge as a "matchless politician" and said: "It does not become a resident of the White House to tell the country that all the speeches here are to have a political tinge. There are political speeches made here, and we invite the President to make his political speeches, whether he makes them to the farmers in the West or the chamber of commerce in New York. He has not made a single speech from that in New York to the fly-by-night journey to Chicago but that was an effort to win favor with the people—playing politics in his speeches. When he persuaded some gentlemen on the other side of the aisle to change their views with respect to international peace in the world he performed one of the seven wonders of the world."

AMONG the important statements of the President's attitude, emanating from the White House are these:

The President is disappointed by the postponement by the League of Nations of preparations for a disarmament conference, and if the league's conference does not materialize, Mr. Coolidge will return to his original plan to convene in Washington another conference on further reduction of naval armaments.

Mr. Coolidge is still as much opposed as ever to the United States joining the League of Nations, believes the country still overwhelmingly determined to stay out, and regards our entrance into the World court not a step toward the league, but a demonstration of our care to avoid league entanglement.

The President condemns publicity statements emanating from the War and Navy departments charging deterioration of our national defenses, characterizing them as misrepresentations, designed to obtain larger appropriations. Mr. Coolidge regards the condition of the army and navy as satisfactory.

GERMANY'S application for membership in the League of Nations probably will have reached Geneva before this is published and it is expected that Sir Eric Drummond, the secretary general, will convoke an extraordinary session of the council at once to act on it. The next procedure will be a special meeting of the assembly, probably in March, to take Germany in formally. The foreign affairs committee of the reichstag by a vote of 18 to 8 decided to apply for membership and the presidents of all the German states were summoned to Berlin for a final discussion of the form of application. Germany will be the fifty-sixth member of the league.

Occupation of the first zone in the Rhineland by the allies came to an end when the last British troops marched out of Cologne, the French evacuated Bonn and the Belgians moved out of Moers, Dusseldorff and Aix la Chapelle. Thus 2,500,000 returned to the sovereignty of the reich. It was said in Paris that the occupation forces would be reduced to 60,000 as soon as Germany entered the league. But the official view in Berlin is that after Germany has entered the league and all the provisions of the Locarno pact and the Dawes plan are carried out, any occupation of the Rhineland will be an incongruous obstacle to general pacification.

FAIRLY rapid action marked the senate's consideration of the tax bill last week, and on the controversial features the "regular" Republicans and Democrats voted together, sustaining the finance committee's action and defeating the efforts of the radicals to amend the measure. Toward the end of the week the proposed repeal of the estate tax and of the publicity provision of the present law were the most interesting features remaining to be acted upon. It is believed the house will accept the senate's changes which make greater reductions in the middle brackets.

THE house received from committee the War department appropriation bill, which calls for an army of approximately the existing strength and recommends the expenditure during the next fiscal year of $339,581,000. This is nearly $7,000,000 more than last year's appropriation and $1,087,000 above the budget estimates. Of the total amount military activities would be given $261,081,000, or an increase of $1,223,000 above current funds and $864,000 above budget figures. Nonmilitary activities would receive $78,500,000, an increase of $5,741,000 over current funds and $223,000 above the budget.

SMUGGLING operations along the United States-Canadian border are to be thoroughly investigated by a special committee of the Canadian parliament as a result of sensational charges made by H. H. Stevens, minister of trade and commerce in the former Conservative government. After asserting that the smuggling during the last year had caused the Canadian government a loss of $200,000,000 in revenues, Mr. Stevens declared that a notorious crook, perjurer, thief and smuggler had been promoted to be chief customs officer at the port of Montreal though the cabinet ministers knew of his activities.

George H. Boivin, minister of customs and excise, told parliament he was willing to institute the investigation demanded. He said the immense smuggling of silk, cotton goods, cigarettes and tobacco into Canada, with return cargoes of whisky, was not confined to the Quebec border. Conditions at Toronto, Windsor and right through to Vancouver needed the thorough probing which the government was prepared to give. Conservative leader Arthur Meighen expressed entire accord with the proposal to hold a wide open public inquiry.

ANOTHER attack on the dry laws, from a rather unexpected source, came last week. Rev. Dr. James Empringham, national secretary of the Church Temperance society of the Episcopal church, announced that a poll of the 20,000 members of the society showed an overwhelming preponderance in favor of modification of the Volstead act. Consequently Doctor Empringham reported to a meeting of Episcopal clergymen in New York that the society as a whole was in favor of such modification, for these reasons:

"1. Because the effect of prohibition has been to put an end to scientific temperance teaching.

"2. It has discouraged the consumption of wine and beer and increased the demand for distilled liquors, which today are mostly poisonous.

"3. It has resulted in increased drinking among young people.

"4. It has brought about disrespect for all laws.

"5. It is class legislation, discriminating in favor of the rich.

"6. In our survey we found intemperance increased."

The society has no official connection with the church and many of the Episcopal clergymen are not in accord with its new policy concerning prohibition.

KENTUCKY authorities gave an exhibition of efficiency last week in protecting a prisoner from would-be lynchers and this was followed by the swift meting out of justice to the offender. Edward Harris, a negro, was accused of murder and an attack on a woman, and when a mob gathered at Frankfort, where he was confined, a thousand National Guardsmen with all equipment, including tanks, were called out, the threatening crowds were dispersed by tear gas and Harris was safely transported to Lexington. There he pleaded guilty to the criminal attack and was sentenced to death on the gallows on March 5.

WILLIAM M. WOOD, millionaire resident of Andover, Mass., and former president of the American Woolen company, committed suicide near Daytona, Fla. He had been in poor health for several years and had been despondent since his son was killed in an automobile accident in 1922. He also had grieved over the partial abandonment of his plans to build a model village for the thousands of employees of the woolen company. His associates did not approve of the expenditure of millions for this philanthropic purpose. He retired from the presidency of the company in March, 1925.

WILLIAM A. CLARK, former senator from Montana, who died last March, left a fortune of some $50,000,000. The other day three women appeared in Butte, Mont., as claimants to a share to this estate, asserting that they were Clark's daughters by his alleged marriage to a woman in Missouri in 1869. Attorneys for the Clark estate say they know nothing of these women or of the alleged marriage.

GRADUALLY some of the truth concerning the renunciation of Crown Prince Carol of Rumania is leaking out. The stories coming from Bucharest reveal a palace scandal that reflects seriously on Queen Marie and Prince Babu Stirbey, her favorite, whose power in the government the opposition party has been trying to destroy. Gregoire Philipescu, a deputy, has been issuing a series of posters lampooning the prince and the latest report is that Babu has fled from the capital and that the queen has followed him. Philipescu's paper accuses Prince Babu of robbing the Rumanian deputies and of falsifying the parliamentary reports to deceive the people.

ANOTHER gallant rescue of sailors on the storm-swept Atlantic marked the week. The crew of the sinking Dutch steamer Alkaid was taken off by the men of the Hamburg-American liner Westphalia in midocean, the rescuers displaying great bravery. Captain Fried and his men of the President Roosevelt, who saved 25 men from the British freighter Antinoe, have been awarded gold, silver and bronze medals by the British government, the British board of trade and Lloyds.

PORTUGAL had another of its incipient revolutions the other day under the leadership of Col. Justiniano Esteves. But the government put it down with neatness and dispatch and the leader and his lieutenants were arrested while they were attempting to capture the barracks at Campolini. The day before two batteries of artillery revolted and were shelled into submission by the fortress of San George.

In Greece a communist plot to assassinate Premier Pangalos and other government leaders was uncovered by a raid on a Communist center.

FINANCE MINISTER DOUMER of France announced that the government was ready to receive offers from any American syndicates for the purchase or lease of the operation of the telegraph and telephone system and the monopolies in tobacco and matches. An American group, reported to be backed by the American Tobacco company, recently offered approximately $1,000,000,000 for a 99-year monopoly on the sale of matches and tobacco. A syndicate has been dickering for a long time to take over the operation of telephones and telegraphs.

Two Countries Claim Mme. Curie as Theirs

Paris.—Two countries, France and Poland, contend for the allegiance of Marie Sklodowska Curie, known to all the world as Mme. Pierre Curie, co-discoverer with her husband of one of the most treasured of science's secrets—radium.

But Madame Curie herself, though a little touch of homesickness takes her back to Warsaw each summer, received French citizenship when she married Pierre Curie in 1895, and feels that she belongs to the land that holds his "resting grave."

Since she has chosen French nationality, there is not a Frenchman alive who would refuse her the title of "the most notable woman in France."

Madame Curie works and lives in the street which the city of Paris has named after her husband. No. 1 Pierre Curie street is one of the newer buildings and belongs to the scientific school of the University of Paris.

Teaching constantly, advising other scientists, experimenting, organizing a radium treatment hospital during the World war, winning a Nobel prize for chemistry—these have been the labors and fruits growing out of the first work with Pierre Curie in the little inadequate laboratory when both were poor and only the faith of friends supplied the money and the materials necessary for experiments. These things Madame Curie does not wish to speak of, but they are known everywhere and in every land her name is held in honor.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Harbor Springs—Edward I. Ferguson, for 23 years proprietor of the Emmet house, a resort hotel, here is dead at the age of 71. He had lived here since 1875 and was married here in 1878, the first wedding of white people to occur in Harbor Springs. He leaves a widow and one daughter.

Mt. Clemens—Because of the glare from the lights of an approaching car, Lawrence O'Leary, of Halfway, struck an unidentified man on the Gratiot road, at Roseville. O'Leary was released after he made a statement to Prosecutor Matthews. He claimed that he could not see the man, who was walking along the pavement.

Owosso—Mayor Asa T. Wright has announced that he will be a candidate for re-election this spring. Wright is serving his ninth year, having been elected for three successive terms of three years each. Wright declares that his reason for again being a candidate is that he wishes to see several municipal projects, which he has started, completed before he retires.

Ann Arbor—Announcement has been made of a second gift of land to the Washtenaw council which will enable the Boy Scouts of this county to have one of the best camps in America. The tract consists of 12 acres near Dexter, about eight miles from Ann Arbor. It was presented by Daniel Hoey, of Dexter. This new acreage adjoins a river island donated recently by Mrs. Eleanor Newkirk of Ann Arbor.

Sault Ste. Marie—George Chandler, lumberman and auto dealer, will be retried at the next term of Circuit Court on a charge of larceny growing out of the robbery of the home of A. E. Cullis, woolen mill owner, in which several thousand dollars worth of furs and silver were taken, according to an announcement by county officials. The jury in the first trial disagreed, standing 9 to 3 for conviction on the final ballot, it was said.

Muskegon—E. Baumann, Danish consul at Chicago, has interested himself in the death of George "Dutch" Anderson, notorious criminal, who was shot and killed in a gun battle with Detective Charles D. Hammond, of Muskegon, Oct. 31. Anderson is supposed to have been a member of Danish nobility. It is believed here that the consul has interested himself in the case on behalf of Anderson's mother, who is said to have believed her son was a prosperous business man.

Mt. Clemens—George H. Pohl, 36, a hero of the World war, with the American Expeditionary Forces, died at the home of his mother, Mrs. Mary Pohl, Wells street. As a corporal of Company G, 126th Infantry, he served in France 18 months, and, for distinguished services was decorated with the Croix de Guerre by both the French and Italian governments and received the distinguished service cross from his own government. He is survived by his mother and one brother.

Houghton—The board of control of Michigan College of Mines, in session here voted to extend a free scholarship to every high school in the state of Michigan. The action means that one student from every high school in Michigan will be entitled each year to admission without the usual tuition and laboratory fees. The method of awarding the scholarship will be left to the administration of each high school, and may be done by competitive examination or on the basis of grade for regular school work.

Jackson—Frank Wade, of Flint, a member of the Bricklayers union, was re-elected president of the Michigan Federation of Labor for the coming year at the closing session of the federation's annual convention. A resolution favoring the removal of the maximum compensation and the raising of the minimum in the state workmen's compensation act, with the inclusion of all occupational diseases in the benefits, was passed. An amendment demanding the elimination of private insurance company features of the law was added.

Pontiac—Harold McGraw and his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Convery, Detroit, have filed petition in probate court here for an administrator for the estate of their brother, the late Howard A. McGraw, Pine Lake and Detroit man, over which a lengthy legal battle has been waged during the last two years. The supreme court recently set aside a will under the provisions of which Mrs. Mary Heath McGraw, former chorus girl, now an office worker in Battle Creek, would have been given the bulk of the estate. The estate is estimated to be worth about $55,000.

Mt Clemens—By a unanimous vote at the annual meeting, the Mt. Clemens Businessmen's association decided to change its designation to the Mt. Clemens Board of Commerce. A momentary flurry of discord entered the proceedings when the nominating committee proposed 20 names for the election of 10 directors and failed to recognize the hotel and bath house interests. However, several representatives of the bathing interests were nominated from the floor and ballots will be sent out accordingly.

Lansing—Governor Alex J. Groesbeck's advocacy of legislative revision of the highway laws so that more money will be available for administration spending in 1926 was censured and opposed in resolutions by the state association of supervisors and the State Farm bureau. Both bodies demanded that there be no repudiation by the state of the state's road reward debt to the counties. The farm bureau went further than the supervisors in this respect. Farmers characterized the administration's treatment of the reward debt as "law defying."

Milford—Purchase by the Packard Motor Car company of 100 acres of land just south of Milford for an automobile testing field has been announced by the Oakland Realty Sales company of Birmingham.

Sturgis—Paul Carter, 20 years old, of Sturgis, died in the Memorial hospital from an abdominal wound he received when a pair of shears he was buffing at a Sturgis factory caught on a machine and the blades pierced his stomach.

St. Louis—George Sinnift, 70 years old, was found dead in his rooming house here with a revolver in his hand. Apparently he had shot himself. He had been in poor health. Sinnift leaves two sons and a daughter. He was a pioneer resident of this city.

Ionia—Eight township spelling contests will be staged in Ionia county, according to School Commissioner Elwood M. Brake. The winners will gather at the court house February 13 for the finals, when the winner of the county championship is announced and the Ionia County News cup awarded.

Monroe—Clarence Whelan, 17 years old, charged with having removed an automobile here without permission of the owner, January 5, pleaded guilty at the opening of the February term of the circuit court and was sentenced by Judge Jesse H. Root to the Ionia reformatory from 1 to 10 years.

Houghton—Russell Martin, an employe of the Quincy Mining Co., was killed when he was caught beneath several logs falling from a railroad car he was unloading. It is believed that Martin, after cutting a wire which held the timbers together, slipped and fell in their path as they came rolling down.

Grand Rapids—Overcome by carbon monoxide gas in his garage while he was working on his automobile, Clyde H. Evans, 30, tobacco salesman, died at St. Mary's hospital. Evans, it is believed, had been in the garage while the motor of his automobile was running, with the garage doors closed, for two hours before he was discovered. He was unmarried.

Monroe—A special election will be held in the village of Petersburg, February 23, and for the township of Summerfield, February 24, for the purpose of ratifying the action of the village and town boards in granting franchises to the Detroit Edison company. Current at the present time is derived from Tecumseh. If the actions of the boards are ratified wires will be strung from Dundee, where the company has a main line.

Port Huron—The tug Columbia, which started out from Marine City to buck the ice in St. Clair river to assist the car ferry International, has given up the task. The tug was able to break through but four miles of ice in 30 hours. The car ferry succeeding in releasing herself and has returned to her berth at this port. The Columbia returned to Marine City and will again go into winter quarters.

Lansing—Vernon Fisher, salesman for an Illinois insurance company, was arrested in Muskegon at the request of Leonard T. Hands, insurance commissioner. Hands was advised by state police. Fisher is said to have been selling accident and health insurance in several Michigan towns, although the company he represents has been refused a permit to operate here. He is charged with selling insurance without a license.

Highland Park—Highland Park people will vote on a special ballot at the primaries March 1 to amend their city charter in order to join with Detroit in solving the rapid transit situation, as the result of a resolution offered by Mayor Clarence E. Gittens and adopted at a council meeting. The resolution, which provides for a contract with the rapid transit commission of Detroit for building subways to take care of the transportation question in the future was adopted unanimously.

Saginaw—Political circles in the Saginaw valley have it that Nelson G. Farrier, of Hillman, a five-term member of the state legislature probably will be a candidate for speaker of the 1927 session. Farrier has been chairman of the ways and means committee for several sessions. The only avowed candidate for speaker of the next regular house is Representative Joseph W. Warner, of Washtenaw county, and it is said he will withdraw for Farrier if the upstate veteran enters the race.

Lansing—One of the measures of importance likely to come before the special session this month is the reallocation of the automobile license and gasoline tax revenues so there will be available about $2,000,000 more during the coming year for paving trunk lines than the 1925 act provides. This proposition does not contemplate any new taxes. Another proposition is for an appropriation to replace the buildings at the Central Michigan Normal School at Mt. Pleasant, destroyed by fire.

Lansing—Alex. J. Groesbeck has set Tuesday, Feb. 16, as the day for convening the Legislature in special session. The session, the Governor said, would be called primarily to ratify the agreement signed recently by himself and Sir Henry L. Thornton, president of the Grand Trunk Railway System, by the terms of which the company will remove its tracks where they interfere with widening Woodward avenue between Detroit city limits and Pontiac, and also surrender its special charter, held by the courts to be perpetual.

Owosso—Activities of a window peeper were climaxed by an attempt to enter the home of John Marshall here at midnight. According to Marion Marshall, 16 years old, who was at home with her five younger sisters during the absence of their parents, the peeper appeared at one door and then another, and demanded entrance on penalty of death. The girl, hysterical, called the police and then, arming herself with a pair of shears, retreated to the stairway to guard the sleeping children. When police arrived, the peeper escaped.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON HOW TO LEAVE AN ESTATE

"Do you know, Aunty," said Helen, as she accepted a cup of tea from Aunt Emmy, "I feel terribly sorry for Mrs. Strong."

"Yes," agreed Aunt Emmy, "it will be hard for her. She is such a dependent, helpless, little thing."

"Oh, I don't mean that," interrupted Helen. "Her feelings are so hurt because, as she says, her husband publicly insulted her by not making her executrix and trustee of his estate."

"Good gracious, child, did she say that!" exclaimed Aunt Emmy, setting her cup down with a bang.

"Yes, she did, Aunty," said Helen, enjoying the sensation she had made and determined to make the most of it, "and I'm sure I agree with her. The idea of that old man appointing a trust company to look after Mrs. Strong's money. It isn't as though there wasn't plenty of it. The Strongs are the richest people in town, I guess."

"Well, for mercy's sakes!" cried Aunt Emmy, disgust in every syllable, "if it don't beat all! You are as big a fool as she is then!"

"What do you mean, Aunt Emmy?" asked Helen with dignity. "I think it nothing short of disgraceful for a man to show that he has no confidence in his wife by putting his money in strangers' hands to be doled out to her as they see fit."

"You never thought that up, Helen," said Aunt Emmy, "that's Mrs. Strong. She always talks as though she was living in a story book, poor, silly, little thing."

Helen blushed and Aunt Emmy went on—"Do you know what it means to administer an estate, especially a big one like Mr. Strong's?"

"Why, no," stammered Helen, "but it must be simple."

Aunt Emmy sniffed. "Simple! Let me tell you a little about it. When a man dies the things he owns cease for a time to be anybody's property and become his estate. The property passes from his control on his death naturally, and as his estate it is controlled and supervised by the Court which will be in charge of the estate for many months probably. First this Court finds out whether or not there is a will and if the will is valid. Then it must find out about the executor. If the will is properly drawn and valid, it will be 'admitted to probate.' The persons who witnessed it must be found and examined.

"The executor must satisfy the Court as to fitness and willingness to perform the many arduous duties involved. Perhaps he will have to furnish a bond, to assure the Court of his financial responsibility. He must assemble all the so-called assets, have them valued and file an inventory and appraisal of them with the Court. All the debts against the estate must be collected. The settlement of all claims against persons and corporations is a job no one without a thorough knowledge of business can undertake.

"In an estate like Mr. Strong's there is sure to be a certain amount of financial negotiation that demands banking knowledge. Then the executor must pay claims against the estate in the order of precedence laid down by law. Also you know state inheritance and federal estate taxes must be met promptly. Finally, after the estate is settled as to claims it has and claims against it, the executor must see that the various bequests are made."

"Oh, Aunty, don't tell me any more. I never thought that there were so many complicated things to be done. Poor Mrs. Strong never knew a thing about business."

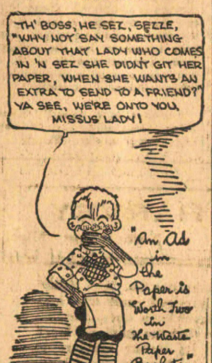
"Mr. Strong knew that," remarked Aunt Emmy dryly, "and don't you suppose he had his children in mind, too? He wanted his estate handled so that the children and Mrs. Strong would be protected and assured of a good, comfortable living all their lives, with something to go on to the grandchildren. Even if Mrs. Strong were a business woman, no one could tell how long she would live to administer the estate. He knew that the trust company would not die, nor lose its faculties, nor be influenced by personal feeling so that it might be unjust to some one, and that it represents some of the best business and banking judgment in town."

"Well, I guess old man Strong knew what he was doing!" said Helen.—Anne B. Aymes.

The more recently adopted method of killing the common barberry which spreads black stem rust of small grains is by the use of such chemicals as salt and kerosene, according to the Department of Agriculture. These methods have several advantages over the digging method formerly used. They are less laborious, cheaper and more certain. This is especially true if bushes are growing in stony ground where digging is difficult. Department Circular 356 tells all about how to use this method.—Banker-Farmer.

H. S. Mowrer, chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the New Jersey Bankers Association, together with H. J. Baker, director of extension work in the College of Agriculture, made a complete tour of the state this spring, calling on the county agents and agricultural committees of the various county organizations to get a definite line-up on the work done and the plans for the coming year. Ways and means for furthering the program of the state committee were considered at these conferences.

MICKIE SAYS



TH' BOSS, HE SEZ, SEZZE, "WHY NOT SAY SOMETHING ABOUT THAT LADY WHO COMES IN 'N SEZ SHE DIDN'T GIT HER PAPER, WHEN SHE WANTS AN EXTRA TO SEND TO A FRIEND?" YA SEE, WE'RE ONTO YOU, MISSUS LADY!
"An Ad in the Paper is Worth Two in the Waste Paper Basket"

Sound Optimistic

While leading speakers at the big general sessions of the conference faced the acute farm problems squarely, a general note of optimism marked the week. As one leading spokesman expressed it: "It is apparent that agriculture has passed over the divide and is on the mend. Farm prosperity, as compared with other businesses, will increase steadily."

Exhibits of farm crops, poultry, and horticultural material attracted especial interest during the week, the new horticultural building at M. S. C. being formally opened to the people of the state. Livestock and machinery sections of displays also attracted their share of visitors

More than 30 associations and groups held special meetings and conferences of their own, in addition to the general meetings. A score or more of famous farm leaders from outside the state augmented the list of Michigan speakers on these programs.

Home Town Editors Hold Meeting

The building of even better "home town" papers in Michigan occupied the attention of more than 100 members of the state Press Association during a conference held here last week, during the annual Farmers Week at M. S. C.

The publishers of Michigan's weekly newspapers gathered in force to discuss the craft problems of their order and to join in various specially planned social occasions. Several leading newspaper authorities from outside the state were heard from at different times during the press conference. The attendance was said to be the largest in the more than 50 years history of the Michigan Press Association.

Officers elected for the coming year were: Schuyler Marshall, Clinton County Republican-News, St. Johns, President; Hiram Johnson, Saranac Advertiser, Vice-President; and Herbert Wood, Bangor Advance, Secretary Treasurer.

Dry Substitutes For Liquid Lime Sulphur Unsatisfactory

Horticulturists and orchardists who are obliged to fight the San Jose scale again the coming spring and summer will find it to their advantage to stick to the liquid lime sulphur or mineral-oil sprays which they have used in the past, rather than to depend upon the use of "dry" substitutes. That is the conclusion reached by the United States Department of Agriculture after three years of trials of a number of dry lime sulphur substitutes now offered commercially. While the value of these dry substitutes which have been on the market for a number of years is a disputed point, the department's test found them unsatisfactory when compared with the liquid lime sulphur.

The department's experiments include 39 tests with dry calcium sulphur, 13 tests with dry sodium sulphur, and 11 tests with dry barium sulphur. They were conducted under practical orchard conditions in four different States and cover a period of three years. Both apple and peach trees were used and conditions varied from a moderate infestation to incrustation. Conditions in the different orchards were such that the natural increase of the scale varied from rapid to moderate.

These tests showed that the commercial samples of dry calcium, sodium, and barium sulphurs even when used at strengths much greater than ordinarily employed, do not furnish a satisfactory control of the San Jose scale.

700 Attend Annual Session Of Michigan State Farm Bureau

With more than 700 delegates and other members in attendance, the Eighth Annual Meeting of the Michigan State Farm Bureau was the largest group meeting held in connection with the recent Farmers' Week at M. S. C.

Addresses by noted speakers, detailed reports of the past year's work of the organization and its present status, consideration of resolutions and a big banquet and old-time dance were high spots in the two day session.

Sam H. Thompson of Illinois, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, was the headline feature of the afternoon session of Thursday Feb. 4, the first day of the convention. Mr. Thompson made a statesmanlike analysis of the present agricultural situation and discussed particularly the problem of handling the surplus crop production so that it would not undermine the price levels which the farmer receives for his products.

NEW POLICY NEEDED

"America is faced with the need of developing a new agricultural policy," declared Mr. Thompson. "The American farmer must get an American price for his products if he is to longer maintain an American standard of living. The farmer is not getting a fair share of the national income. This is not a problem that concerns the farm group alone. The national prosperity itself is not secure unless this difficulty is speedily overcome.

Council Proceedings Shall Be Published

For the benefit of a few moss backs who suppose their own way is good enough we want to call attention to the state law which requires public meetings of village councils: "The Council shall prescribe the rules of its own proceedings and shall be published in the village paper if there be one in the town."

There is a suspicion in some of our adjoining villages that meetings of the council are held in secret, and as will be noted by the law this is criminal and subject to punishment. For the past two or three months there have been irregularities iu publishinc meetings in this paper and it is claimed no meetings have been held. We challenge the right to conduct village affairs in this manner. The State officials are after all councils failing to live up to the law and have already sent special word here inquiring if this law is observed. A stitch in time sometimes saves nine.

He Slept With Lincoln

We have many freaks of curio men now a days and they all lay claim to some peculiar experience or another, and for the past forty years men both white and colored have constantly bobbed up who claimed to have been Lincoln's body servants, coachmen, bootblacks and hostlers, but the latest claimant says he slept with honest old "Abe". This presumptious gentleman is no more or less than Lucien S. Hanks of Wisconsin now 87 years of age and hale and hearty, bidding fair to spin many another yarn before he passes in his final checks. However this man is no relative of Nancy Hanks as might be imagined.

Hank tells it as follows:

"Well do I remember when as a youth of 21 I first saw Abraham Lincoln.—and tried to sleep with him. Twas in October 1859 I was stopping at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Tallman in Janesville Wisconsin, uncle and aunt of mine. I was also deeply in love with the daughter "Gussie" who was my cousin. It was the time of the Lincoln—Douglass debates and Lincoln had just returned from the state fair and was an invited guest at the home of the Tallmans.

I thought he was the ugliest man I ever had looked upon.

Probably it was because of his homely countenance. On that occasion Mr. Lincoln wore a black frock coat, dark stock tie, black vest, thick heavy boots with double soles and his feet were as big as an elephant's. He wore a black slouch hat. I do not know what he carried in the old fashioned carpet bag he had with him, but one thing was a nightgown, which he wore that night when I tried to sleep with him. He was scrupulously clean in his personal habits and appearance.

There are some other incidents of that evening which I recall. Sometime after the introduction I remember that Aunt Emeline told me I would have to sleep on the sofa that night because of visitors. I had thought the remark had passed unnoticed by others. But when Mr. Lincoln got back from his speech that evening, he touched Aunt Emeline on the shoulder and said: "The boy and I will get along together all right; he and I will sleep together." He had evidently overheard what Aunt Emeline had said to me earlier in the evening.

Before the speech Mr. Lincoln visited with the entire family. During the early evening "Gussie" and her mother went into the parlor and "Gussie" sat down on the sofa. Soon Mr. Lincoln went into the parlor and I followed, because I wanted to be near the girl, she was so beautiful, and I was in love with my cousin. Mr. Lincoln bowed to the mother and then sat down on the sofa, beside her.

"Now Miss Tallman, I want you to tell me about your beaux," he said.

"But I haven't any," she quickly responded.

"Are you sure you are telling me the truth?" asked Mr. Lincoln turning toward me with questioning eyes. What a moment that was to me!

In those days the Tallman home was one of the finest residences in Southern Wisconsin. It had been erected early in the fifties from pressed brick brought from Milwaukee. The rooms were large and the house was handsomely furnished. At one side of a wide hallway at the entrance were the sitting and dining rooms and across the hall was a drawing-room, used only on occasions.

The evening of the visit, while we were chatting in the drawing room, Mr. Lincoln faced the sitting room and I could see that he was interested in the next room. Finally he spoke what was in his mind

"Mrs. Tallman, may we sit in the other room?" he asked. The suggestion pleased her. He evidently had the habit of making people feel at home with him. Soon it was time for the address.

Not being particularly interested in politics at that time I did not hear the speech. There was a dance in one of the neighboring houses and I went to that instead. It was about 11 o'clock when I came back. Lincoln had returned and was talking intently with Mr. Tallman. I went to bed—no one paid any attention to me.

I lay at the back of the bed, and believe that I went to sleep. Though I was awakened when Mr. Lincoln came in about midnight I pretended to be asleep. He undressed quickly and came to bed. For about ten or fifteen minutes he was quiet and apparently went right to sleep. He seemed very uneasy. Soon he gave vocal evidences of slumber. His body jerked and twitched spasmodically, and often he touched me. His long legs would be kicking around, the subconscious effect probably of his vigorous speech but an hour or two before. He and Mr. Tallman were strong abolitionists and perhaps their conversation before going to bed had made him nervous. He was very restless. There was simply no sleep whatever for me. I could stand it no longer. I slipped out of bed and went into the hall, where I slept on a sofa the remainder of the night. Lincoln never knew when I left.

In the morning a humorous incident occurred. At the end of the hall, near the stairway leading to the second floor, was a closet supplied with slippers. Everyone was expected to exchange his shoes for slippers before he went to bed. By oversight Mr. Lincoln had not been informed of this custom and wore his boots to his room and then set them outside the door. Next morning he was late in coming down. It was nearing train time. Edgar was finally told to call him, but, as he started, Lincoln entered the sitting room. I can see him now. He was minus boots—his blue yarn stockings with white tips being plainly in evidence. Turning to Mrs. Tallman, he smilingly declared:

"I can't accuse you, but I have no boots."

Aunt Emeline was a bit mortified Finding the boots at his door, the janitor had taken and cleaned them but returned them to the downstairs closet. Lincoln sat down in the sitting room and pulled them on before the entire family.

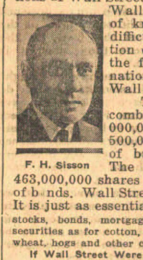
I went by way of Washington in the autumn of 1863 to visit with Edgar Tallman and then on to my old home at Hartford, Connecticut. While in Washington I met President Lincoln on the street. I knew him the moment I saw him; he was such a homely looking fellow I could not forget him. President Lincoln apparently recognized me as someone he had seen before and stopped.

"I am Hanks, the fellow who tried to sleep with you," I said coming up and shaking his hand. Lincoln laughed, declared that he had remembered the incident, and invited me to visit him. But I was in such a hurry to get back to my old home that I did not seize this opportunity. I was shocked and pained less than two years after when I read in the papers that he had been cruelly assassinated."

There is no road to eminence except the rough and rock-strewn path of toil and hardship.

Suspicions About Wall Street and How They Arise

By FRANCIS H. SISSON, President
Trust Company Division, American Bankers Association



F. H. Sisson

WOULD-BE economists, political orators and the general public make frequent positive assertions about the functions of Wall Street without any realization of what constitutes Wall Street or what purpose it serves. Lack of knowledge breeds suspicion. Yet it is not difficult to understand the nature and function of Wall Street. Let us set down a few of the facts which account for the existence and nation-wide, as well as international, services of Wall Street.

There are 316 banks in New York with combined capital and surplus of about $1,400,000,000. Their deposits aggregate over $11,500,000,000, and during 1924 their total volume of business reached nearly $250,000,000,000. The New York Stock Exchange in 1925 sold 463,000,000 shares of stock and in 1924 $3,828,000,000 worth of bonds. Wall Street is the national credit and money market. It is just as essential that there be markets for money and for stocks, bonds, mortgages and other securities as for cotton, corn, tobacco, wheat, hogs and other commodities.

If Wall Street Were Destroyed

Wall Street is the natural evolution of the forces of trade and finance. It exists because there is imperative need for it in the nation's business. If some cataclysm should destroy the financial district of New York we would see frantic efforts to re-establish it so that trade and industry could continue. If the production and marketing of agricultural and industrial commodities did not need such a financial institution, Wall Street would not exist.

We depend upon the farmer to help maintain the general level of prosperity. Wall Street as a money market is called upon to finance the growth and marketing of farm crops. Many Wall Street bankers were born and raised on farms. If they were not thoroughly familiar with agricultural requirements, they could not hold their present positions in the financial world.

In the period of deflation, Wall Street suffered proportionately as much as the farmer. The aggregate losses of Wall Street banks mounted to a staggering sum. Wall Street is not an independent institution, but an organic part of the country's business system, necessarily reflecting the ups and downs of business.

Four Billion Dollars

An approximate estimate of the main items in Wall Street's financial operations in handling farm crops shows that New York banks for the purpose of agriculture put out commercial loans to the value of one billion dollars, hold bankers' acceptances for another billion, buy commercial paper such as cattle and sheep loans for a third billion and carry balances of country banks for a fourth billion. Thus Wall Street furnishes a $4,000,000,000 river of credit annually to produce farm products and float them to market.

The outward flow to rural banks enables them to make the required advances on farm crops and for warehousing and handling cotton, tobacco, wheat, raisins, prunes and countless other products. Outside of his own personal efforts on his farm, Wall Street is the biggest single factor in the prosperity of the farmer. After these commodities have been moved to market, the money used in handling them returns to Wall Street for investment. New York is the largest security market in the country and offers a use and market for the idle capital of the rural banks between crops.

Funds from every part of the country flow to New York, attracted by the greater opportunity for their profitable use found in this center. Thus the accumulations of deposits are large, and in turn the openings for the useful employment of these funds in the facilitation of trade, industry and investment are upon a correspondingly ample scale. It is clear that these funds must be employed sanely, constructively and to the real service of the business community. Otherwise they would inevitably soon be withdrawn.

Huge Investments Help Farmers

These huge investment operations in Wall Street are of significance to the farmer. Much of the $10,000,000,000 invested in farm mortgages was advanced by Eastern financial institutions. In no sense is Wall Street's interest in agriculture local or sectional. The main function of New York financial institutions is to send money where it is most needed.

Another service rendered to agriculture by Wall Street is the purchase of Farm Loan bonds, Joint Stock Land Bank bonds and the debentures of the Intermediate Credit Banks. There is a total of $1,451,800,000 of this paper outstanding, of which New York banks took about one billion.

Wall Street loans to country banks are made at low rates, usually below 4½ per cent. The local banker's rates to his customers are adjusted to local conditions, which cannot justly be laid at the door of Wall Street.

General financial service to other industries related to agriculture also helps the farmer substantially. Wall Street loans to the packers, railroads, millers and farm-machinery manufacturers to help them serve agriculture.

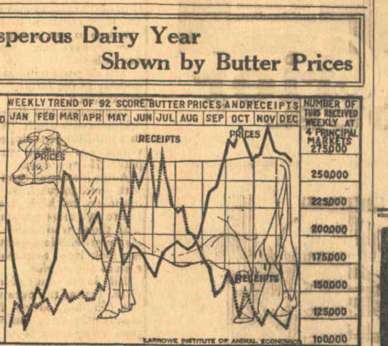
Wall Street is as necessary and serviceable in the handling of credit and capital as is the cold-storage plant in caring for seasonal perishable products. The necessity of such a credit center in a country with a $60,000,000,000 annual business is obvious.

What the People Want

Every great international bank in New York maintains close relations with thousands of other banks in the United States and in every foreign country of any importance. The movements of commerce and investment are supported upon this interrelated system of domestic and foreign banks. Thus it comes about that the products of the farm, factory and mine are financed by these banks all the way from the producer to the foreign consumer.

Wall Street in the discharge of its true functions as the nation's reservoir of capital and credit includes the whole business community in its field of operations. Its control lies with the people. Their demands govern it, and their presence or absence from the market determines its trends. Wall Street prospers as farming and industry prosper. Its service is to the people of the whole country and, for them, to the people of other countries. It is the direct reflection of American agriculture, industry and commerce.—From the Country Gentleman.

Prosperous Dairy Year Shown by Butter Prices



THE 1925 butter market reveals a prosperous condition in the dairy industry, according to the year-end agricultural review of the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Although butter production during the first nine months of the past year seems to have lagged behind the corresponding period in the year previous, it was larger during the last quarter of 1925 than in the corresponding period of 1924. Beginning with October, receipts were the largest on record at this season of the year. For the year as a whole they were about 3 per cent less than in 1924.

Prices averaged higher than in 1924. The average wholesale price of 92 score creamery butter on the New York market in 1925 was approximately 45 cents a pound compared with 43 cents the year previous. Highest 1925 prices were received in October and November when weekly averages reached 52 and 51.5 cents, respectively.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

Holy Ground

JOSEPH S. MORRIS, WISCONSIN

When you step into the presence of little children, "take off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."

Let it not for moment be thought that the things adults say and do in the presence of children have no significance. How often there come back to us from out the store house of memory unpleasant scenes of childhood days and unsavory tales that should never have been told in our hearing.

Is it not quite enough that we should inherit the mental, physical and spiritual characteristics of our parents without having also to be loaded with some of their unsavory acquired characteristics?

Even when the parental influence is all that it should be, still is the small child subjected through his acute sense of hearing and through his eager eye to seeing and hearing things that smudge the atmosphere, and leave an indelible mark upon the memory.

Every child is entitled to the best mental, physical, spiritual, and social development that is available. He has a right to grow where his body will have a chance to be strong and robust. He has a right to grow where his mind may be developed according to its capacity. He has a right to grow in an atmosphere of reverence—reverence for God, for man, for woman for laws, customs, and usages. He is powerless to protect himself from the reverence smashers and therefore has a right to our protection He has a right to such development as will bring him to maturity with the knowledge that right use of all things leads to happiness. He has a right to be protected against the impure, the profane, the unholy, the lawless, and he has a right to that protection from every man and woman.

Be fair to little children if you would have a fair society.

Boys and girls are naturally clannish. The hates and the spites, the injustices and the impurities of their elders too often corrupt their young lives. Help them to build a fairer world by circumspection in their presence. It will pay a thousandfold in good citizenship.

Margaret Slattery has well said of the boy and girl: "He or she is tomorrow. They are the ancestry to which the future will look back with gratitude or condemnation. They are the embodiment of the past and the prophesy of the future In them lies the possibility for the happiness and well being of untold generations, or the anguish and suffering of multitudes. They are the product of the law. If law be flouted and disobeyed in their training, it will break them—and with them, as they grow in numbers, the society of which they are a part."

We are debtor both to the past and to the future; to show our gratitude to the past for the untold good which we have inherited to the future, that our children whom we have surrounded with love and kindness and high ideals and their children. that they may continue to live in a decent world after we have been "gathered to our fathers."

The disposition to say. "we owe nothing to the future," is childish selfishness."

Irreverence and disrepect do not originate with youth. They origiuate in adult life and their poison breath vitiates the air on youth's high plane. Have a care.

Adult life needs to mingle more with youth to catch its purity, its optimism, its high hope for the future. We must not stay too long with those who have seen life's last sunrise. Time spent with youth is a look into tomorrow, a look toward the sunrise.

Life is the result of hidden motives. Just as the pure water from the fountain comes from water that is pure at its source, so will pure living come from lives that are pure in heart.

"DON'T"

Don't send my boy where your girl can't go
And say, there's no danger for boys
you know;
Because they all have their wild oats to sow;
There is no more excuse for my boy to be low
Than your girl. Then please don't tell him so.
Don't send my boy where your girls can't go;
For a boy or a girl, sin is sin, you know,
And my baby boy's hands are as clean and white
And his heart as pure as your girl's to-night. —Anon.

Farm Week Crowds Break All Records

All attendance records for the annual Farmers Week at the M. S. C. were broken last week. Official estimates show that more than 7,000 farmers and their families gathered at the college at some time during the five day conference 4,000 checking in on Thursday, Feb. 4, alone.

Ideal weather conditions, with practically all roads open to traffic, played an important part in the attendance. Most of the visitors came in automobiles, the college campus being covered wiih everything trom flivvers to the newest eight cylindered creations all through the week.

More women than ever before "came along with dad" for the Farmers Week activities this year. Hundreds registered at the M. S. C. home economics building and attended the various special conferences on household management

Farm Markets By Radio

A program of farm news and complete marke reports is now being broadcasted every evening at 7;00 eastern Standard time, over Station WGHP, through the courtesy of Dodge Brothers and the Michigan Business Farmer.

This powerful broadcasting station at Detroit is owned and operated by G. Harrison Phelps. Inc., with 1500 watts capacity and can be easily picked up by any receiving set in Michigan. It will give fruit, butter, live stock, seed egg and grain quotations, then the weather report and predictions.

Coming as it does at suppertime when the farm family are gathered in the home, the program must be more than welcome. Wave length is 270 meters and goes on promptly at 7;00 standard, except Saturday and Sunday evenings.

The Approach of Spring

No, the Editor has not seen any robins as yet, but he believes he can smell the twang of spring in the cold gray sunshine that filters thtough every crack and creeps around the corners away from the screeching winds of February. The scribe knows spring ie not far behind and it must be on its way when the festive politician goes about with hands in trousers pockets and a forty-rod wink in his left eye. You watch this sucker a minute and you get his enthusiasm too, for it appears he is posting up some sort of proclamation. You draw nigh and Lo! it is a caucus notice. Sure this parasite is up to his old tricks. Well, we concede it is mighty lucky he didn't take the bull by the horns and pull off his blamed old caucus without any notice.

Then, there are other signs.

Bill Swearingen who has most every day since Thanksgiving been found astride the cracker barrel in Thingumbob's grocery discussing the gas tax, is now down from his perch and very uneasy. He often walks tothe stove to spit and yesterday he walked to the window and peered anxiously out. Bill's eye had that far away near-at-hand expression, and at one time it seemed as if Bill would speak right out but he didn't. The whole thing indicates something is coming.

What that "something" is nobody knows, but the crows feet in ths corners of Bill's tobacco eater indicate his premonition of sorrow to come, for as sure as you live, Mrs. Bill will soon be thinking of cleaning house and there'll be rugs to shake and carpets to beat and Bill's luncheon will have to come off the clock shelf. All these things and some others worry Swearingen mightily. Bill hasn't been to caucus regularly all these years for nothing, you bet, because he stands in with the push—that is, the boys who plan to put over things in the spring. He has been asked by at least four of the leading politicians to be present at the caucus and vote for so and so who is truly a representative of the whole village's best interests, and these same benevolent fixers also warned Bill to beware of the Sit-easy church gang down there who want to ruin the town. Bill has got an idea or two himself about the Sit-easy church folks, you bet! Nobody knows what they might reck. Once they suggested the village had been flim-flammed—the under handed rascals!

Yea, verily spring is near at hand, becanse Bill is seen stealing homeward in the dim twilight with a sour face. Thingumbob has put away the cracker barrel and the other day he told Swearingen the bill of $22 for provisions last fall, must be paid AT ONCE! This hit like a pail of water thrown on a hot stove, and Bill turned his pockets inside out to show Thingumbob just how he was fixed—but it didn't work, Bill is very unhappy —spring is nigh!

Nations May Adopt Thirteen Month Calendar

Fresh stimulus has recently been given to the reform of the calendar by the action of the committee of inquiry of the League of Nations in calling representatives of the Roman, Greek, and other orthodox churches of the East, the Anglican Church of Great Britian, and about 100 Protestant churches to discuss the advisability of making Easter a fixed instead of a movable date, dependent on the full moon. The first or second Sunday in April has been suggested.

Further sessions of the committee of inquiry are to be held soon to make definite recommendations to the League of Nations regarding plans for calendar reform. Enthusiastic support has been given in many quarters to the plan that would divide the year into thirteen 28 day months, with an extra year day at the end of the last week in December. Every four years a leap day would be inserted at the end of June. The change, it is said could be made easily on January 1 1928, as that will be Sunday.

Prof. C. F. Marvin, Chief of the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture indorses the 13 month year because it would greatly simplify meteorological and other scientific records. He points out also that there are innumerable advantages to economic, agricultural, civic, educational, and business interests in having all months and quarters exactly alike, and the numbered days of each month always falling on the same day of the week. Many difficulties now existing in compiling accurate comparative statistics, in accounting, banking or computing interest would be done away with.

An interesting fact in connection with the proposed calendar is that it harmonizes in many respects with the plan of the old calendar used by the Israelites.

Detailed soil surveys have been completed in 20 Michigan's 83 counties, according to the soils department at the state college. The object of the surveys is said to be the supplying of definite information on the drainage and soil fertility problems in the counties covered. A special bulletin is being issued by the soils department at M. S. C. as each of these county surveys is completed. These bulletins show the types of land within the county, and give proper fertilizer treatment for the different types. The survey work is to be continued as rapidly as possible in other counties of the state.

"Will you promise me—that you will not—" He hardly knew what he wished to ask from the girl who so tensely listened. There had been nothing between them. He had no right—but in spite of his diffidence found himself begging: "You will not destroy yourself—that beautiful talent, that—soul, because you think to save your father?" He was talking recklessly now, all reticence gone. "No matter what happens to the post—what Lascelles tries to do, promise me that you will not throw your happiness, your life, to the winds. It is not necessary, as you may think. I have ample means, I will gladly finance your father—I have influence; I'll take it up with headquarters in Montreal. We'll beat Lascelles! Don't—don't destroy yourself, mademoiselle!"

As he finished, she was smiling at him through mist-blurred eyes, then rose and went to the window.

"You have not already?" he faltered, thinking of her letter to Albany.

From the window came the low answer, "I am the fiancee of Monsieur Lascelles."

"You are mad—mad," he groaned, stunned, unable to accept, now that he had heard it, what he had feared. "I had no right to ask you—what I did. But I could not help it, mademoiselle. I might have known—the heart of you—was dead. You have killed a beautiful thing."

She suddenly turned a tragic face. "Monsieur, you may wonder why I let you say these things, but you have guessed the reason," and she placed her hands on her breast, "the heart of me—is dead." And she left the room.

To remain longer under the factor's roof, to sit at dinner with this hopeless girl, who had bartered her happiness for her father's welfare, and the man who was brute enough to accept the sacrifice, was unthinkable, so Steele went to the little room which had been his since his coming, to pack his duffle bag. There he found Charlotte, waiting.

"You weesh for to maree ma'm'selle?" the Indian abruptly demanded. The question was startling, but did honor to the loyalty of the grave-faced woman who confronted him.

"She is to marry Monsieur Lascelles," said Steele gently, touched by the evident friendliness which prompted Charlotte to seek him out.

"She hate M'sieu Lascelles!" vehemently protested the Ojibway. "She cry an' cry w'en she send heem de lettair. You are de good man. Michel say. Daveed tell you have beeg house, far away sout'. You tak' ma'm'selle, she t'ink you good man, she weel go wid you for your woman!"

Steele's pulse quickened at the thought. "Would she go with me, would she go with me?" he repeated to himself, "if I were man enough to take her from her father? She could never face a future with Lascelles!" Then his knowledge of Denise St. Onge asserted itself. "But no, she has given her word; and she'll keep it. She's that kind. She would never desert her father, and she's bound herself to Lascelles. It's too late!"

Searching his face with eager eyes Charlotte waited for his answer.

"It's too late—Charlotte. Mademoiselle has already told the Frenchman that she will marry him."

The scowl of contempt which greeted his reply transformed the dark face of the Ojibway into that of a fury. She had placed her faith in this American, and he had failed her.

"Daveed tell me you are good man to fight—have de strong heart," she hurled at him. "Why you have de fear ov dat leet'le Frenchmans—are you beeg rabbit? Why you not tak' her away een de cano'? She weel go!"

Again, a fierce exultation swept him. Charlotte must know her mistress' secret thoughts to speak so confidently. What he had of late felt—sensed—in the presence of Denise St. Onge; what he had put aside as impossible, unbelievable—an illusion, based on his own emotions—might, after all, have been her instinctive call for help; the unvoiced reaching out of her heart to one who would understand her need. But he had failed her. The victim of his own lack of vanity, he had gone off upriver and left her to solve her problem alone, to bind herself definitely to Lascelles, when, had he acted on his instincts, he might have saved her from herself. He had been blind—and lost.

"We must wait, Charlotte. What you tell me—about mad'moiselle—I—did not—know. But don't lose heart. First, I've work to do. I'm going to catch that Windigo. Then—"

Steele did not finish, for the scowling face of the Ojibway woman went a sickly gray at the mention of the dread name, and she disappeared through the door.

As he hastily threw his clothes into the canvas bag, the words of Charlotte, "She weel go wid you for your woman," returned to mock him. Did the Indian really know, after all, or was she trying to force his hand? That this exquisite girl whom he had found in the northern forests, as one finds a jewel in the grass, should have come to care for a man of whom she knew so little, seemed unbelievable. And yet more than once since that day on the mountain he had surprised a look in her eyes which had strangely sent his pulses racing. And now that he knew he had been loving her all those precious [illegible] which he might have made indelible in memory—he faced the bitter conviction that Denise St. Onge, once she had given her word, would keep it.

He carried his bag to Michel's shack and announced to the surprised owner that he would eat and sleep there; then, while in search of David, he ran into St. Onge.

"Monsieur Steele," the old soldier gripped his guest's hand and vigorously shook it. "You have my extreme admiration—and gratitude. Mon Dieu! But you were magnificent. To see you my friend and guest, insulted before my eyes—and how you made him ridiculous!"

Steele's face hardened.

"But your daughter—what of her?" he demanded, almost fiercely, of the man whose eyes wavered before his cold glance.

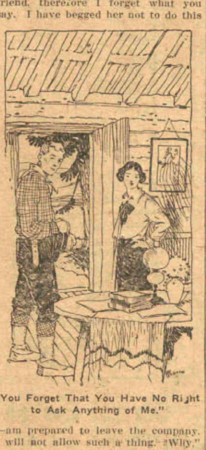
"You have seen her?"

"Yes, she has told me. She's ruined herself—thrown away her happiness—her life."

"And all for me," sighed the father, "all for me!"

"But you knew she would do it—to protect your future with the company; and you allowed her to," Steele continued pitilessly, in a voice, low, but carrying the bitterness of gall in its tones. "Colonel St. Onge, you have permitted a beautiful soul to destroy itself. You—"

"Stop, monsieur!" St. Onge interrupted, in a voice broken with passion. "You do not know—and you are my friend, therefore I forget what you say. I have begged her not to do this



"You Forget That You Have No Right to Ask Anything of Me."

—am prepared to leave the company. I will not allow such a thing. Why," and the factor shook his clenched fists in Steele's face, "I would kill that pig Lascelles before I gave her to him."

"But she has given herself to him, of her own free will, today. And she is a thoroughbred; she will keep her word."

St. Onge glared into Steele's immobile face. "She will never marry that canaille, Monsieur Steele," he said pointedly, "the St. Onges have always known how to defend their honor."

The two were interrupted by the appearance of Lascelles crossing the clearing, and Steele, in no mood to meet the subject of the conversation, left the excited factor awaiting the approach of the man who was exulting in his hard-won victory. As he turned away, he said: "I have moved my stuff to Michel's shack. It is needless for me to tell you how much I appreciate your hospitality and that of your daughter. You understand of course that I could not stay."

"Yes, monsieur, it would only be embarrassing to you and to me, but I regret deeply to have you go."

CHAPTER VII

The following morning the people of Walling River were at the river shore where three men stood beside a loaded canoe near which rested a company birch bark.

Then approaching from the factor's house appeared the figure of Denise St. Onge.

He had seen her for a moment that morning, for his contemplated journey to the Feather lakes and the autumn camps of the Ojibways, interrupted by their discovery of the day before, might admit of no return to the post before starting south. It all depended how early the winter broke. So he had called at the factor's to say good-by until the sled trails were hard in November. For late into the previous night he had sat with his two swart-faced companions planning many things, and the first of these was an early return to Walling River with the fastest team of dogs that money would buy in the Nepigon country. Another was a systematic running down of the mysterious marauder, on the snow, where his trail could not escape them; the last, and most vital to Brent Steele he touched upon only to the extent of assuring Michel that Lascelles should never succeed in his plan to force Denise St. Onge into a marriage to protect her father's future with the Revillon Freres, notwithstanding the fact that she had already assented to his wishes. And the lean half-breed had sprung to his feet with an oath, and wringing Steele's hand, cried: "Eef you do not come back, m'sieu, and he cum to tak' her to Albany, dey weel fin' dead man by name of Lascelles een hees bed at Wallin' Riviere."

"Never fear," Steele had answered, "David and I are coming back after Messieurs Lascelles and Windigo."

Steele was keenly curious of Denise St. Onge's motive in coming to the beach when he had already bade her good-by that morning at the house. He had said: "Mademoiselle, I am started again with David and may not return to Walling River before going south. Will you promise this one thing?"

"Monsieur Steele," she had replied, so patently fearing what the American might say that she lost control of her voice. "You forget that you have no right to ask anything of me."

But he had boldly ignored her protest. "I ask you, Denise St. Onge, not to throw away your future—your life—if you must—until spring. I am coming back on the snow, in November, to clear up this mystery and—to save you from yourself." And without waiting for her reply, for he did not dare trust himself, had left her.

And now for some reason she was hurrying toward them, on a mission seemingly urgent. Brent Steele watched the approaching girl with high hope. David and Michel exchanged curious glances. Then she reached them.

"I could not have you go, Monsieur Steele," she said in her low, throaty voice, "without wishing you bon voyage." In her haste, a vagrant lock of black hair had loosed itself and she caught it up with her left hand, as she extended her right to Steele.

To her embarrassment he held the hand overlong in his as his eyes questioned hers.

"You asked me to make you a promise, monsieur," she said in a voice barely audible, looking from him to the hills to the south. "Well, I've come to say, au revoir. You have—my promise." And she swiftly disengaged her hand and had reached the clearing before Steele sensed to the full what her words had meant.

Then to Steele's brain, dazed with surprise and joy, returned the words of Charlotte: "She t'ink you good man, she weel go wid you for your woman." And he lifted his chest high with a deep breath, for he now believed Charlotte had known.

St. Onge and Lascelles left the trade-house and approached the waiting canoes.

"Good morning, gentlemen, you are late," greeted the man still in the clouds with the thought and picture of the girl who had but that moment entered her house.

"Good morning, monsieur," returned St. Onge. "Monsieur Lascelles has decided that he will not have time to go upriver."

Steele smiled sarcastically at his rival. The temptation to turn the tables was overpowering.

"Possibly Monsieur Lascelles has too tender a heart to desire to look at a dead man—or is it his nose?"

Lascelles' face went purple. He choked, made an impulsive movement toward Steele who stood grinning, then gulped down his anger as David laughed outright in his face, while Michel turned his back. Too clever to make a scene in which he was bound to appear at a disadvantage, the inspector, now in control of himself, proceeded to take his revenge by saying:

"No, monsieur, but a soldier and gentleman always gives precedence to the ladies. I have but a few days to stay here and I have decided to spend them all in the company of a very lovely lady, my fiancee, Mademoiselle St. Onge.

"And how long have you been at this work?" the prison visitor asked.

"Oh, just long enough to get the hang of it," the new executioner replied.

Stucco Used Long Ago to Beautify Temples

The homebuilder of today is perhaps apt to think of stucco as more or less of an innovation, something very new and modern. But stucco, like many other things of beauty, had its beginnings back in the dim Dark ages. The temple of Apollo at Bassai in Greece, built about 470 B. C. of yellow sandstone, was faced entirely, both inside and out, with stucco. The stucco was an ideal ground for the decorative polychrome painting which at that period of Grecian history had reached a very high degree of beauty. Not only the wall but also the temple pavements were made of a specially resistant stucco and stained in various patterns with gay pigments. As almost all early art was in the decorative field it would have been very difficult for the artists of those bygone days to have progressed very far without some material of the type of stucco to provide the groundwork for their artistic labors. We are now using these same decorative schemes on the walls of the modern home, perhaps soon we shall be using them on the floors as well.

For greater public service

1925 on the New York Central was not the year of the greatest traffic ever carried, nor of the largest earnings ever received, but we believe that it was the year of the greatest satisfaction with New York Central service.

And that is the goal that a public service corporation should strive for first.

1925 was a year of notably efficient service on the part of New York Central's 170,000 employees, and a year of equally notable cooperation between the railroad and its shippers.

That the standards of cooperation and service set in 1925 may be still further raised in the year just begun is the confident expectation of the New York Central management.

New Air Train

A Detroit man has invented and is now building a new air express consisting of four units or balloons similar in design to Blimps which will travel tandem hooked together. They will have a carrying capacity of 240 passengers, 24,000 pounds of luggage and 40 tons of mail and express.

This aerial train will move at tremendous speed, far in excess of any railroad train, and will be catapaulted through the air by 8 500 horse power motors hooked up to propellers of entirely new design. Aluminum will be the principal material entering into the construction, and it is more than likely that the scheme will require several years of experimenting and a number of lives will be sacrificed before it will be practical. There is no doubt this form of navigation will eventually come to pass.

Annexation Leads The Way

WITH big swinging strides Detroit is marching on out through the Grand River Avenue district spreading real estate profits as it gbes. The last annexation is within one mile of our properties on Telegraph Road. Behind this advance guard of Annexation comes the army of home-seekers and business men. They sweep over the cornfields and land marks, blotting them out. Hand ln hand with this growth goes increase in real estate values, Lots that were out in the suburbs two years ago are now inside the city limits and being readily snapped up at a good increase in pricc. To-day all eyes are turned on the popular West Side Golf Club District, where the dynamic influence of Henry Ford's great enterprises are rapidly taking hold of developments and creatihg a steady, healthy growth. To see is to buy without delay. Inquire of our agents, Dick McBain or Bert Knowles.

Death of Art Smith

True to the pre-destination of his profession the famous aviator Art Smith met his death some time last week Friday evening near Montpeliar. Ohio. when his aeroplane flying in a dense fog, encountered a tree and crashed to earth, The machine caught fire and the aviator burued to death. The only explanation offered is that probably Smith was flying low to find his location as he was not far from the landing field.

Some years ago a man and woman eloped from Fort Wayne. Indiana in an aeroplane and came to Hillsdale to get hooked—as the hub was a Gretna Green for hundreds of Ohio and Indiana lovers. The couple were Art Smith and Miss Amie Cure—reputed to be the first pair in the country to elope in an aeroplane and the machine was the handiwork of the groom. But they were destined for trouble. Somehow in alighting the plane was wrecked and both occupants seriously hurt. Hillsdale folks cared for them and in a few days they were married and returned home. Eventually they were divorced.

Since that time Smith has been a more or less notable flyer and acted as instructor in the World War. The accident at Motpeliar only serves to remind us that aeroplane work is by far the most dangerous yet, and the man-made bird is a long distance from perfection or even medium safety.

Old Fences Made New

At Slight Expense

IT DOESN'T take much time nowadays to keep fence lines stock-tight and in good repair. Not if you use these quick driven Red Top Steel Posts.

You can drive 20 or 30 Red Tops in an hour. And the fencing is attached in a jiffy so that it will never pull away. This means that you can get a lot of fence repaired even in odd moments.

It's pretty risky business letting fence lines go hang while waiting for a time when work is slack to put them in shape. The damage to stock or crops that can come from just one weak spot may be larger than the entire expense of keeping the fences in good shape. An ounce of prevention is certainly worth while here.

Keep a small stock of Red Tops on hand and get one of these One-Man Drivers. Then when you see a wood post going bad simply drive a Red Top alongside, take out the wood post and fasten the fencing to the steel post. These Red Tops will stop any farm critter you've got on your place.

We personally guarantee Red Tops and we are authorized to make adjustments promptly. Red Tops are not an experiment. They are a proved success and have been giving a good account of themselves in thousands of farm fence lines.

We picked the Red Top line because we believe it is the best value. That's the way we try to buy all lines of goods. We expect our business to grow on the basis of giving you a full dollar's worth for every dollar you spend. Come in and see us when you're in town. Get our prices on posts and the other materials you're needing. Prices are mighty reasonable now on posts and other special items.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Mussolini Threatens Germany and Defies League in South Tyrol Affair.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ITALY, as represented by Premier Mussolini, and Germany, through Foreign Minister Stresemann and the reichstag, said a lot of nasty things about each other last week and the alarmists would like to have it appear that peace was threatened. But hostilities, at least for a long time, are quite out of the question. The row, of course, is over the treatment of the German minority in southern Tyrol, the recovered territory which Mussolini insists must be Italianized. In a speech to parliament Mussolini said: "Italy can, if necessary, carry its tricolor beyond the frontier (the Brenner pass), but never will lower it." He declared the policy in the Tyrol would never be changed but would be carried out "obstinately, methodically and precisely." And he added: "If the Germans attempt a boycott, we will answer with boycotts squared. If Germany takes reprisals, we will answer with reprisals cubed."

Germany's formal answer was a declaration adopted by the reichstag that it "vigorously rejects the Italian prime minister's objectively unjustifiable and insultingly phrased attacks and sneers," and reasserting right to support the demand of the German minorities under foreign sovereignty for just treatment. Doctor Stresemann stigmatized Mussolini's address as "soap-box speechifying" and asserted the Italian government had broken its promises to safeguard local traditions in southern Tyrol. He more than intimated that Germany would lay the matter before the League of Nations.

Mussolini's reply was immediate and sharp. He told the League of Nations to keep its hands off. He made these three points:

"1. That the non-Italian population of south Tyrol are outside of those minorities which became objects of special accord in the peace treaties.

"2. That Italy will not accept any discussion of this matter by any assembly or council.

"3. That the Fascist government will oppose with maximum energy any plan of this nature, because it would feel itself guilty of a real crime toward the fatherland if, for 100,000 Germans, the peace and security of 42,000,000 Italians, who surely form the most homogeneous and compact national bloc in Europe, should in any way be compromised."

"These," declared Premier Mussolini, "are not menaces for which any ambiguous dilemma is valid. They are an affirmation of dignity and force."

Berlin officially considered the incident closed until it should be taken up by the league. Meanwhile the Italian authorities in southern Tyrol said they had uncovered a plot by Bavarians to revolt against Italy, and raids were made near Lavarone in which 50 persons were arrested and quantities of arms and ammunition were seized.

GERMANY'S petition for entry into the League of Nations was received Thursday by Secretary General Sir Eric Drummond. The council was called together at once and arrangements made for a session of the assembly to receive the new member.

WITH the unexpected aid of 16 Republican votes, the senate not only voted to repeal the inheritance tax but added $100,000,000 to its committee's cut of $352,000,000 in the government revenues. Taxes on automobiles and trucks, admissions and dues were wiped out. At this writing it is believed the bill will be passed by the senate before the week ends. It is not considered likely that the inheritance tax repeal will stand in conference. More probably the house provisions reducing the rates from a maximum of 40 to 20 per cent will be restored. Other slashes made by the senate may be abandoned in the conference, for the reductions are far below the margin of safety set by the treasury officials.

Chairman Smoot told the senate its action in repealing the automobile passenger-car levy, involving a loss of $70,000,000 in revenue, "will ruin the bill," while Senator Couzens (Rep., Mich.) countered with the charge that it was "a damnable outrage if you take the taxes off dead millionaires and not relieve these burdensome levies."

SECRETARY OF WAR DAVIS suspects that officers of the army air service are using disloyal means in their fight for the creation of a separate air corps, and he has ordered two separate inquiries, one by Maj. Gen. Mason M. Patrick, chief of the air service, and the other by Maj. Gen. Eli A. Helmick, the inspector general. It is charged that officers of the air service have been preparing and circulating letters asking all officers to "get busy and fight now for a separate air service" and to appeal to their congressmen to vote for the Wainright bill. Action on the part of an army officer to influence legislation by clandestine means is expressly forbidden under general order 25. It is asserted by some that General Patrick himself will be involved in the inquiry because of his recent testimony before the house military affairs committee in favor of the Wainright bill, and that committee inquired into the purposes of the investigation and the possibility that it would result in gagging army witnesses called by congressional committees.

Secretary Davis formally denounced the separate service plan, and also issued a bulletin telling his conception of the duties of the air service. "The mission of the air service is to assist the ground forces to gain strategical and tactical successes by destroying enemy aviation, attacking enemy ground forces, and other enemy objectives on land or sea, and, in conjunction with other agencies, to protect ground forces from hostile aerial observation and attack," the bulletin stated. "In addition, it furnishes aerial observation for information and for artillery fire, and also provides messenger service and transportation for special personnel."

WHILE there has been no doubt concerning the attitude of the Roman Catholic church toward compulsory prohibition, that attitude was formally stated for the first time last week by William Cardinal O'Connell of Boston, the church's ranking prelate in the United States. He declares the Catholic church applauds voluntary total abstinence and needs no persuasion to fight against intemperance, but that "compulsory prohibition in general is flatly opposed to Holy Scripture and to Catholic tradition."

Ale, wine and their like, the cardinal holds, are not in themselves evil. He stresses the fact that they have their lawful uses, "ranging from the supreme honor paid to wine, along with bread as the matter of the holy eucharist, to their original work of moistening and enlivening the laborer's rough fare."

"It has been made clear a thousand times," he adds, "that we will work with our separated brethren as temperance men, but not as the tools of those whose confessed policy is world-wide prohibition by installments."

Cardinal O'Connell called attention to what he called an attempt by prohibitionists "to entrap the pope by begging him to give his moral support to secure the observance of the law of prohibition," and added that the ruse had failed badly.

Cardinal Mundelein of Chicago declined to discuss prohibition, holding that it is a purely political issue. He added: "I have always found that when the American people wanted something hard enough they were usually successful in getting it in the end. If the American people do not want prohibition or want it in a modified form, there is a congress as their servant, and if this congress will not do their bidding, let them get another congress that will."

FORMATION of the new $2,000,000,000 Ward Food Products corporation, which is called by some the "baking trust," was attacked by the government in a suit charging violation of the Sherman anti-trust law and the Clayton act. In taking this step the administration believes it has nipped in the bud a scheme to form a gigantic bread monopoly comprising substantially all the wholesale bakeries in the United States. The suit seeks not only the dissolution of such combinations as already have been effected by the baking corporations involved but the consummation of the main merger, recently incorporated by William B. Ward, the bakery millionaire.

Ward and his associates call the merger the "corporation with a soul" because of its plans for community enterprises and for the gift of one-tenth of its profits to charity.

IT APPEARS probable, at the time of writing, that a settlement of the long anthracite coal strike is at hand. A tentative arrangement was reached by leaders of both sides and the miners' full scale committee was called to Philadelphia to ratify it. The joint negotiating committee of twelve was then to meet and make it public.

It was stated unofficially in Wilkes-Barre that the arrangement was substantially as follows:

First, that President Coolidge be invited to mediate the differences between the miners and operators.

Second, that pending the mediation by the President the miners shall return to work; or, under certain conditions, remain on suspension until the decision is made known.

Third, that in the event the mediation decision is unsatisfactory President Coolidge shall be asked to sit as a judge and make a decision on the question at issue.

This decision to be binding on both sides, with the proviso that either side may appeal on questions of fact within ten days.

GREAT BRITAIN'S coal commission has recommended that the government buy and operate all coal mines, shutting down all those that are not paying a profit and re-employing the workers in profitable pits. It does not advise any reduction of wages or increase of working hours underground.

ANCIENT laws are being invoked in both Tennessee and Massachusetts, and their enforcement may lead to revision of the laws in those states. In Tennessee it is the "blue Sunday" law which has been resurrected. It prohibits all work except "acts of real necessity or charity" on Sunday, and it has been invoked especially to close gasoline filling stations on that day. Its general enforcement would stir up things a bit.

In Brocton, Mass., Anthony Bimba, a Lithuanian and the editor of a Communist paper, is about to be put on trial for "wilfully blaspheming the holy name of God by denying and continuously reproaching God." The blasphemy statute has been on the statute books for 229 years and none of the present generation of local lawmakers or defenders of law breakers remembers of its having been invoked previously. Bimba is also accused of "inciting the overthrow of the constituted government of the commonwealth of Massachusetts." The joint committee on rules of the Massachusetts legislature has reported favorably on a motion to establish a special commission to study obsolete laws of the state and recommend their repeal.

COMMANDER FRANCO, the Spanish "Columbus of the air," with his three comrades successfully completed the flight from Spain to Buenos Aires and was given a tremendously enthusiastic welcome to the Argentine capital. The distance covered by the plane was 6,232 miles and the flying time was only 62 hours and 52 minutes. Each stage of the journey was covered in almost the exact time fixed for the distance.

ITALY has taken a decisive step to suppress the Senussi tribesmen in Cyrenaica, North Africa, a column of troops having taken possession of their headquarters, the oasis and city of Jarabub, which controls the trade routes between central Africa and the coast.

Dehorning Wild Elk No Joke for Cowboys

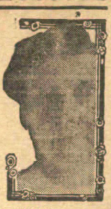
Missoula, Mont.—The task of rounding up 430 head of elk to be shipped from Moiese, in the Blackfeet Indian reservation, to Middleboro, Mass., has proved to be no sinecure and has resulted in delay in starting the consignment of wild animals to their new home in New England hills.

Chief among the difficulties encountered by the cowpunchers who were pressed into service was that of dehorning 100 bull elk so they could be shipped East in electrically-lighted express cars without injury to each other.

Vicious and fleet of foot, the bull elk presented a problem far different to the routine of the ordinary range roundup. It is no trick for the "puncher" to throw, hog-tie and brand a steer, but to capture and dehorn a bull elk is another thing. The problem finally was solved by herding the elk into small corrals, then roping and snubbing them to posts. In this position the antlers were removed with a saw.

Those in charge of the work were unable to say when the first shipment of ten cars would be started east, but hoped that it would be soon, and opined it wouldn't seem bad to get back to the quiet haven of bucking bronchos and long-horned steers.

The herd was started originally by the United States biological survey, but multiplied so rapidly that the range, heretofore reserved for bison, was endangered.



Two Letters

The first written twenty years ago, the second recently by Mrs. J. H. Bourland, Frankston, Texas.

June 2, 1904, she writes:—

"For twenty-three years I was a constant sufferer from chronic catarrh. I had a severe misery and burning in the top of my head, a continual dropping of mucus into my throat causing frequent expectoration. My entire system became involved and I grew worse. It seemed as if I could not recover from a constant cough and frequent attacks of bilious colic. My bowels were affected, causing alarming hemorrhages. I tried many remedies and finally took Pe-ru-na. In three days I was relieved of my bowel trouble and entirely cured by five bottles. I most cheerfully recommend Pe-ru-na."

June 30, 1924, Mrs. Bourland writes again:—

"I will soon be seventy-nine years old and enjoy good health for one of my age. I still recommend Pe-ru-na and take it myself when necessary."

For more than half a century Pe-ru-na has a proud record of good done. Men and women the world over stand ready to testify to its value in the treatment of all catarrhal disorders.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Grand Rapids—Custody of his child, whose birth is expected next June, is asked in a bill for divorce filed in superior court by Victor Rowe against Laura Rowe. They were married less than a year ago. Cruelty and desertion are alleged.

Ann Arbor—In an effort to bring real estate dealers of the state together to discuss problems relating to the professions, real estate brokers and subdividers of the state will meet in a practical conference here at the University of Michigan Union, Feb. 24 and 25. The conference will be under joint auspices of the school of business administration and the Michigan Real Estate Association.

Battle Creek—Ila N. Moore, identified with the beginnings of three Battle Creek concerns: The Union Steam Pump Company, American Steam Pump Company and the Old Advance Pump and Compressor Company, an inventor of marked genius and a pioneer resident of Battle Creek, is dead here at the age of 75. He was long the vice-president of the Union Steam Pump Company.

Ann Arbor—Sir Robert A. Falconer, president of the University of Toronto, will be the principal speaker of the convocation services of the University of Michigan that will be held here the morning of Feb. 22 in commemoration of Washington's birthday, according to a decision reached by the deans of the university. The purpose of the convocation is to bring a prominent educator or lecturer before the students each year.

Kalamazoo—Legislation to prevent further bottle losses will be the object of a campaign inaugurated here by the Michigan Allied Dairy Association at its forty-second annual convention. Many large distributors throughout the state, it was reported, are reporting heavy losses in their bottle, case and can department. Many unscrupulous dealers, it was charged, are operating with bottles and other equipment belonging to their competitors.

Grand Rapids—Charles F. Garratt and Mrs. Annie M. Garratt, widow of Thomas F. Garratt, have disposed of the Michigan Chair Company of this city for a consideration of approximately $1,000,000. The identity of the purchasers is being withheld. The greater portion of the stock subsequently was acquired by Thomas Garratt and passed to his widow and son, Charles, at his death in 1922. The company is one of the largest concerns in Grand Rapids.

Grand Rapids—The Michigan Title Co., which seeks to make photostatic copies of the original deeds, mortgages, liens and other records, including abstracts, in the register of deeds' office so that it can establish an insurance of title business, was informed by the board of supervisors that the county's price is $240,000. This price includes the right of the county, should the original deeds be destroyed, to make copies of the copies held by the title company if the latter accepts the proposition.

Pontiac—Oakland County's new $300,000 infirmary, built on the county owned farm of 137 acres just west of the city limits has been opened formally. The infirmary is said to be the last word in an instiution designed for the care of the indigent. One hundred and twenty-five inmates will be housed. A feature of the building is the two-story glassed in and heated corridors around a court in the center of the building. Summer and winter the aged inmates can enjoy the air and sunshine in these corridors.

Jackson—State Senator Burney E. Brower of Jackson has announced formally that he will be a candidate for the Republican nomination for attorney general of Michigan. "Michigan needs a new criminal code," Senator Brower says. "I assisted in the passage of a resolution by the legislature of 1921 requesting the attorney general to prepare and submit to the legislature as soon as possible a revision and codification of the laws relating to crimes and criminal procedure, but no such codification has been submitted.

Ann Arbor—Outlining the value of the biologist to the lawyer and pointing out imminent legal problems in connection with the development of birth control, Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the University of Michigan, spoke to the senior law students of the university at an informal banquet here. Dr. Little explained the legal difficulties to be surmounted by the advocates of birth control and pointed out the part to be played by these students graduating in the near future from the law schools of the country.

Lansing—William Laird, prosecutor of Washtenaw County, has been asked by the attorney general's department to proceed as soon as possible with the trial of three men held on murder charges in Ypsilanti. The request was the result of a petition from Ypsilanti citizens, who claimed Laird is unwilling to try the cases. The letter sent to Laird today declared that the "attorney general's department has found there is reasonable cause to believe the prisoners are guilty and the facts should be submitted to a jury as soon as possible.

Lansing—Lansing's municipal air field, with little expense and work, will be one of the best in the country, William Stout, of the Stout Metal Airplane company of Detroit, said. "Lansing soon will have an opportunity to be on an air line which may become one of the main trans-continental lines," he said. "The cities which will provide business for the lines will be the ones to get the service and with your excellent field I believe that once the idea is tried more planes would be necessary in addition to the one combination passenger freight plane

WHAT PRICE HEALTH

VALUE of health may not be reckoned in dollars and cents. Two thousand years ago there was perhaps some excuse for the gastronome but today there is none. The way to health lies in a balanced diet. Hippocrates, the father of medicine figured along the same lines back 450 B. C. He expressed the belief that the science of medicine had its beginning in the efforts of men and women to find better and smoother diets.

Diet in the home today is becoming a matter of premier consideration. Women are taking cognizance of those important food elements known as vitamines. They have learned, also, the benefit to the human body of such minerals as iron, calcium and phosphorus.

This knowledge has resulted in the housewife planning her menus with an eye open to dietary values, which is the big reason why milk has assumed such a large place in the menu of the American family. Milk contains every structural element for body building. It is an almost perfect food. Despite the best refrigeration facilities, milk will keep sweet only a short time. Millions of American housewives have solved this big problem by using evaporated milk, which is simply fresh cow's milk sterilized in cans to achieve keeping qualities and with sixty per cent of the water removed.

Evaporated milk is not the same as condensed milk, although many persons confuse the two. The condensed product is a combination of milk and sugar cane in a two-fifth cane sugar and three-fifth milk proportion. Evaporated milk has nothing but water taken from it and nothing at all added. Sugar is the preservative used in manufacturing the condensed product, while heat only is the preservative for evaporated milk. For this reason the evaporated product may be used in any way in which market milk is used.

banking knowledge. Then the executor must pay claims against the estate in the order of precedence laid down by law. Also you know state inheritance and federal estate taxes must be met promptly. Finally, after the estate is settled as to claims it has and claims against it, the executor must see that the various bequests are made."

"Oh, Aunty, don't tell me any more. I never thought that there were so many complicated things to be done. Poor Mrs. Strong never knew a thing about business."

"Mr. Strong knew that," remarked Aunt Emmy dryly, "and don't you suppose he had his children in mind, too? He wanted his estate handled so that the children and Mrs. Strong would be protected and assured of a good, comfortable living all their lives, with something to go on to the grandchildren. Even if Mrs. Strong were a business woman, no one could tell how long she would live to administer the estate. He knew that the trust company would not die, nor lose its faculties, nor be influenced by personal feeling so that it might be unjust to some one, and that it represents some of the best business and banking judgment in town."

"Well, I guess old man Strong knew what he was doing!" said Helen.—Anne B. Aymes.

The more recently adopted method of killing the common barberry which spreads black stem rust of small grains is by the use of such chemicals as salt and kerosene, according to the Department of Agriculture. These methods have several advantages over the digging method formerly used. They are less laborious, cheaper and more certain. This is especially true if bushes are growing in stony ground where digging is difficult. Department Circular 356 tells all about how to use this method.—Banker-Farmer.

H. S. Mowrer, chairman of the Agricultural Committee of the New Jersey Bankers Association, together with H. J. Baker, director of extension work in the College of Agriculture, made a complete tour of the state this spring, calling on the county agents and agricultural committees of the various county organizations to get a definite line-up on the work done and the plans for the coming year. Ways and means for furthering the program of the state committee were considered at these conferences.

Farm and Business Join At Conference

Representatives of both agriculture and industry met on a common ground of agreement during the special marketing conference held at M. S. C, last week on call of state officials.

While as many different sides of the general agricultural problem as there were speakers were presented, all were in accord on certain fundamental principles. That the farming industry needed immediate aid and justly deserved this aid was freely admitted by business men and public officials, as well as by the farm delegates themselves.

Practically every speaker at the conference expressed approval of the general principles of the "Dickinson" bill. That further development of cooperation among farmers, and development by the farmers themselves of their own methods of handling their surplus problems would be vital planks in the platform for improving conditions was the general sentiment.

No formal resolutions were passed at the marketing conference of which was largely a "follow up" of the conference of eleven states held recently at Des Moines, Iowa The way was cleared, however, for further consideration of the marketing problems of Michigan farmers, with all agencies in the state joining in the conferences. It is considered likely that other meetings will be held.

Among the speakers who led the discussion at East Lansing were: Congressman Grant Hudson; Geo. Peek, president American Council of Agriculture; C. E. Dement, of Lansing, former President of the Michigan Manufacturers Association.; Kenyon L. Butterfield, president M. S. C.; A. B. Cook, master state Grange; C. L. Brody, manager state Farm Bureau; Hon. Peter Lennon, Lennon, Mich. C. M. Culver, Detroit Employers' Association; and Professors Cox and Horner, of M. S. C. L. Whitney Watkins, state commissioner of agriculture, was chairman of the conference.

Plan To Accredit 5 Million Chicks

That about five million baby chicks will be certified this spring by the Michigan Poultry Improvement Association is indicated by records in the office of J. A. Hannah, secretary of the association and extension specialist in poultry at the M. S. C.

Inspectors, who work under the joint supervision of the poultry association and the poultry department at M. S. C. have been out in the state since last November. More than 300,000 hens have been inspected in about 2,500 different flocks. It is said that 78 commercial hatcheries in the state, with a combined hatching capacity of three million eggs at one setting, have signed the certification agreements with the poultry association.

Assurance for the purchaser that he is securing baby chicks of high quality stock is said to be the chief aim of the certification plan. General encouragement of strict honesty on the part of all poultry dealers is expected to follow the work of the association. "Truth in Advertising" will be insisted upon vigorously.

Some Peculiarities Of Sound

In these days of Radio activity and great amplification of all manner of sounds traveling at high speed through the atmosphere it is perhaps timely to observe the strange behavior of some disturbances in the air.

In places where the big gunboats are at gunfire and moving ten or twelve miles off shore, it is quite common to hear the report twice if atmospheric conditions are just right. This is a very good illustration of Radio work. The air also the water act as conductors of sound waves but the air transmits the sound to the shore much quicker than the water does, hence the two reports from the same gun.

This may look fishy but at Battle Creek training camp an observer standing a half mile away could hear the report of a salvo before he could catch the order to fire, when the elements were perfectly still. Why this? Simply the fact that the heavier the sound the faster the air waves would travel, consequently the loud report of firing could be heard before the command to fire by people at a distance. Thunder in summer storms is of three different kinds. One is a low continuous rumble in the distance, another is a sharp clap near at hand and another is a series of cracks or reports in the middle distance. In the sharp sudden claps the shooting line of electricity is equally distant from the hearer at all points or parallel to him, but in rumbles one end of the discharge starts much nearer to the hearer and travels away from him hence the gradually diminishing sound. You have often noticed in summer showers when a sudden clap of thunder is followed by a down-pour of big drops, and you imagined the clap started the whole thing, but exactly the opposite is true. Away up several miles above the earth the gathering of rain drops generated electricity which being so much more rapid than falling rain, arrived first—that is the only explanation.

Wonderful as it may seem the human ear is only about one tenth as sensitive as the receiving coils of your Radio, hence the sounds that are picked up by radio are coming to the human ear just the same but are inaudible because the ear apparatus can not pick them up. While the ear is probably the most wonderful organ of the body yet it is tame compared to mechanical man made apparatus. It is estimated that the shortest air wave that the human ear will take any notice of is about one hundred millionth of one inch, hen to think the Radio takes up waves one-half or even less than that is preposterous yet true. It is an established fact that Radio will not function as well in summer as in winter, and this is the reason. In winter the air for several miles high is cold—of course more so the higher the altitude but approximately near the earth it is about the same temperature while in summer the air within ten feet of the surface is considerably hotter than it is higher up. This causes the sound waves to gyrate upward because sound travels a third faster in warm air than in cold. Hence the sound waves are shot up diagonally and do not strike the antenna of the receiving set squarely. The lower strata travels some faster than the one just above hence the turning upward of sound, No doubt the times when a church bell sounds faintly is when such conditions as this pertain.

As an illustration of water as a sound conductor we might mention the new apparatus now carried by submarines particularly and other boats usually. It is a receiving set connected with the waves beneath the surface and is quite sufficient to announce the approach of any other boat at a distance of several miles through the water. In some cases where rocky and dangerous shoals abound the light houses are equipped with this form of alarm to warn vessels to keep away. The beauty of this apparatus is the dependability of it in all kinds of weather. Rough water and storms have no effect upon its work to speak of, and often in terrific storms the great fog horns on shore cannot be heard and the powerful lights in towers are unseen but the water Radio tells the story. To this wonderful invention many mariners on the high seas owe their lives and the case of unheard of vessels who leave port and never return will soon cease to be a fact, since any ship equipped with Radio can call assistance at once and if the boat should sink it is likely notice of it would be received on shore or by other ships.

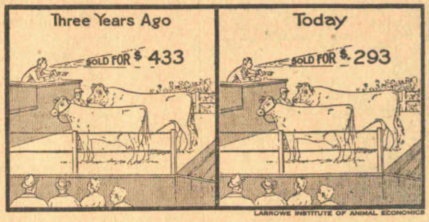
Dodge Brothers Build New Car

Dodge Brothers, automobile builders, have for some time been experimenting with a new rotary valve engine which it is expected will appear about the fall of 1926 The valves will be entirely rotary requiring no noisy poppets, no cams, no springs, in fact nothing to produce sound. This will be an eight in line engine in three styles of body to sell at around $1500. It is claimed the new engine will rival if not outclass the Knight and it will not have the disagreeable starting troubles in cold weather common to the Knight motor.

Don't stop your car and leave the engine running if it is a closed body or a Sedan since there are instances on record where the occupants of a sedan were found dead on the road. Investigation proved they had struck a snow bank and got stuck. In the meantime the engine had been kept running presumably to keep them warm. Somehow the monoxide gas from the exhaust had gained access to the body of the car and asphyxiated the couple. It must be remembered Monoxide gas is quick and deadly and operates before the victim knows he is in danger. In this manner a large number of people have met death in their close garages. If you go to the garage and start your engine always throw open the door or a window. Don't take any chances with this poisonous compound.

The Cass County cow testing association is started upon its fourth year of association work, according to A. C. Baltzer, dairy specialist at the M. S. C. The 26 members of the association own many pure bred dairy animals and find the records kept in the cow testing work of great value. A total of 440 acres of alfalfa are owned by the association membership, an indication of the progressive work being done.

Bargain Pure Bred Prices Boost Dairying Profits



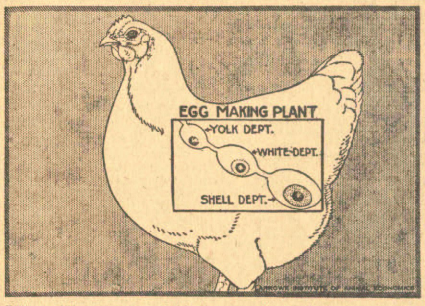
LARROWE INSTITUTE OF ANIMAL ECONOMICS

A PURE-BRED sire is the first step to profitable dairying, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics, which is urging farmers to take advantage of prevailing low prices of good breeding stock to organize their herds for greater production. A pure-bred bull and cow which three years ago sold for an average of $433 at auction may now be obtained for only $293, statistics show.

"Sire profits" may make all the difference between a farmer's labor income of $500 a year and another farmer's income that is twice that amount. In one agricultural college survey it was found that whereas the average labor income on farms heading their herds with pure-bred bulls was $837 in a year, farms using grade bulls returned a labor income for the year of only $489. But even as he breeds up better cows, the farmer can realize a greater profit from the cows on hand if he will but give more attention to proper feeding. The average cow under ordinary farm conditions is not producing profitably because her grain ration lacks milk-making elements or because she is underfed or overstuffed with poorly balanced food.

There are "poor" pure breds as well as "good." "Pedigree" alone only guarantees pure blood, not results. It takes a good cow, a good dairy ration and good management to succeed. Records of performance and the actual test are what need to be watched in these days of business farming.

Hen's Own Egg Factory Is Run Like Real Plant



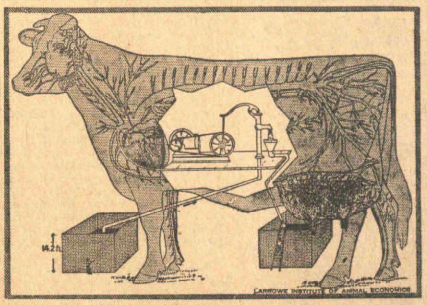
LARROWE INSTITUTE OF ANIMAL ECONOMICS

IT'S A whole egg or none for the hen, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Being an honest manufacturer she does not make half an egg. Her egg "factory" is run like a real plant. When the yolk is made it is then passed into another department where it is surrounded by white, then into a third where it is encased by a layer of the purest form of carbonate of lime, forming the egg shell, after which it is ready to greet a hungry world.

The average hen lays about 72 eggs a year, mostly during warm weather. She should manufacture twice that number, state the institute's experts who, in experimenting with hundreds of laying hens, discovered surprising differences in the number of eggs produced by various poultry rations. If the hen's egg-making apparatus fails to work up to a standard of efficiency it is probably not the hen's fault, but rather that of the poultryman who unknowingly does not provide her with the food material the hen requires to keep all three egg-making departments working full time. When the hen is fed sound grains and an efficient mash containing egg-making nutrients that make for the greatest efficiency in her plant, she can't help but make eggs! Feed is the most important single factor in egg production. It is also the biggest item of cost. Profitable results cannot be secured with poor rations.

In addition to providing the best rations for egg production the wise poultryman will watch his flock, to continuously cull out the naturally poor layers, thus building up a flock of heavy-laying fowls. Every effort should also be made to see that the hens are comfortably housed, especially in winter, because dark, damp, dirty quarters may nullify all the advantages resulting from culling and better feeding.

Cows Heart Pumps 21,600 Gallons of Blood Every Day



LARROWE INSTITUTE OF ANIMAL ECONOMICS

MORE than 21,000 gallons of blood—enough to fill a tank 14 feet square and 14 feet high—are pumped through the average cow's heart in twenty-four hours, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Twenty to forty seconds are required for the blood to make a complete circuit of the main circulatory system.

The railroad engine deriving its power from the coal burned in its furnace, transforms the fuel into mechanical energy, but the dairy cow not only derives all her power from the grain, hay and grass she consumes, but, further, turns these materials into blood and milk, which is made of blood. A cow does not perform miracles, and her "milk factory" will not produce abundantly unless she herself is fed plentifully on a tested grain ration, good hay and silage. This is the only sure and safe method as yet discovered by scientists to keep the milk pail filled month after month.

Cyclones Are Terrific

"Science and Invention" a famous scientific magazine published at New York City, has this to say regarding cyclones: "Recently a cyclone devastated the town of Murphyboro, Illinois, and one of the freak things observed after it had passed, was a piece of board 1 inch thick and 10 inches wide driven into the trunk of a tree so firmly that it withstood the weight of a 150-pound man without loosening. Directly above the board a carpenter's saw horse was also blown into the tree." This is not much news to the people of this vicinity, since we have noticed some things fully as miraculous here. During the cyclone which swept across the county this side of Osseo the barn of Frank Farmer was completely destroyed, also his garage containing a Ford car. A horse weighing 1200 pounds was picked up and carried high over the tree tops some 40 rods and fell by the road side, and the Ford car was taken still further away and so badly torn that only parts of engine and chassis remained together and spark plugs were broken. Across the highway to the east a barn belonging to Mr, Haskins was ripped to pieces and metal dirt shields from a cultivator 18 x 12 inches, of thin steel were driven several inches into a big tree truuk, and so firmly imbedded they could not be extracted, while the metal was neither bent or buckled in the least You could not drive a piece of steel of this description into a tree with a hammer without bending it into knots. At this time a large barn timber 15 feet in length was driven into the earth half its length at an angle of 45 degrees.

Michigan State Fair Is Going Some

Now that they have shipped Geo Dickinson, manager of the State Fair, for practically the same failing that caused the dismissal of Manager Burris at Jackson, the new personnel of fair board are already promising something real good for the fall of 1926, Just listen to this:

"Critics of the Fair as run in recent years, have decreed the side shows and concessions along this line, with the free vaudeville, as acts tending to contaminate the youth of Michigan. The new board was informed on being appointed that those were to be discarded in the future" so one member said.

"Don't know anything about it" another member of the board explained. "We were given to understand that these attractions were to be barred, so if the men in charge have taken such steps as officially announced at Lansing, it is without board authority. However, there is no doubt that the same will be confirmed if it is deemed advisable to submit the proposition to us at a later date. Up to now it has been the rule to hire executives and put them on the pay roll without consulting the board, so what does a little matter like fake shows amount to so far as the Fair management is concerned?"

The appointment of W. W. Brown as chief caretaker of the Fair grounds was made by Governor Groesbeck several weeks ago, has been confirmed and he will be paid the salary arranged for in advance.

One of the very first acts of the new State Fair Board, preparing for the exhibit next fall, is to arrange for free vaudeville each day at a cost of $19,000; also to agree that the old-fashioned mid-way shows are needed, and to open negotiations along these lines. There will be two mammoth amusement companies with their usual freaks and the old-time fireworks displays in the evening. Announcements to this effect were given out from Lansing this week. Later board meetings will be held to confirm these announcements.

Prohibition Polls

As the American people reach the end of the fifth year of national prohibition, there seems to be a prevalent idea that this is an appropriate time to draw conclusions in regard to the success or failure of the Eighteenth Amendment. To say that these five years prove anything conclusively one way or the other would be folly. Anti-prohibition days were entirely too numerous for such a comparison.

Nevertheless, no one ought to object to a check-up on the situation at this stage. In fact, such check-ups ought to be encouraged provided they are conducted with impartiality. If prohibition is really making the grade, we ought to have a proof of it which is so convincing that all talk to the contrary will be stopped. If, on the other hand, we are in a sad fix 'prohibitionally," we ought to know that too. Although certain facts may be discovered which are unpleasant to contemplate, they should not be ignored. The principles involved in the prohibition movement are of far too great worth to be subjected to an attitude of indifference.

During these five years we have had no adequate nation-wide study of this question. Prohibition, as a national issue, has been embedded quite thoroughly in a smoke screen of uncertainty and convictions have been warped as a result. So it is with welcome clarity that we received the reports of three extensive investigations of the prohibition situation.

REPORT OF THE RESEARCH DEPARTMENT OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Under the efficient leadership of its director, F. Ernest Johnson, the Research Department of the Federal Council of Churches has during the past few months compiled a vast amount of information on the results of prohibition. These results were given to the public on six successive days and were subjected to much editorial comment. Because the report was a faithful attempt to present the actual facts, some of which were apparently unfavorable to prohibition, certain newspapers with "wet" foundations accepted the entire report as a direct blow to the prohibition cause. This idea was soon discredited, however, when it was fully realized that the editors of the report were very sincere in their declaration that prohibition as a social law has not proved itself conclusively one way or the other, although facts seem to indicate success.

The investigators were successful in collecting some very pertinent information. For example, the report shows that 203 social workers, who have the very best of opportunity to observe conditions, reported that the homes of working people are better under prohibition, 6 said they were worse 24 report no change; while 165 reported improved marital relations. 17 worse, and 23 unchanged.

Likewise, through questionnaires to a thousand or more business men and through saving deposit accounts, an attempt was made to determine the effect of the prohibition era upon business conditions. From the facts assembled we believe that the editors of the report are justified in claiming "that prohibition has been a factor, and an important one, in keeping saving deposits on a high level." There is much to be said in favor of the diversion of funds of business.

Another important point is registered when the editors declare that crime statistics are the most widely used data for proving or disproving the benefits of prohibition and yet they are "notoriously inaccurate." The report gives information covering some 185 cities over a period of eight years, which shows "a considerable increase in the crime rate as compared with pre-prohibition years." But the statement is modified in "that the general increase, which is astonishingly large, is due entirely to misdemeanors and chiefly to offenses against traffic laws, and that serious crimes have not shown an increase."

Concerning drinking among people—a much-disputed question the report has the following to say:

"There is a marked tendency on the part of young people to depart from conventional rules of behavior This tendency is in no apparent way related to prohibition save as liquor drinking has become one of the many commonly tabooed performances that are turned to for the 'kick' that large numbers of young people are trying to get out of life. If any single material factor is more important than another it is probably the automobile, certainly not the hip flask. Reports of school administration officials and of teachers who have made extensive studies of moral problems in the schools give little support to the theory that prohibition is in itself a cause of moral breakdown. It may perhaps just as truly be said that it does not appear to be a great asset. Certainly, the non observance of the law by parents has a rather tragic effect on boys and girls.

"The most serious aspect of the situation in the colleges is the fact that the students' attitude toward drinking appears to be determined almost wholly without reference to the law. It is a matter of personal preference or perhaps of school discipline—the responsibilities of ciitzenship play but little part. It should be said, however, that if the alumni can be persuaded to forego their bibulous habits on the occasions of class reunions and festivals, the problem will be much simplified.

Extra Half Inch Of Milk Will Add $12,115,500 To Profits Of Michigan Dairymen

An extra half inch of milk in every cow's milk pail at each milking would add $12,115,500 to the profits of Michigan dairymen during the next twelve months, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Better feeding and care of the animals is urged by the Institute as the means of bringing this additional sum of money into the state this year and every year.

"The average cow in this state gives around four inches of milk at a milking," states the Institute. "At the prevailing market price of milk the extra half-inch in the pail would mean about fifteen extra dollars in the pocket of her owner. On the basis of the 807,700 cows of milking age on Michigan farms, this should mean $12,115,500 that mav be available to dairymen and to the farm family."

As an instance of what better care and feeding will do for a dairy herd, the Institute cites the cow testing association records of fifteen cows on the Valley Farm of Smith and Preston at Conotton, O. Ten dollars a day above their board is what this group paid the owners each day for a year for the privilege of remaining on the farm, or at the rate of $279.94 per cow per year. The herd ate from 2338 pounds to 3739 pounds per cow of a prepared, balanced ration and produced 1447 cans of milk of a total value of $5,528.39. This was $3,941.71 above the feed cost.

An outstanding example of what good feed and treatment will do for a cow is Sabina, one of the herd. In one year's time she produced 11,599.9 pounds of milk containing 702.1 pounds of butter. The total value of her production was $509.04, or $426.87 over the costs of her feed during the twelve months.

Human Beings And Cattle

Five reactors totuberculin among the cattle belonging to the family and the cattle tested by the state: six living members of the family ill with tuberculosis and two already dead; the state cognizant of the situation but with no legal machinery for taking action in the case; six members of the family needed sanitorium care but not enough sanitorium beds to care for them.

This is the story of a family living in the northern part of lower Michigan. The cattle were tested by a federal inspector in charge of tuberculosis and hog cholera eradication. The inspector was aware of the situation in the family but it was his business to test cattle not human beings. However, he did what he could, reported the matter to the Michigan Tuberculosis Association.

The itinerant clinic of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association visited the county, gained accurate knowledge of the terrible plight of the family. The examining physician recommended sanatorium care for six of them. There is no local sanatorium. Howell is 200 miles away, has only 228 beds, full all the time, its waiting list very long. So the six wait and the deadly disease works on.

The state and federal governments have indemnified the family for the cattle that were slaughtered, and that is good. Stamping out tuberculosis among cattle does aid in its eradication among human beings, and that is good.

Michigan still falls short in its care of human beings already ill with tuberculosis, though great advances have been made, and it falls short in protecting those who are well from those who are ill.

According to accepted standards Michigan needs a minimum of nearly 3,000 sanatorium beds. She fails of this by more than 800 beds

If a family's income is cut off through a loss of cattle slaughtered because of tuberculosis, the family is indemnified. If the income is cut off through a loss by tuberculosis of the family breadwinner, that is different. The family is not indemnified, it is pauperized. If the breadwinner dies, the family is not only not indemnified it is required to dispose of the body according to law and the minimum cost of such disposal generally is $100. The family is thus further embarrased in the death of its bread winner.

There was spent in Michigan last year over half a million dollars to fight tuberculosis among cattle. Michigan did make an appropriation of an almost equal amount to build a new state sanatorium. But she has not used that money appropriated for tuberculous human beings, She tarries in the matter of human health and human lives. She spent it on cattle.

On Monday next Detroit, as the metropolis of Michigan, will open direct air mail connection with New York City and San Francisco. This a very striking statement for today. A year from now it will be as commonplace as the telephone, electric light, the rural free delivery, the motorbus and a lot of other things that have come in within the lives of the present generation of men and women and which have become a part of their daily existence. We are a very adaptable people, we Americans, and the inevitable of today is the necessary of tomorrow.

In spite of this the beginning of air mail service between Atlantic and Pacific with Detroit, and no doubt, later on, other Michigan cities enjoying participation in its advantages and usefulness, is an important marking point. Air mailed letters will be carried at 10 cents an ounce, a remarkably low rate when one considers that in the collections of the virtuosos of this and other states are very many letters, mailed before the days of envelopes and postage stamps, and carried by stage mail, which cost twice as much per ounce for their transportation from New York to Detroit. It once cost more than 10 cents an ounce to bring a letter from Buffalo to Detroit, and it required the receipt of the postmaster on the superscription to give it the warrant to go, because there were no postage stamps.

It was Lascelles' turn to laugh, for his word stung Steele like the lash of a whip. But unlike the Frenchman's, the face of the other reflected his thoughts solely in the swift hardening of the mouth and the glitter in the gray eyes.

"Then of course, colonel," he countered savagely, "you cannot go. You French are such careful chaperons."

Lascelles openly scowled his disappointment as St. Onge retorted:

"Oh, naturally I shall stay; so I shall wish you bon voyage and all success, Monsieur Steele." And he shook his guest's hand. "We shall expect you again before you start south."

"Goodby, sir, and my deepest thanks for your hospitality. You will send a canoe, anyway, in two weeks to meet Michel at the Feather lakes?"

"Yes, au revoir!"

Ignoring Lascelles, he stepped into the canoe, launched by Michel and David, then as if it were an afterthought, Steele called banteringly to the inspector: "And to you, sir, a pleasant stay at Wailing River, and safe run to Albany, for I very much wish to meet you again."

With the lunge of three narrow blades, the canoe leaped upstream leaving two men on the shore—one with frank approval in the tired eyes which watched the broad back of Brent Steele as he followed the vicious stroke of the Iroquois in the bow; the other nervously stroking a black mustache which adorned features on which perplexity and hate were written large.

* * * * * * *

Three days later, when the canoe of Steele was far on its way to the Feather lakes in its search for the trail of the Windigo, Denise St. Onge sat in her living-room with the man who controlled her father's future with the Revillon Freres. For two days, all that subterfuge and the plea of illness could avail to avoid being alone with him, she had made use of, but now that he was returning to Fort Albany, he would not be denied his hour.

"Mademoiselle," he was saying, "when a man travels as far as I have to visit his fiancee, is he not entitled to a somewhat warmer welcome—to a more frequent opportunity to enjoy her society than you have accorded me?"

"Monsieur Lascelles," replied the girl coldly, "I wrote you accepting the offer which you have made me many times in the last three years. In consideration that you kept my father in the employ of the company in charge of a first-class post, I agreed to marry you within a year. It was a contract of business, monsieur. The day of your arrival here you agreed to my terms."

Lascelles fidgeted under the calm, impersonal gaze of the girl's black eyes.

"It is true, mademoiselle," and he twisted his mustache in his chagrin, "but I am deeply in love with you, and it is most unusual, is it not, to be ignored—avoided? I have some rights."

"I have not promised to love you, monsieur, if that is what you mean," was her quiet answer.

"No," and the blood suddenly flushed his face, "but I have reason to believe that you have an interest in this American, Steele. Why has he stayed here two weeks? Why, except for the fact that Mademoiselle St. Onge is pretty and charming, eh?"

Denise St. Onge smiled wearily.

"Possibly, monsieur. It is not unlikely you will think so anyway. You are the type of man who always insists on the woman motive."

"Woman motive? Why not? In this case it is clear," he burst out, walking the floor, mad with jealousy, and helpless before the indifference of the woman whom he had traveled three hundred miles to see.

"Pardon me, but as a matter of fact, you are wrong. Monsieur Steele is an ethnologist and is deeply interested in this mystery which you make light of."

Lascelles snapped his fingers viciously. "You believe in this Windigo myth, too? Your father is imbecilic about it."

The dark face of the girl flamed with anger at the reference to her father. "You laugh at what has ruined this post, monsieur, because it suited your plan. Is it not so?"

He turned to her with a snarl. "Evidently you are as superstitious as the ignorant Indians."

"Possibly I am. I don't know what I believe," she said calmly. "I only know what I heard that terrible night—what the Indians believe—and where is the fur canoe? Where are your furs? Where are your men? Is that of no consequence?"

It was to the credit of the infatuated Lascelles, as he bade the woman who had promised to marry him, goodby, that what was his of right he did not demand when he entered his canoe at the foot of the carry.

"Au revoir!" he said, taking her hand and kissing it. "You will write by the Christmas mail?" And the man who had journeyed up the Albany and the Wailing, exulting in his bargain with a desperate girl, returned, beaten, mystified and consumed with jealousy.

CHAPTER VIII

Driven by three iron-hard backs and pairs of arms, Steele's canoe nosed a wide ripple on the smoldering surface of Big Feather lake, which opened out before them in mile upon mile of sleeping water.

A group of women, children and dogs awaited the canoe's landing at the fishing camp of the Ojibways.

"Bo'-jo', bo'-jo'!" And Michel, kicking his way through the snarling huskies, shook hands with the surprised women, curious to learn what had brought the headman at Wailing River to the Feather lakes in September.

"So the Windigo cries no longer at night on the burnt ridge?" he began, in Ojibway.

To his surprise the women stared at him in amazement, which changed to fear at the thought of the possibility of the presence of a demon so dreaded, in the Feather Lake country.

"No Windigo has cried here," replied an old woman, excitedly. "We would not stay! Our men are away in the muskegs, hunting caribou. They would not leave us here to be eaten by a Windigo."

Michel looked at Steele. "She say no Windigo bin here. Why did Pierre lie to us?"

"Queer for him to bring that tale to Wailing River," muttered Steele.

"Pierre, who left you to trade at Ogoke last spring," continued Michel. "Has he camped here this summer?"

"No, we have not seen his family since the moon of flowers. They went to Ogoke."

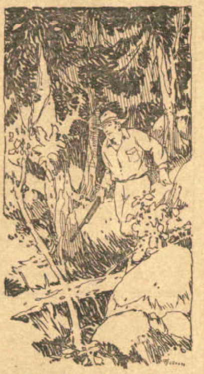
Michel nodded, as if satisfied.

"Well, Michel, it looks as if we were on a wild goose chase."

The small eyes of the Iroquois glittered. "I t'ink we-ketch dis goose jes de same."

"What d'you mean?"

"Wal, we know Pierre is a liar and he cum to Wailin' Riviere to mak' talk wid Tete-Boule. Now Pierre an' Tete-Boule try mak' some trouble ovair dees Windigo. We'n I go back Tete-Boule weel tell me w'at Pierre say to heem." And the lean face of Michel took on a fierceness which caused the squaws instinctively to draw back.



Steele Struggled to Keep at the Heels of His Men.

What motive Pierre could have had in the tale of the Windigo at Feather lake, other than the needless agitation of the post Indians, was an enigma to Steele, but it was evident that Michel had an idea of its nature which he would divulge only when ready to talk.

"Michel," Steele asked, as the three men sat by their fire smoking after-supper pipes, "what's in the back of your head regarding this Pierre? You think he knew of the dead Indian at Stooping river when he came to the post, yet made no mention of that but told this wild tale of the Feather lake Windigo scare. Why should he lie about the one and conceal the other?"

The Iroquois slowly exhaled a column of smoke before replying.

"Dees Pierre I know for long time. He alway mak' trouble. When I see heem, he tell me somet'ing or he nevaire mak' more trouble on dees riviere," was the unresponsive answer.

"But what is he driving at? Why shouldn't he report the killing of that Indian at Stooping river as well as the Windigo scare that existed at Feather lake?"

Michel shook his head. "Eet ees queer t'ing, for sure," was the laconic reply.

Steele's eyes sought David's impassive face, but the Ojibway seemed deep in a problem of his own. It was irritating to a degree, but Steele knew his Indians—knew that Michel would talk in his own time and not before—that questioning would only drive him into a deeper silence.

"How many Indians trap the Portage Lake country?" Steele asked.

"Good manee hunt dat valley, good manee ovaire on de Little Current."

"We'll start tomorrow. It looks as if Monsieur Windigo was not going to pay this country—"

From the ridges of the mainland the moaning bellow of a cow moose slowly rose and died on the frosty night.

"Dat cow holler ver' strange," said David, as the three sat with tilted heads, ears straining.

Again out across the still lake drifted the mating call.

"Huh!" muttered Michel, "dat Injun poor caller."

Rigid, the three listened to the voice in the night, and in the mind of each slowly took shape the same surmise.

Then from the burnt ridge of the opposite shore lifted a low wail, gathering in volume until it climaxed in a scream.

"De Windigo!" With a leap, Michel had his rifle and was sliding the canoe into the water.

"Come on," cried Steele, "we'll separate and stalk that ridge from three directions."

They were half-way to the shore when the voice burst out anew in sobs and maudlin mewing, and Steele pitied the terrified women and children of the fishing camp, facing the horror alone, with their men far in the caribou barrens.

Landing on the beach under the ridge, Steele left the others with the warning: "No wild firing, now! Remember the whistle! We'll meet here on this sand beach."

The canoe vanished in the shadows and the American started his stalk. Twice he stopped for a space to study the caterwauling on the brow beyond him. Blood-chilling, unearthly, the voice filled the calm night.

The danger of the hunters firing into each other was great, and he climbed cautiously, taking the cover of the down timber, ears alert for the staccato whistle of the yellow legs, their signal of identification.

At last, with skin and clothes torn by the brittle twigs of the dead spruce, he reached the flat sholuder of the ridge. For some time the night had brooded, unmarred by the voice. Cocking his rifle he crept forward, searching the area of skeleton trees, ghostly in the pale light of the stars, for some movement. He was puzzled at the failure of the Indians, whose pace should have been faster than his to reach the brow of the ridge. If they had, perhaps even now, the roving eye of Michel already marked him out—was sighting down a rifle barrel, his crooked finger on the trigger, waiting to be sure of his target before he fired. At the thought Steele flattened out and whistled.

But the hoo-hoo of a gray owl, patroling the green timber of the lake shore below, was his only answer.

Minutes, which seemed interminable to the watcher, passed. Where were the Indians?

Then to his surprise an unspeakable mewing defiled the night. In vain he strove to locate the position of the beast. But, as the mewing merged into the shrieks of a woman, the flash and report, flash and report, of two rifles cut it short off. Something thrashed through the timber out in front.

He swung his rifle in the direction of the sound, his eyes straining for a target. The starlight gave him a fleeting glimpse of a dark object crossing the bole of a skeleton spruce, and he fired twice. Then leaping down, he plunged through the tangle of dead spruce in the wake of David and Michel who had stalked their quarry, but evidently in the uncertain light, missed.

Down over the treacherous going of the slope of the ridge the sure-footed Indians hunted the thing their rifle shots had stampeded. Tripping, falling, to rise and stumble on through the network of trunks and limbs, Steele struggled to keep at the heels of his men. But gradually the noise of the pursuit drew away from the white man, no match for those who, from childhood, had traveled the forests at night.

In an hour two grimy, battered half-breeds, bleeding from contact with the timber, appeared on the beach.

"Well, it fooled us again," vouchsafed Steele, ruefully, "did you see it?"

"We nevaire see heem," muttered the disheartened Michel, squatting on his heels at the water's edge to bathe his face, and his shoulders from which the woolen shirt hung in ribbons.

"You did not see him when you fired?" demanded the surprised Steele. "I got a look at him for a second."

David grinned at his chief. "Dat was me you shoot at. De bullet seeng close, too. Good shot!"

"What, you were out in front of me! Why didn't you whistle?" protested the chagrined Steele. "I didn't know, until you fired, that you two had got up there. From the sound, what did he travel like, Michel?"

The half-breed lifted a grave face. "He travel lak' a seek bear; but no bear holler lak' a lynx."

To Excavate Roman Stadium

It is planned to excavate the Circus Maximus at Rome which was the greatest stadium ever built. It seated 350,000 people and would make some of the modern stadiums such as the Yale Bowl and the Yankee stadium look like county fair amphitheaters. The Circus Maximus was three times as large as the famous Colosseum at Rome. It was first built in the time of the early Roman kings, was used during the republic and had its best days during the empire. Here Julius Caesar entertained the Roman populace on a magnificent scale. Indeed the scale was so large that he had to sell one of his private villas to pay for the games and chariot races. In this great stadium the gladiators fought in mortal combat with wild beasts imported from Africa and Asia.

Heat in Death Valley Almost Beyond Belief

Death valley, which lies between the Amargosa and the Panamint mountains, along the eastern line of California, is the hottest place on this continent in summer, says Adventure Magazine. It is 276 feet below sea level and about 75 miles long. It has a record of 134 degrees above zero. In winter the rawest cold winds imaginable blow through it.

In summer the air is so dry that a blanket soaked in water and hung on a line will be totally dry in half an hour. A man must drink as often as every half hour to keep alive. At Furnace Creek ranch the hens wade in the irrigating ditch and squat in the water. The corral containing cows, mules and horses has sheet iron nailed on its fence to protect the animals from hot winds. Only one man has been able to endure the heat more than three summers, and he did it by sleeping in water at night.

Business Propaganda

You can't always tell about anything; maybe there is a sleeper in the statement, and just as like as not the man who broadcast the opinion that pedestrians have the right of way and don't have to hop around to avoid being run over by a motorcar is an attorney who is looking for damage suits to settle.—Albany Press.

Like this man, thousands of people give heed to constipation only when it is too late.

"I'll tell you why they wouldn't insure you—

"You allowed constipation to become chronic—until finally it resulted in organic disease.

"People don't realize how insidious constipation is. Its first effects are hardly more than annoyances—headaches, loss of appetite, sleeplessness and the like. But in time, as the body is subjected to continued intestinal poisoning, it may lead to high blood pressure, rheumatism, diabetes or even Bright's disease.

"Stop constipation if you wish to live long. Take a little Nujol every day—that will keep you regular."

Nujol relieves constipation in Nature's way

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It does not affect the stomach and is not absorbed by the body. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is safe, gentle and natural in its action.

Nujol makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly in accordance with the directions on each bottle. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today and begin to enjoy the perfect health that is possible only when elimination is normal and regular.

"We Serve Michigan"

Michigan Railroads Welcome Good Roads

MICHIGAN is one of the states that has made the greatest progress by the extension of its good roads. Its industrial importance has been greatly fortified by the development of a system of internal communication. It can still advance under a careful and judicious extension of this program. With the passing of transportation from the mud age to the hard road age there are indications that we are experiencing in the United States an industrial revolution as important in its effect as was that which marked the introduction of the macadam road and the steam railroad in England. This is evinced in the expansion of our national income.

For instance, the wealth of our nation—investment on our plant—in 1912 was 186 billions of dollars while our national income—the annual turn-over—was 30 billions of dollars.

The wealth of the nation in 1922 was 321 billions of dollars, and our national income over 80 billions.

It took a six-dollar investment to make a dollar in 1912.

It took only a four-dollar investment to make a dollar in 1922. An increase in efficiency of 33 per cent. in a decade.

THE utility of the railroad, as a freight carrier, has been increased many times through the complementary agency of the good roads system. The traffic in the old days could only be drawn from about eight miles on either side of the right-of-way of a railroad. Now, the railroad's range of activity is five to six times greater. True, these new transportation agencies present some problems that embarrass at times, but better transportation in whatever form it may be, operates to the general good.

The railroads do ask for reciprocal regulation.

Michigan is in the vanguard as an industrial state. Let us retain that position.

The Michigan Railroad Association approves the state's proposed program for more good roads because it will yield a large return on the investment.

Beautiful Epitaphs

The editor of the Jonesville Independent sizes up the automobile accident situation as follows;

"Lies slumbering here one William Lake; he heard the bell, but had no brake. At 50 miles drove Allie Pidd; he thought he wouldn't but he did. At 90 miles drove Eddie Shawn; the motor stopped, but "Ed" kept on, Here sleeps, one Johnny Fonker; he rounded a turn without a honker. Down in the creek sleeps Jimmy Bass; the bridge was narrow; he tried to pass. Beneath this stone sleeps William Baines; ice on the hill, he had no chains. Here lies the body of William Jay, who died maintaining his right-of-way. And here's what's left of Samuel Small; he paid no attention to the "slow" signs a-tall. Here's what's left of Harry; at the railroad crossing he did not tarry. John William Jones lies under thistle he didn't hear the choo-choo's whistle."

Many New Alfalfa Fields In State This Spring

Alfalfa will make its appearance on many Michigan farms for the first time this spring, it is predicted by the Blue Valley Creamery Institute. High prices of red clover seed and the risk of planting alfalfa in place of red clover have made many fermers ceutous.

"Between 100,000,000 and 110,000,000 pounds of clover seed are planted in this country every years but only two-thirds of this amount was harvested last year," according to the Institute. "Farmers who have been depending upon red clover as their legume plant are therefore faced not only with sky-high prices for seed, but also with the risk of planting unadapted imported seed in their fields. And rather than take a chance on the success of their crop, they are turning to alfalfa. Although alfalfa and red clover stand pre-eminent as the chief legumes in the United States, alfalfa has proven the greater feed in many ways.

The Conspiracy of Pontiac

ALL STUDENTS of Michigan history have read the startling account of Chief Pontiac's conspiracy to butcher the Detroit garrison and thus obliterate the hateful English from the hunting grounds forever. Such men as Major Gladwin, General Lewis Cass and Pontiac himself, were strong, upstanding pillars of human faith and endurance, The site of Brightmoor was a deep, silent wood by day, trod by moccasined feet, and made hideous at night by the wolf. Jefferson Avenue was a thin indistinct trail between the giant whitewoods, cottonwoods and oaks. No donbt Old Chief Pontlac once trod these historic paths and for aught we know pitched his deerskin lodge on the B. E. Taylor Subdivisions. From the days of Major Gladwin great profits have been realized in holdings of building spots. Nowhere in the middle west can a better prospect be found than in the West Side Golf Club District of Detroit. Westward Ho! Is he watchword. Come and see the property. Dick McBain or Bert Knowles will tell you more.

Obituary

Clara Worden was born at South Scipio, Allen Co. Indiana on Jan. 11 1883, the daughter of J. W. and Florence Conway Worden and departed this life Feb. 19, 1926, aged 43 years, 1 month and 8 days. Her early life was spent in Allen County.

She taught school until her marriage on Jan. 16, 1910 to Burl Shambaugh of near Spencerville Indiana. Two daughters Margaret and Muriel were born to them. They moved to Michigan in 1916 and to their present home seven years ago.

At the age of thirteen she united with the U. B. Church at South Scipio Indiana but later with her husband and daughters joined the Methodist church at Lickleys Corners, from which their memberships were later transferred to North Adams M. E. church where she worshipped as long as she was able to attend.

During her illness of two years she has been a patient sufferer, always trying to make the best of whatever trials she had to bear. Her loving family, kind friends and neighbors were a great help and consolation to her.

She leaves besides the husband and daughters, her parents Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Worden of Grabil Indiana and the following brothers and sisters; Mrs. Fred Roesener of Frontier Michigan. Charles E. Worden Hicksville Ohio. Mrs. A. B. Bliss Lincoln, Illinois. Harry L. Worden Hicksville Ohio. and Lester R. Worden of Fort Wayne Indiana. Two brothers and two sisters preceded her in death.

A loving wife and mother has passed on but she leaves a legacy of years of wonderful companionship and thoughtful training, and her true Christian life has made a lasting impression on the lives of relatives and friends she leaves behind her.

Card of Thanks

We wish to acknowledge with sincere thanks all kindnesses and expressions of sympathy extended us in our recent bereavement. We especially thank Rev. Wylie, the choir, and the S. P. I. class of the M. E. Church and the Hoxie Aid.

Death of Mrs. Cornelia Smith

Mrs. Cornelia Smith passed away at the home of Arvin Fuller Sunday morning at 9:30 after an illness extending over several weeks. She had been at the Fuller home about two weeks.

Cornelia Smith was born in Columbia township, Jackson county, January 31, 1858. Fifty years ago she was married to Willard Smith and to them were born three children, Ed Smith of near Jonesville, Arthur, now deceased, and one daughter, Mrs. Bessie Arnold of Milan. All her life she has lived in the immediate vicinity of the home where she spent her later days, but for a while resided in this village.

She is survived by her son Ed, her daughter, Mrs. Arnold, six grand-daughters, four grand-sons and two brothers, Elmer of Detroit and Clarence of this township, besides a host of more distant relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted Tuesday at 1:30 p. m. at the Fuller home and 2:00 at the Methodist church in this village, Rev. H. E. Wylie officiating, and buriel was in the cemetery north of town.

They Do and They Dont

In another article is mentioned the famous Catholic Shrine St. Ann de Baupre at Quebec.

A few years ago the magazines gave a defailed account of the wonderful cures effected by faith alone, how some poor rheumatics came creeping and crawling to the altar on crutches and after a season of prayer, threw aside the crutches and walked out healed and upright; children blind from infancy, kneeled at the shrine and received their eyesight, going out hilarious and drunk with joy.

Grateful worshipers have left their canes, their crutches, and other appliances until a great pyramid of them can be seen.

This kind of blubber will do perhaps for publicity to advertise a Catholic institution, and is very good feed for the Priests to deal out to embryo Romanists. There are faith-cure believers in our midst, but thanks to the Blessed Virgin, they are not Romanists. We have in mind one gentleman who insists he has recovered his hearing though we have to megro phone it every time we meet him and it is a sure bet he couldn't hear a cannon unless he fell over it. Still another pious chap says he divorced his rheumatism by the same process but we have a hunch his trouble which wasn"t rheumatism at all, disappeared with anti-tobacco and anti-drinks and some other antis, but then it is comforting and nice for him to believe anyway. But what"s the use of trying to argue the case, anyhow?

Old Fences Made New At Slight Expense

IT DOESN'T take much time nowadays to keep fence lines stock-tight and in good repair. Not if you use these quick driven Red Top Steel Posts.

You can drive 20 or 30 Red Tops in an hour. And the fencing is attached in a jiffy so that it will never pull away. This means that you can get a lot of fence repaired even in odd moments.

It's pretty risky business letting fence lines go hang while waiting for a time when work is slack to put them in shape. The damage to stock or crops that can come from just one weak spot may be larger than the entire expense of keeping the fences in good shape. An ounce of prevention is certainly worth while here.

Keep a small stock of Red Tops on hand and get one of these One-Man Drivers. Then when you see a wood post going bad simply drive a Red Top alongside, take out the wood post and fasten the fencing to the steel post. These Red Tops will stop any farm critter you've got on your place.

We personally guarantee Red Tops and we are authorized to make adjustments promptly. Red Tops are not an experiment. They are a proved success and have been giving a good account of themselves in thousands of farm fence lines.

We picked the Red Top line because we believe it is the best value. That's the way we try to buy all lines of goods. We expect our business to grow on the basis of giving you a full dollar's worth for every dollar you spend. Come in and see us when you're in town. Get our prices on posts and the other materials you're needing. Prices are mighty reasonable now on posts and other special items.

Salesman For Face Cream Learns a Lesson

New York City. Mr. H. B. Menne writes:—"I was a salesman of creams for healing pimples, blemishes, etc., but when my face broke out with blotches, pimples and blackheads, I tried one salve after another with no results. I found it as impossible to sell skin creams as a bald headed man finds selling hair tonic. Finally I decided I would have to get at the cause—constipation. I was amazed to find that within a few days after taking Carter's Little Liver Pills my skin took on a new healthful look." Druggists, 25 & 75c red packages.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Congress Fairly Liberal in Appropriations for the National Defense.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

UNLESS congress changes its mind, the army and navy, and especially the air services, are to be well provided for in the appropriation measures. Last week the senate passed the naval supply bill carrying in round figures $321,000,000, this total including $26,000,000 for aircraft and naval aviation. The same day the War department appropriation bill went through the house. This measure carries $339,500,000, of which $15,250,000 is to be expended for aviation. Incidentally, this house bill provides for a lump sum appropriation of $50,000,000 for rivers and harbors work.

These two measures are intended to carry the army and navy only through the next fiscal year which begins July 1, but the house committee on naval affairs recommended the adoption of a five-year naval aircraft building program which calls for the construction of 1,000 new planes at a cost of $85,000,000. Administration leaders were confident this would be passed during this session. Rear Admiral Moffatt's plan called for the expenditure of $250,000,000 in five years, but the more conservative program was all the committee cared to recommend in view of President Coolidge's position on economy.

The committee proposes the construction of 235 airplanes at a cost of $12,285,000 in the fiscal year 1927 in addition to 78 planes at a cost of $3,800,000 under other legislation. In addition the committee proposes the construction of two rigid airships costing $8,000,000 to be begun prior to July 1, 1927, and an experimental metal-clad airship costing $300,000.

The pending naval appropriation bill contemplates the expenditure of not more than $9,000,000 on new aircraft in the fiscal year 1927. Under the program recommended the requirement for 1927 would be between $13,000,000 and $20,000,000. Representative French, in charge of naval appropriations, said that the additional amount of from $4,000,000 to $11,000,000 would not be appropriated for 1927 unless the budget bureau should recommend it. This puts the realization of the naval aircraft construction program up to the Executive.

INSPECTOR GENERAL HELMLICK'S investigation, ordered by Secretary of War Davis, disclosed that two officers of the army air service had been guilty of "objectionable activities in attempting to influence air service legislation." Maj. Henry H. Arnold, information officer in the office of Major General Patrick, chief of the air service, was declared the more culpable and in addition to being reprimanded he will be transferred by General Patrick to a station less pleasant than Washington. Maj. Herbert A. Dargue, chief of the war plans division of the service, escapes with a reprimand. The severer discipline is imposed on Major Arnold because he has been long conspicuous in the propaganda for a separate air service. He is described by many officers as having been "the eyes of Colonel Mitchell" in the air service during the months which intervened between Mitchell's removal from the post of assistant chief of air service and the close of his court-martial.

The intimations that the inquiry would involve General Patrick were shown to be unfounded when he was permitted to assist in it and to announce its findings.

TWO of the army's most eminent aviators, both of them members of the round-the-world flight, have announced that they are about to resign from the army in order to attempt to fly over the North pole this summer. They are Lieut. Leigh Wade and Lieut. E. H. Ogden, and they will be first and second in command of the expedition, respectively. They and their associates are backed by a group of alumni of several big universities, and will use five Douglas planes equipped with 220 horse-power motors. They plan to start from Seattle June 8 and to establish their main base at Point Barrow.

Alan Cobham, British aviator, has just accomplished the feat of flying from London to Cape Town, South Africa, being the first to do this in one plane. Starting November 16, he passed in his route over the deserts of Egypt, the swamps and forests of central Africa and the great karoo of South Africa. Much of the way he had to fly at a very great elevation, and he had many narrow escapes, especially over Victoria Falls, where his engine stopped.

CONFEREES of the house and senate devoted the week to the tax bill, but the results of their labors were uncertain. Messrs. Green and Garner of the house were firm in their determination to retain the estate tax knocked out by the senate. They said there was no chance for adoption of a conference report providing for the complete repeal of this tax, and that the house would not yield on this point.

Federal Judge Hand in New York decided last week that the federal tax on gifts is unconstitutional when it is applied to donations not made in contemplation of death. The government will appeal, and unless the Supreme court reverses the decision Uncle Sam will have to return several millions of dollars already paid into the treasury.

BOTH the house and senate took steps toward amending the Constitution so that the inauguration of the President and vice president would take place in January instead of on March 4 and so that a new congress would meet two months after its election instead of thirteen months as is the case now.

The senate, by a vote of 73 to 2, adopted Norris' resolution proposing that congress shall meet on the first Monday in January and that inauguration day shall be the third Monday in January. Blease of South Carolina and King of Utah voted in the negative. The house committee on election of President and congress favorably reported a resolution proposing that congress meet on January 4 and that the Executive be inaugurated on January 24. Both resolutions provide means to insure the choice of an Executive in case no candidate receives a majority of the electoral votes.

RATHER unusual in the United States was the disaster that befell the little Highland Boy mining camp near Bingham, Utah, last Wednesday. The settlement, at the foot of Sap Gulch, was overwhelmed by an avalanche of snow and about seventy persons perished. Fires started in the crushed frame buildings and many of the victims were horribly burned. The slide began two miles from the camp and more than a mile above sea level.

ALL the row about the countess of Cathcart resolves itself into this: The titled English woman when examined at Ellis Island admitted that she eloped several years ago with the earl of Craven, leaving her husband in England, and thus admitted "moral turpitude" as it is considered in the American immigration law. Secretary of Labor Davis therefore finds it necessary to order her exclusion from this country, sustaining the ruling of the Ellis Island immigration officials. He says this course is mandatory under the law and that he has no discretion. Furthermore, he asserts the countess is not the first person excluded for the same reason. The National Woman's party, and other groups of women who have been and are protesting against the barring of Lady Cathcart, are moved not so much by sympathy for her as by the fact that the earl of Craven already had been admitted to the United States—and they insist on equality of the sexes. The earl, to avoid possible deportation, has fled to Canada.

SETTLEMENT of the coal strike having been ratified by the miners and the five-year contract being signed, mining was resumed Thursday throughout the anthracite region. Thousands of workers went back into the pits, and the 125 producing companies planned to spread their product so that a little would go to everybody rather than all to a few. The maximum output will be reached about the end of the month.

After the contract between the United Mine Workers and the operators had been signed John L. Lewis, president of the union, said it was the greatest contract ever drawn up in the history of organized labor, involving wages aggregating a billion and a half dollars in five years.

"TO ALLAY popular anxiety" and as a "precautionary measure," Premier Pangalos of Greece ordered the arrest and deportation of former Premier Papanastasion, former Minister of the Interior Kondilis and ten other officers. The dictator said he hoped the investigation would not reveal anything serious, but, if it did, exemplary punishment would be meted out. All firearms, except those used for sport, have been ordered delivered to the police authorities before March 30. Though the country seems calm, Pangalos evidently fears a counter-revolution.

CALLES' government in Mexico has just ordered the closing of all colleges, schools and asylums in the country that are conducted by the Roman Catholics. Some foreign nations are rather peeved by this measure, but probably can do nothing about it. At present the most distressing result of the order is the throwing out on the streets of thousands of little children who had no other home than those now closed. Also the school facilities of the republic are greatly diminished, at least temporarily. Presumably the government will take steps to meet both these conditions.

FRANCE'S demand that Poland, Spain and Brazil be given permanent seats in the League of Nations council when Germany is admitted is still worrying the other league members, for there is fear that Germany will withdraw her application for membership if Poland is admitted on equal terms. France asserts she wants Poland admitted to the council so she (France) will be freed from the duty of supporting Poland and thus will be able to cultivate better relations with Germany.

CAPT. GEORGE FRIED and his brave men of the liner President Roosevelt, rather embarrassed by the fuss that has been made over their rescue of the crew of the Antinoe, were given a royal reception in New York. The big guns of Fort Jay fired a salute, the air was full of planes and the streets were crowded with shouting people as the city officials greeted the heroes. Next day congress voted them the thanks of the nation. Modest Captain Fried says: "I'm awfully grateful, but it was just part of our jobs. And, anyway, you can't say too much for the men who actually manned the boats. They did it—not I. But they, too, feel they only did what was expected of them."

ONE of the attacks on Secretary of the Treasury Mellon by his political enemies, which also was an attack on the Department of Justice, has fallen through. Mr. Sargent's department reports that after full investigation it has reached the conclusion that contempt proceedings against the Aluminum Company of America—in which Mr. Mellon is heavily interested—cannot by any possibility be successfully maintained.

JUSTICE STAFFORD of the District of Columbia Supreme court has sustained the validity of the conspiracy indictments against Albert B. Fall, Harry F. Sinclair and Edward L. Doheny in the oil-lease scandals. This action of the court, unless a special hearing is granted, means that the defendants will have to stand trial under the criminal indictments which charge them with conspiracy to defraud the government of the United States by trickery, deceit and bribery.

NOTABLE deaths of the week include those of Henry Holt, New York publisher, and Archbishop J. F. Cieplak of Poland, who was once sentenced to death by a Russian tribunal but was released and came to America last November.

Salaries States Pay to Chief Executives

Indianapolis.—Only nine governors in the United States receive an annual salary greater than that of $8,000 paid to Ed Jackson, Indiana's chief executive.

In addition to his salary the Hoosier governor is given a home and $2,400 annually for its maintenance. A similar policy is observed in several other states.

Pennsylvania pays its governor more than any other state, the annual salary being $18,000. Illinois is second with $12,000, and California, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio and West Virginia are next, each paying $10,000. Florida's constitution provides a salary of $9,000 to the governor.

Rhode Island is the only other state excepting Indiana which places the salary limit at $8,000 a year. Eight other states pay $7,500 and then the scale goes down gradually until it reaches the $3,000 mark. South Dakota, New Hampshire and Vermont pay their governors only $3,000.

Where the salaries are small, however, the state legislatures in several instances have provided executive mansions and an annual fund for their maintenance. This is true in South Dakota and Nevada. Several states would have to amend their constitutions to provide an increase.

Starting out in 1816, when the Indiana governor was paid only $1,000 annually, the amount has been changed ten times.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

East Lansing—A fire started by an explosion during an acetone distillation experiment in one of the laboratories of the Michigan State College chemistry building resulted in damage to the building equipment estimated at $1,000.

Lansing—Mrs. Eva C. Felton, for 78 years a resident of Ingham county, is dead at her home in East Lansing. She came here from Ann Arbor in an ox cart with her mother when she was 6 years old. Mrs. Felton leaves two sons here and a daughter in Grand Rapids.

Rochester—It was Charles P. Neumann, not Charles Plummer, who has been named by United States Representative Grant Hudson for postmaster at Rochester, whose new term will begin April 1. The wrong name was sent out from Washington and published by Michigan newspapers. It will be Neumann's second term.

Pontiac—Mrs. Margaret Travis, 26 years old, pleaded guilty in Circuit Court to keeping a place where intoxicating liquors were sold at her home, 73 Gillespie street. Mrs. Travis is the divorced wife of Dehull N. Travis, Flint attorney, and the daughter of E. T. Reed, former Pontiac attorney who was disbarred last year for improper conduct and intoxication.

Owosso—A reward of $200 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the man who abducted and attacked a 7-year-old school girl here has been offered by the city commission. The police have run down scores of clues, but to no avail. Threats of violence against the man, if he is caught, have been heard and police say they will take him out of the county if he is captured.

Lansing—William Laird, prosecuting attorney of Washtenaw County, has been ordered by the attorney general, Andrew B. Dougherty, to bring Herman and William Crossie and Owen Lidke to trial on a charge of murdering Harry Cyb, Augusta storekeeper. The attorney general warned Laird that if he persists in his refusal to act the state will be compelled to start removal proceedings against him.

Kalamazoo—Convicted of killing his former sweetheart, Mrs. Pearl Fuller, by a jury in Circuit Court, Lee H. Gormel was sentenced to life imprisonment in the Marquette Branch prison by Judge George V. Weimer. The verdict followed six hours' deliberation. Mrs. Fuller was shot to death five weeks ago on the porch of her brother's home, after she and Gormel had quarreled. Gormel's defense plea was insanity.

Lansing—Pending adjustment of the troubled mental state of the House over road legislation ,the Senate, according to present indications, will not attempt to settle officially on a plan for increasing road building. Such at least is the opinion of Senator Burney E. Brower of Jackson, administration leader. Usually Brower's predictions indicate the sentiment of the Senate and the desires of the administration, which in past sessions have governed the actions of the Senate.

Lansing—Governor Alex Groesbeck is asked to include 12 subjects, most of them of minor importance, in his second message to the legislature, in a concurrent resolution adopted by the house of representatives. Several of the suggestions are amendments to straighten bungled laws. Among these are the Darin "gun law," which requires permits to own or carry firearms; an amendment allowing foreclosure notices to be served by posting them on the premises, and one safeguarding defaulted bail bonds.

Grand Rapids—Directly contradicting Federal Judge Hand, who decided recently that the gift tax law is unconstitutional so far as it affects gifts not made in contemplation of death, Judge Fred M. Raymond, of the United States District Court, in a decision in the case of John W. Blodgett vs. Charles Holden, United States collector of internal revenue for the Fourth District of Michigan, declared the law constitutional and ordered the case dismissed as requested by Edward J. Bowman, United States district attorney.

Mt. Clemens—Great things are expected from the Macomb County Chamber of Commerce, which is scheduled to come into being soon. It is expected to function in the interest of Macomb county's claim to distinction as a natural outlet to greater Detroit's population and industrial and resort features of the county. Detroit is growing into Macomb county and four civic organizations of the northeastern section of the metropolis have signified their willingness to become an active factor in the organization.

Grand Rapids—The village caucus in East Grand Rapids, in which he was defeated by Dorr M. Scott for the nomination as trustee was illegal, Dr. Oscar B. Frye, a trustee, charges in a petition filed with the board of election commissioners asking a recount, a new caucus or an order declaring the caucus null and void with the present village officers holding over. Since the ballots weer destroyed, he desires that a new caucus conducted under the village election law rather than the township law, under which the caucus was held, be called

Ann Arbor—Charging that imperialism, selfishness and the eternal chase after the dollar have clouded the relations between the United States and the far east, Dr. Paul Hutchinson, editor of the Christian Century, of Chicago, spoke before an audience of University of Michigan students and faculty members here. "America's history in the far east is a black one, and we shall pay, pay terribly for the record we have written," he warned. "The opium war, the Castle agreement and the penetration of missionaries all are coluded with unfair dealings."

Electric Car Makes Record

What is said to be the longest nonstop run was completed recently by a new oil electric car designed for the Canadian National railways, says Popular Science Monthly. It completed a trip from Montreal to Vancouver, a distance of 2,937 miles, in 67 hours. Not once during the trip did the engine of the car stop running. In addition, the trip was made in the fastest time on record for such a distance.

Photographs By Wire

Among the recent discoveries of science, rapidly applied to human uses and bringing into closer contact the inhabitants of all parts of the world, is the transmission of photographs by the use of ordinary telephone wires. A recent example of this remarkable operation is the sending both ways between New York and Chicago of photographs of the departure from each city of the Twentieth Century Limited, of the New York Central Railroad a descriptive account of which appears in the New York Central Lines magazine.

The pictures of the trains were ready for reproduction in the daily newspapers of each city fifteen hours before the trains arrived at their destinations. One showed two sections of the "Century" leaving LaSalle Street Station in Chicago, the other the first section of the westbound "Century" as it speeded on its way near the cut at Spuyten Duyvil and onto the straight right of way that borders the Hudson River to Albany.

The Cost of The Coal Strike

A certain writer in the daily papers makes an effort to compute the actual loss to miners, operators and the public from the recent coal strike and he makes figures that run up into the millions and without doubt he is not exaggerating the damage one particle. During all the time the strikers have been out most of them have practically starved and suffered hardships for want of sufficient food and fuel—and the operators, what of them? Instead of thousands of dollars coming into their coffers each day from sales of coal, they have been on expense to guard and watch their property fearing lest some frenzied workers might run amuck amuck at any time and blow up or burn the mine buildings and machinery.

After this controversy, hot shot and jaw work the only object which they seem to have accomplished as to agree on a few points which it is claimed will last for five years. Dealers promise us that anthracite coal will be coming along soon at right around $16.00 per ton, but who wants it? Surely none of the house holders care a rap about the stuff now. They are mostly all set to burn bituminous coal, coke or oil, and nobody is paying three prices for anthracite unless it be the chicken hatchers and a few industries which must use anthracite or nothing. So as far as the public is concerned the strike contingent can go to—and we believe they are going as fast as anybody. The day is not far distant when the American people will repudiate Unions and all their workings so severely that no self-respecting worker will dare to profess such belief. The original purpose of the Labor Unions was righteous and just but ulcers and cancerous parts soon developed because management of affairs was put into the hands of unscrupulous men everywhere with the result that murders, arson, anarchy and damnation has followed the Labor Union like a hound, and are sticking like a burr to its skirts.

The country districts know little or nothing concerning these affairs beyond what the big daily papers tell them, and quite often their statements are colored by bossism and "Big Business."

In the cities Unionism works its worst evils—and goes hand in hand with crime. By far a larger portion of the Union Labor personnel favors light beer and wines, and Sunday amusements, which to them means liberty but to the peaceable law abiding class its significance is something else. While these raw roughnecks are at public parks and places of amusement roistering and depredating, the public are more or less silent sufferers. Already for years the Sabbath observing class have been willing to concede to the desires of the toiler whose only day of leisure is Sunday, and although the laborer may make the day hideous and he often does that very thing—church workers and law enforcers generally agree there is a limit beyond which no American citizen can go.

The automobile and its kindred vices are here to stay but the day of regulation is not far away. You can impose on all of the people part of the time and part of the people all of the time but you can't impose on everybody all the while.

Reward Money Will Be Paid

Michigan motorists need have no fear of an increased gas or weight tax or modification of either. Townships and counties will receive their delinquent reward money on definite dates and early enough each year so the money will be available for use with the beginning of the season. Not a cent of reward money is to be repudiated. The future highway program as visioned by the special session of the 53rd Michigan legislature sees a road building program of about 300 miles of improved roads annually.

That, in effect, is the program tentatively agreed to by house and senate leaders and Gov. Alex Groesbeck and which is on its way to enactment this week in the shape of a bill introduced by Rep. Eugene Kirby of Covert and Rep. John Gillett.

Owing to the fact that State Awards have not yet been paid back to the counties for building roads, the county of Lenawee has been obliged to borrow money to finance the road system. This is somewhat of a damper on present plans to put in more roadways this coming season. But the State is now promising to pay this state award money per se, so we are hoping for the best. Lenawee is not in all respects as well supplied with good roads as our own county.

New Ideas From The Orient

Among the Moslems of the Holy Land and adjacent territory the camel is being superseded by the locomotive and the railway train. One of the most interesting examples of this, according to the New York Central Lines magazine, is the carrying by the Mohammedans of Egypt to Mecca of their holy carpet by train.

This carpet, for seven hundred years, has been transported annually to the shrine of the Kaaba in the holy city of Mohamet on the backs of richly caparisoned camels, accompenied by a stately caravan, all guarded by companies of the faithful and proceeding on its deliberate way in dignified grandeur. The annual pilgrimage to Mohamet's own Temple of Allah, at almost the same season that the Christians are celebrating their own most sacred day is one of the most spectacular sights of the Near East. Each year since the Thirteenth Century a new carpet has been made by the hands of a faithful few workers selected in Egypt and carried on the back of a gorgeously caparisoned camel along the borders of the Red Sea and thence across the desert to Mecca, a great caravan accompanying the beast of burden.

Now, however, this carpet is carried in a special car of the railway train, elaborately decorated, while the carpet itselt is protected from the weather by a rich canopy as becomes the tribute of the native ruler of Egypt to the Keeper of the Mosque at Mecca.

New York Central Pensions Its Employees

Pensions for employees of corporations are fast becoming a part of the economic system of the country at large and enormous sums of money are thus expended. Interesting details of what the railroads are doing in this respect appear in an article in the New York Central Lines Magazine.

Generally, provision is made for the retirement on pension of every employe who shall have attained the age of seventy years and have been a certain length of time with the company, his future renumeration depending upon his period of service to the corporation with which he has been identified. In the case of the New York Central Lines the average pension is $720 a year, which is equivalent to an investment on the part of the railroad of $15,000, in order to obtain that sum in the shape of interest.

The average retired veteran of the New York Central Lines, says the article in question, received a pension for more than seven years after his service is finished.

Alfalfa Is Champion

Alfalfa is acknowledged the bet, ter feeding value for all classes of livestock, its yields are higher, and once established it is certain to make a good stand, and go on producing for several years."

In anticipaton of a large number of red clover farmers in this locality who have never grown alfalfa, and who may need help in starting to grow alfalfa. the Blue Valley Creamery Institute of Chicago, is offering its services. In co-operation with business men, farmers, county agricultural agents and others interested in agricultural development, the Institute is ready, through its Alfalfa Clubs, to assist communities where alfalfa can and should be grown. Local farmers planning to plant alfalfa or more of it, can get valuable aid in this work from the county agricultural agent and from the state agricultural college or experimental station.

Will They Get It?—Nix

On again, off again! Gone again Flannagan, would be about the way you would put it over at Hudson. This ancient and honorable city contains a few descendants of the famous old "peg leg" Peter Stuyvesant, the gouty governor of New Amsterdam, so 'tis claimed. The VanHorns and Shinaburys, two Hudson families claim they own several acres of land in the heart of New York City by virtue of their lineage from old Peter, the Irascible, who had to surrender to the hated English in spite of his invincible fighting disposition.

These two families altogethar comprise 100 people more or less, in Michigan and Ohio mostly, although some reside in Canada, who lay claim to property worth approximately $220,000,000, and the rentals if all figured up, from the time of Peter, would be a sum beyond comprehension. For some time legal talent both here and in New York have been working on the case, hoping to bring it to a head. It is just possible that the Van Horns and Shinaburys have not taken into account that several hundred shark lawyers in New York eke out a poverty existence of $10,000 or so per year digging up old titles in Manhattan, but they do. Anybody who can fee these rip-goats can find a title in Gotham and we hope the families concerned will not emulate the late lamented Captain Streeter who lived in a sand bank off Chicago's shores, and undertook to prove that he owned the loop district. The VanHorns and Shinaburys have our best wishes.

March 8th is Village election.

The Price of "Hooch."

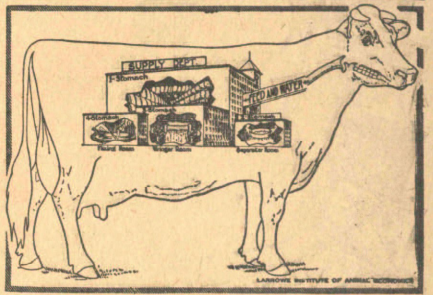
Is constantly going higher—that is the selling value—but the real cost is too great to figure in dollars and cents. It comes in great gobs and can be enumerated in hundreds of ways. It cost the drunkard his happy home, and the comforts of a family; it cost the murderer his life upon the gallows; it cost one-half the prisoners in Jackson Penitentiary their freedom, and came near to besotting the whole country previous to the Word war. It cost many a tippler his eyesight. It has smashed automobiles murdered men and women passengers by the score; wrecked trains, burned buildings, killed officers, sent thousands to the insane asylum.

If we were to fill this page with 6-point type set solid, we could not enumerate all the misdeeds of John Barleycorn yet a host of people want him back so badly they will hock the clothes off their back to bring about a revolution. What makes these people so anxious?

An editorial item we clipped is wont to remark: "Such a price is too great to pay for illicit liquor, and under the present law there is but one remedy—quit patronizing the bootlegger or his agent, the blind pig operator. If every citizen who believes in the general enforcement of the law, was to refrain from buying bootleg liquor for the duration of one year; the bootlegging industry would go out of business. The present situation is endangering the very life of the nation and it is high time that prohibition were taken from the hands of the federal government and made a part of every decent citizen's life to bring about a proper respect for the Constitution of the United States."

The man who believes he can solve the liquor enforcement law by advising the soakers to quit drinking, should be put in the nursery with a rew simple toys to play with—that is, if he is sincere; if he isn't he should join the clown band in Hagenbeck's.

Cow Uses Four Stomachs to Digest Its Daily Food



ALL the four stomachs of the dairy cow must work as a unit if she is to produce the most milk year after year, states the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. The first stomach serves as a storehouse for bulky feeds and the second as a separator room, while the third stomach acts as a wringer to squeeze out water from the food, leaving it in a mealy condition, ready for the fourth stomach, where real digestion begins.

How the four stomachs, backed by a plentiful supply of well-balanced feed and pure, fresh water, can be made to pay big profits, is well illustrated in the official cow-testing association record of Sadie, the world's second highest record grade cow. In one year through the stomachs of this plebeian daughter there passed 6,803 pounds of a prepared dairy ration, 777 pounds of dried beet pulp, 2,133 pounds of mixed clover hay and 5,182 pounds of corn silage, which were turned into 21,689 pounds of milk—enough to fill over 10,000 quart bottles! In other words, for every pound of grain entrusted by Sadie to her quartette of stomachs, they repaid with three pounds of milk in the bucket.

STRAIGHT TALKS WITH AUNT EMMY

ON "BAD LUCK"

"The Brownes are the unluckiest people I ever saw, Aunty," remarked Emma, as she and Aunt Emmy walked by their house. "They were just getting on their feet after James lost so much money in stocks. Maud told me only last week that he was putting his savings in government bonds now. Yesterday his office was robbed and the bonds stolen out of his desk. Five $100 bonds gone. It's the only money they have been able to save since he lost his savings in that radio stock."

"That certainly is bad luck, if you call it bad luck," commented Aunt Emmy. "I call it stupidity, myself."

"Stupidity! why Aunt Emmy, how could James know that thieves would get in his office!" exclaimed Emma. "It doesn't seem stupid to me."

"I don't want to be too hard on James, my child, but if he had only used ordinary precautions, he need not have lost what was for him a large amount of money on that radio stock and he surely need not have had those bonds stolen."

"Why Aunty, James isn't a mind reader or a fortune teller."

"No, of course he isn't. But neither is every successful business man a seer. Luck is ninety per cent common sense. If James had gone to his banker and asked him to look up the radio company whose stock he was thinking of buying, the chances are that he never would have bought it after he got the bank's report. Banks can get the record of any company issuing stock and if the company is not well financed, if it has not been paying dividends, if the officers of the company are not men with clean, honest records, the bank can find that out. The radio company that James invested in made a disgraceful failure a month after he bought his stock. If he had taken the trouble to find out something about it first, doubtless he would have that money today."

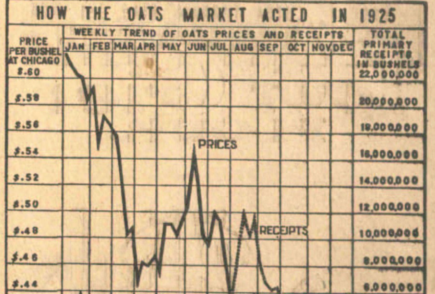
"Well, Aunty, that may be true about the stock, but who in the world would anticipate thieves?"

"Anybody who reads the papers today knows that thieves are pretty active," said Aunt Emmy dryly. "Why ignore them? If James had kept his bonds in a safe place, at a bank, he would have had them yet. James has been careless, if not actually stupid. His bad luck is mostly James himself."—Anne B. Aymes.

BANKERS HELP

The Minnesota Bankers Association at its annual convention adopted the following resolution:

"We believe it to be the duty of every banker in the state of Minnesota to co-operate with our Agricultural Committee and to call the attention of its farmer patrons to the excellent work being done by our Agricultural College, and the means thereby available for the improvement of farming conditions and for the practical education of the boys and girls from our farms."



EARLY in 1925, oat prices were so high, reports the Sears-Roebuck Agricultural Foundation, that consumption was actually checked. Then the market began to decline and with large stocks coming on through commercial channels, reached a low level in April, went up again in June, fell to less than 40 cents in August and stayed at that low level. The 1925 crop was 1,501,909,000 bushels and the carry-over from 1924 was larger than usual. Total supplies of oats in all sections were only 20,000,000 bushels less than in 1924 when the crop of 1,522,665,000 bushels was harvested.

Prices started to go down in February and March, went up somewhat during June but came down again in August and have maintained a general low level. Oat prices are likely to advance toward spring as commercial stocks are reduced and the consuming sections of the country draw more extensively on the terminal markets.

"But however much we may legitimately discount stories of excessive drinking among young people, the fact that prohibition has had no more decisive effect in heightening their moral tone gives food for earnest thought."

Further description of this report, but instead there is the rather commendable conclusion that prohibition has not yet been established as a universal law of the American people. All are urged to secure a complete copy of the report from the Federal Council of Churches, 105 East 22nd Street, New York City.

WHAT THE EDITORS OF COLLIER'S MACAZINE DISCOVERED

Soon after the appearance of the Federal Council report, Collier's Magazine, which calls itself "The National Weekly", published the results of a nation-wide poll made by one thousand employees of the magazine. Through personal calls upon subscribers of this magazine, the representatives secured the opinions of some 263,000 men and women.

The questions asked and replies were as follows:

No. 1. Are you satisfied with conditions as they are? 32 percent, Yes, 68 percent No.

No. 2. Is the law enforced in your locality? 38.8 percent Yes, 61.2 No.

No. 3. If not, do you consider the law enforceable? 60.9 percent Yes, 39.1 No.

The editors sum up the polls as follows: "It is obvious from the results of this inquiry that America is still wet; that a considerable majority of Americans want it dry, but that a large minority despair of prohibition enforcement under present conditions." And then they conclude with the rather startling verdict, "Booze is Victor!"

Of course for the friends of prohibition the most important item in this report is the opinion expressed by a majority that the law is enforceable. So long as the majority of the people have faith in a law, there ought to be no doubt as to the outcome. But the question still remains, How is the law to be enforced? This is answered quite definitely in a third report,

A SYMPOSIUM IN THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW

A third significant report on the prohibition situation appears in the current number of the North American Review, a quarterly magazine, edited by George Harvey. This report follows an outline of procedure different from that used in the other two, Instead of making a sweeping investigation among thousands of people, the editors approached leaders who, because of their strategic positions and opportunities to observe, were well able to pass judgment on the question. The contributors to this symposium were:

Wayne B. Wheeler, General Counsel of the Anti-Saloon League Gifford Pinchot, Governor of Pennsylvania Thomas N. Carver, Harvard University, Congressman John G. Cooper, member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers; R. H. Scott, President Reo Motor Company; Dr. Howard A. Kelly, Johns Hopkins University; Richard J. Hopkins, Justice Supreme Court of Kansas; Cornelia J. Cannon, essayist and student of social condition; James J. Britt, Chief Counsel of the Prohibition Unit, Washington; Walter A. Morgan, Chairman Law Enforcement Commission, Congregational Churches; Howard D. Taft, Head master of the Taft School, Connecticut.

The comments of any one of these would be worth extensive broadcasting, but we shall so limit our reference to only a few. Gifford Pinchot who, as governor of Pennsylvania, has had an opportunity to see the prohibition amendment at work in an important section of the country sums up his observations as follows: "My two years with law enforcement has convinced me beyond question:

"First. That the Eighteenth Amendment is growing steadily stronger in the confidence and approval of the American people.

"Second. That it has already conferred benefits of the largest value and most profound importance upon our people.

"Third. That in spite of the activity of the bootleggers and the amount of space their operations occupy in the public press, the total drinking of alcohol in this country is insignificant ina mount compared to what it was when the Eighteenth Amendment was adopted.

"Fourth. That the talk of modifying the Volstead Law is mere waste of breath. The proposal to do so could not even lead to serious discussion until the law is actually enforced, and when that time comes what little demand there is for modifying it will have disappeared.

"Fifth. That the law can be enforced, that it will be enforced, that enforcement is gaining on violation, and that when the Federal Government demonstrates that it intends eventually to enforce the law, which it has never done yet, the problem of law enforcement up to the point of average efficiency will disappear.

An Old-Time Poem

E. R. Benson in digging around among his letters and papers, some of which are quite old, uncovered the following written away back in 1845 and as it is an original composition we thought possibly it might interest our readers and give them an idea concerning the wilderness of Michigan in an early day as it was and continued to be for some time. Following is the rhyme as near as we can figure it out. The writing though good is of the ancient style and not easy to come at:

The wilderness was our abode full forty years ago
And when good meat we wished to eat
We caught the buck or doe
For fish we used the hook and line
We pounded corn to make it fine
On Johnnycakes our ladies dined
in this new country.

Our paths were through the winding wood
where oft' the savage trod
They were not wide nor scarce a guide but all the ones we had Ourhouses they were logs of wood rolled up in squares and chinked with mud
And if the bark was tight our roof was good this new country.

Our occupatios was to make the lofty forest bow
With axes good we chopped the wood for well we knew how
We cleared the land for rye and wheat for strangers and ourselves to eat
From the maple trees we drew our sweets
in this new country.

We lived in social harmony
we drank from the purling stream
No lawyers, priests nor doctors were scarcely to be seen
Our healths they needed no repair
No pious man forgot his prayer
And too could fee a lawyer where its a new country.

The Indian sometimes made us fear that there was danger nigh
And the shaggy bear was often where the pig was in his sty
The rattlesnake gave children dread
The fearful mother often said
"Some beast of prey will take my babe"
in this new country.

Of deer skins we made moccasins
to wear upon our feet
And the checkered skirt was now thought good company to keep
If we a visit wished to pay
On a winters night or a winters day
The oxen drew our lady's sleigh
in this new country.

The little thorns bore apples and when mandrakes they were gone
The sour grapes we used to like when the frosty nights came on
For winter greens our girls would stray for butternuts the boys climb trees
And the evens root was our lady's tea
in this new country.

State Corn King Picked For 1925

A yield of 112 bushels of corn per acre was necessary to win the 1925 corn championship of Michigan, so keen was the competition among the state's best growers. Ernest Gilbert, of Waldron, Hillsdale County, is the man who has been crowned "Corn King" by extension men at M. S. C. who have been checking up on the annual contest.

Profit above "cultural" costs on Mr. Gilbert's yield figured $70 to the acre. William Hilton, Coldwater, in Branch County, stood second in the state in total yield with 105 bushels per acre; while Paul Clement, of Britton. in Lenawee County, followed with 100 bushels to the acre, George Putnam, also of Britton, produced but 95 bushels to the acre, but lower cultural costs enabled him check in a profit of $64 an acre for second place in the state contest for efficient production.

Included in the costs as figured were labor charges for preparing the ground, fertilizer, seed, and cultivation costs. Harvesting and general "overhead" costs were not included in the contest records.

The cultural costs varied all the way from $8 an acre to $19 an acre among the men who were entered in the competition, while the profit dropped to as low as $25 an acre in some cases. The three men who produced 100 bushels per acre are the first to reach such figures in the history of Michigan corn contests, according to crops specialists at the M. S. C.

Seed Crop Insurance In Certified Seed

That the planting of certified seed potatoes is an effective form of crop insurance for Michigan farmers is being pointed out this spring by H. C. Moore, potato specialist at the M. S. C. in charge of seed potato inspection service.

"Those state farmers who each year plant approximately 100,000 bushels of certified seed potatoes have found that such seed is a very good form of potato crop insurance", says Moore. "Certified seed has materially increased their yields and bettered the quality of their crop, so that they have been able to produce potatoes more economically and to market them to better advantage.

"Economy in production, lower production costs per bushel, should be the aim of potato growers Numerous tests throughout the state show a production increase of approximately 50 bushels per acre for certified seed as compared with non-certified or 'common' seed potatoes. This makes it possible in many instances for growers to reduce their acreage and still maintain their total potato output, by planting certified seed and following good cultural practices."

A general shortage of certified seed potatoes is said to exist this year, not only in Michigan but also throughout the entire country. For this reason growers have been urged to get their seed stocks early. Varieties included among those which are being certified in Michigan are: Russet Rural, White Rural, Green Mountain, and Irish Cobbler.

Michigan Wisconsin Farm Loan Conference

A two day conference of 400 representatives of the National Farm Associations of Michigan and Wisconsin closed here last evening. This meeting, the largest of its kind that has yet been held, was called by President Jennings of the Federal Land Bank of Saint Paul for discussion of problems pertaining to the farm financing in these two states. Among the principal speakers were; Hon. E. E. Jones of the Farm Loan Board, Washington, D. C,. E. J. Van Leuven of Mt. Pleasant, and C. F. Olmstead, Ludington. The Farm Loan Associations reported conditions among the farmers as generally very satisfactory. Local banks were said to be in good condition and able and ready to care for all short time demands of the farmers, which service coupled with the long time financing by the Federal Land Bank and Federal Intermediate Credit Bank, provides the farmers with all necessary credit facilities. The Michigan Federation of National Farm Loan Association elected officers as follows: President, H. K. Jennings; Secretary, A. R. Burr; Treasurer, George R. Wheeler, Mt Pleasant. Council Members, John G. Helli, Ironwood; G. S. Johnson, Manistique; Charles T. Schmieding, Shelby; John Stafford, Lawrence; A. E. Illenden, Adrian, State Representative.

The real cause of bad breath

"You cannot 'cover up' unpleasant breath for any length of time. The only way to rid yourself permanently of it is by removing the cause.

"Sometimes poor teeth are responsible. But the commonest cause of a coated tongue and offensive breath is constipation. You may not realize that your intestines are slow in eliminating waste matter, or that your breath is objectionable. But others will notice it.

"Get rid of constipation, and your breath will become fresh and sweet. Even more important, you will notice an immediate improvement in your health and spirits."

Nujol relieves constipation in Nature's own way

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It does not affect the stomach and is not absorbed by the body. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is so safe, so gentle, and so natural in its action.

Nujol simply makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly in accordance with the directions on each bottle. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today. Remove the cause of bad breath and begin to enjoy the perfect health that is possible only when elimination is normal and regular.

"Is this the same one we heard at Wailing River?"

"Mebbe. Mebbe 'nodder one. 'Jibway say plenty ov dem een valley ov de Wailing."

"But what do you think, Michel?" demanded Steele hotly. "Here I am, with David, giving up my time to help you run this thing down and, if possible, save the post for St. Onge; and you don't trust me. Why don't you open your heart to me?"

Michel straightened and going to the small fire David had built on the beach, calmly examined his tattered shirt and trousers, as he dried out.

"You are good man, M'sieu Steele. Daveed tell me, but I have de eye to see. W'en you come back on de snow, I tell you somet'ing."

That was all, and Steele understood. It was evident that Michel had bound himself to secrecy. But why had he told David?

"In the morning we must hunt for a trail," Steele said, philosophically bowing to the inevitable. "Now we'll have to do what we can to quiet those poor squaws."

As the canoe landed on the beach below the silent tipis, one by one, dark shapes of Indian dogs slunk from the adjacent scrub, tails between legs, to whimper at the feet of the men.

"Scared stiff," said Steele. "And from the sound the squaws are worse. Go and talk to them, Michel. Tell them it was a mad wolverine or lynx and we've hunted it out of the country. I'll get a fire going while David brings some tea from the island. It will cheer them up—the tea."

But both his patience, and his knowledge of the woods Indian's belief in the supernatural, were taxed to the uttermost before Michel succeeded in convincing the women that the Windigo they had heard on the ridge was not now luring them to their doom with the assumed voice of the headman of Wailing River.

In the end, they crept from the tipi to the friendly light of the fire, horror in their shifting eyes, gray-faced children clutching their skirts. There, comforted by the tea, and heartened by the presence of the three men, who kept a huge fire going, the circle of stricken women passed the night.

In the opinion of Steele, who kept vigil with his pipe, beside the snoring David and Michel, rolled in their blankets, the coming of the beast to Big Feather before the freeze-up, was the gravest menace which the fortunes of Wailing River post, and the girl who had given him until spring to accomplish the impossible, had yet encountered. For, as a forest fire runs in dry timber, so rumors of the howling of the Windigo at Big Feather would travel from hunter to hunter through the upper valley of the Wailing. The tale would spread, gathering horror as it went as a snowslide gathers momentum, until in time the whole region learned that a Windigo was loose in the valley of the Wailing—a fiend fierce beyond belief and hungry for the flesh of the Ojibway. Then would follow, unless the beast were killed and the terror ended, swift exodus from the valley of the families still trading at the post, the resurrection and revival of the ghastly traditions surrounding the rapids and the river below—the end of the St. Onges and the post at Wailing River.

Steele's teeth bit savagely into the stem of his pipe. This might happen before the freeze-up, and until the snow made it possible to follow a trail, there was small chance of solving the mystery of the night wailing.

Now, Steele mused, when the men returned from their hunt to hear of the voice in the night from the circle of half-demented women cowering there around the fire, the tale would straightway travel to the four winds, and hardy indeed would be the hunter who would drive his dog team this Christmas down the white valley of the Wailing to trade at the ill-fated post. With no Christmas, and little prospect of a spring trade, unless the mystery were solved by the running down of this beast with the miraculous vocal cords, Wailing River was doomed. Even if Denise married Lascelles in the spring, the post could not be continued under a taboo.

True, St. Onge had sworn that she should never make the sacrifice, but the factor was at his rope's end, and she would override him. She would not see him disgraced. Her pride would drive her to it—that fierce pride of race. She was a thoroughbred and would go to her spiritual death with a high head, in the spring.

In the morning Michel would go in search of the caribou hunters, for after that night the women would not remain alone at Big Feather. David would cross to Portage lake to learn if the Windigo had been heard on the Little Current. He, himself, would cover the country back of the ridge for a trail which he had little hope of picking up, and endeavor to hold the women at their camp until their men returned. On the return of David they would at once start for Nepigon, leaving Michel to meet the canoe St. Onge was to send.

With Michel would go two letters, explaining his change of plans. The sole hope of holding the Indians now was in scotching the Windigo terror early in the winter by tracking down the beast on the first snow; and so, strongly as his heart drew him toward the post, he made his decision.

CHAPTER IX

For three days Steele searched the ridge and back country for tracks, but without success. David returned from Portage lake with the good news that the fishing camps were taking large catches of pike and whitefish, and there was no Windigo gossip. So, in spite of the shrill protests and indignant refutation of their squaws, Steele, corroborated by his men, assured the Ojibways that what the women had heard on the burnt ridge was the caterwauling of a lynx, and at once started with David for Ogoke lake and the Nepigon.

It was on a windless day in the heart of the northern Indian summer that the canoe bound south for the Nepigon approached the islands guarding the east end of Ogoke. Like silhouettes of anchored battle fleets they rode the sleeping lake, their fighting tops and stacks, of black spruce, their armored hulls, of age-worn rocks.

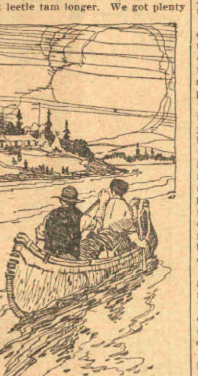
"Where is the post, David?" asked Steele.

"Four—five hour paddle, yet. Eet lie on long spruce point. You see eet today ver' far off."

"You realize that you can't start anything at Laflamme's place now, don't you?"

Repeatedly, David's square shoulders leaned to the stroke, as his arms swept the blade through, before he turned his black head to his chief.

"David has waited ten year, he can wait leetle tam longer. We got plenty troubles dees long snow on de Wailing. Daveed weel wait; you not worry for heem."



"It Looks as If the Whole Outfit Is Out to Meet Us."

"I knew you wouldn't do anything when we have this work down river ahead of us; but I realize that it will be hard, if we stay a day or two, for you to keep your hands off of him. His gang would get you anyway if you did square it with Laflamme, and that would put me in a hole as well."

The reticent David had never divulged even to Steele the cause of the ancient grudge he bore the free-trader. He had said simply that he wished to meet him—had twice journeyed far for that purpose; once missing him, the second time finding him camped with his fur canoes. As David had no quarrel with Laflamme's men, who would have come promptly to the aid of their chief, he had bided his time. In some way, years before, Laflamme had injured the Ojibway. That was the extent of Steele's knowledge.

Gradually, as they approached, the clearing opened up and the buildings of the fur post took shape. So keen was his curiosity that Steele ceased paddling to examine them through his binoculars. Here lived the man who was waiting until the snow flew for St. Onge's answer to his offer of a partnership in the trade for the price of Denise, the man who was luring the Ojibways for hundreds of miles with his whisky.

Although the freeze-up was little more than a fortnight away, tipis squatted, here and there, on the post clearing. This, of itself, meant but one thing to the man who held the glasses—whisky. For, throughout the wide north, September finds the hunters on their winter trapping grounds, preparing for the coming of the long snows.

"Wal, w'at you t'ink ov dat place?" asked David, as Steele put his glasses in their case.

"He must have a lot of people there—big buildings, too."

"Yes, eet ees beeg place."

As they approached the long point, Steele was surprised at the number of people moving about the buildings. On the beach the post dogs already awaited the strange craft, while a group of post people formed behind them. The canoe was close in shore when two men left the massive tradehouse and drifted to the log landing stage, off which a York boat rode at its mooring.

"It looks as if the whole outfit is out to meet us."

David turned a grim face to his chief. "Somet'ing strange here!"

"They may think we're a police canoe," suggested Steele.

"Ah-hah!"

"Is that Laflamme talking to the big fellow on the landing?"

"Ah-hah! He don' talk lak' dead man." So low were the sinister words spoken that Steele, in doubt, asked:

"What's that?"

The Ojibway turned to his chief a face twisted with hate.

"He don' know—he ees—dead man!"

"Some day you can settle with him—but not now, not now! We have a job on the Wailing—you and Michel and I," hastily objected Steele, fearing this meeting with the man he hated had jarred David off his mental balance.

The set features of the Ojibway relaxed. His narrow eyes glowed as he reassured the man who trusted him. "Daveed promise to meet Michel on de November snow. We have de beeg job—you an' Michel an' Daveed; I mak' no trouble here, boss."

Under the inspection of many pairs of curious eyes, the canoe slid into the beach. Leaving David to keep the dogs off the canoe, Steele walked through the silent huskies who instinctively drew back from his approach and closed in behind him, walking on stiff legs barely out of reach of the paddle he carried, awed yet threatening. The bulky half-breed, whose sinister face wore the red gash of a scar from chin to ear, Steele dismissed with a glance, but nothing, from the heavily beaded moccasins of smoke-tanned moosehide, to the wide-brimmed stetson of the free-trader, escaped his appraising eye. To his surprise, also, the dark features which met him with a look both surly and questioning, were undeniably handsome.

"Good day, gentlemen!" said Steele, affably, ignoring the coolness of his reception.

"Good day!" returned Laflamme, coldly, probing the smiling face of the stranger with a sharp look in which doubt and concern patently mingled.

"I am headed for Nepigon, from Fort Albany, and need some supplies," went on Steele. "Can you sell me some stuff?"

With a curl of the lip Laflamme replied: "That depends on what your business is on this lake."

The tawny-haired American laughed in the face of the speaker.

"Business on this lake? Are you joking? You seem to have all the business here. My business is to get back to New York before I'm frozen in, and report to the American Museum of Natural History. I've spent the last five months on the Albany, collecting. Now, I'm bound for Nepigon and the railroad."

The half-breed and his chief exchanged looks. Steele realized that he was suspected of being a government agent in disguise, so, as he needed supplies and wished to study Laflamme while David circulated among the post people, he desired to relieve the mind of the free-trader at once.

"You say you're from the States—doing collecting among the Indians? I should be glad to see some of your stuff."

Laflamme was taking no chances, and Steele welcomed the opportunity to establish his identity.

"Yes, I've two packs in the canoe. My name is Steele. I've been on the Albany two years—left a thousand pounds this year, at Fort Albany, to go out by boat." Then he hazarded: "You know Lascelles, the Revillon man there?"

Laflamme's reaction to the remark was instantaneous. His face darkened with anger.

Tragedy of Razor Blades

Those who are puzzled to know what to do with used safety razor blades may find a hint in the following, says the London Mail. A young and pretty girl approached Battersea bridge. She held something tightly in her left hand. When she reached the middle of the bridge she stopped and looked around.

Only one man was anywhere near, and he, apparently, was not paying any attention to her doings. In a flash she raised her hand and flung something into the river below. It glittered and shone as it fell, and the man, gazing over the bridge in curiosity, saw that it was a small glass phial of the sort in which powdered bath salts are sold, twelve in a box. His curiosity overcame him, and he overtook the girl. "Do tell me what you threw into the river," he begged. "My husband's razor blades," was the astonishing answer.

Jealous Man or Woman Lacks Self-Assurance

"There is, perhaps, no such thing as love without an occasional display of jealousy," says Burton Rascoe. "But in every case I believe it will be found that the one who is jealous has lost for the moment his or her self-assurance. It may be because of illness or overwork or a protracted lack of diversion.

"When I have been jealous or my wife has been jealous I have always noticed that our jealousy could be traced to one of these three things. When I have been jealous, they have been occasions when I felt myself at a disadvantage, when my egoism was not topnotch.

"The man who knows that he can depend upon his wife not to leave him in the lurch or desert him in a crisis or find some one else irresistibly more attractive, is pretty sure of himself, sure of his power to attract, sure of his worthiness as a man. This is true also of a woman."—Hearst's International-Cosmopolitan.

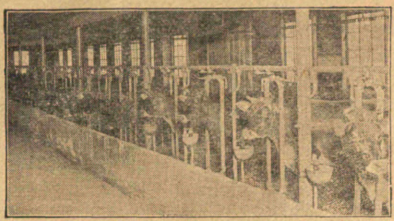
Cow Testing Associations Invaluable Aid to Milk Production



Elimination of non-productive cows from milk herds increases net profits.

Getting more milk from fewer cows is the aim of the cow testing association. Hundreds of cases have demonstrated in a most striking manner that the weeding out of non-productive milk cows and better care for the producing members of the milk herd pay big dividends.

This point was strongly stressed in an exhibit at the International Dairy Exposition held at Indianapolis last October. An actual instance was given which disclosed the following facts.

A milk producer had a herd of six milk cows producing 27,000 pounds of milk annually. He joined a cow testing association. The first step taken was to weed out the non-productive cows, that is, those cows yielding insufficient milk to net a profitable income over and above feed cost.

The weeding out process left only four cows in the milk herd. But these remaining cows were fed according to their individual requirements. No sanitary or beneficial feeding measure was neglected. During stabling months, they were given plenty of clean bedding; stables were kept clean; the long hair on flanks and udders were kept clipped. The cows were brushed or wiped with a damp cloth before each milking. Utensils were sterilized. The stable was well ventilated and plenty of clean, pure water was given the cows.

A year from the time the member joined the association, his records showed an increase in milk to more than 23,000 pounds from the four cows as compared to 27,000 pounds from six cows prior to this period. There was more than a corresponding increase in butterfat.

The cow testing association consists of about twenty-six farmers who co-operate and employ a trained tester to test their cows for economical production of milk and butterfat. The tester spends one day a month on each farm and obtains a complete record of each cow's milk and butterfat production, feed consumed, feed cost, growth, and income, and income over feed.

The first cow testing association in the United States was that organized at Newaygo County, Michigan, in 1905. Since then, there has been a fairly constant growth until 1925 shows a tally of 732 cow testing associations with excellent prospects of the number doubling within the next three years.

The Coming of Maple Season

Good "Old Sol" is gradually edging around to the east and every day in every way brings us nearer that beautiful season so much beloved in Southern Michigan—the month of June. Just before lovely June comes another desired season—maple-harvest time. Before many days the farmer will hie himself to the woods with an augur and his shiny tinware, whereat purling streams of sweetness will gush from every sturdy maple, responsive to the warm kiss of the sun.

The sugar and syrup makers of the countryside are preparing for a heavy run, as they always do, but what the outcome will be, of course no one knows, as that depends entirely upon the weather man. One farmer informs us he has already contracted more syrup than he can make, and there seems to be a wonderful demand in all markets for Southern Michigan maple products. This is not strange since from the time of old Chief Baw Beese and his five squaws it has been perfectly natural and customary for Hillsdale County's diversified forests to yield the sugar water. If you read history you will find the ancient Pottawattomie Indians were familiar with the process and a hard maple tree in your bush over three feet in diameter it would have a story to tell if it could talk for the Indians may have used it in their day. They boiled the sap in kettles and bartered the stuff with the settler—or those who had strong stomachs, since the same kettle served for cooking dog meat and fish, while the Red brothers never bothered about cleansing the pot. Some records claim the sugar had whiskers.

But to resume the soils of this county are known to produce a flavor not found elsewhere, precisely as the climate makes Michigan appless favored the world over. Even in England Michigan apples are known and respected.

The pupils and teacher wish to again thank the mothers for the pleasant surprise to us on Valentine's day when a valentine box was enjoyed.

"The Faith of A Woman"

The film "A Woman's Faith" shown Sunday evening at the Congregational church awakened considerable interest, inasmuch as the moral taught was a good one. The faith of a woman, even though a Catholic, saved a splendid upstanding American soldier of fortune; though she counted her beads and kissed the crucifix her faith was beautiful to behold.

Naree' Caron as a pretty French maid unjustly accused of the murder of her brother, was exceptionally portrayed, and the thread of the story following her seclusion in the French village with its gabled houses and inevitable flock of geese looked interesting. Cluny the detective, was about such a character as one would expect.

The historic St. Ann de Baupre showed up in a very touching and realistic scene. Whether the shrine of St. Ann can heal we leave for the reader to judge, although the pyramid of crutches is really there. Hundreds have seen it.

The Conspiracy of Pontiac

ALL STUDENTS of Michigan history have read the startling account of Chief Pontiac's conspiracy to butcher the Detroit garrison and thus obliterate the hateful English from the hunting grounds forever. Such men as Major Gladwin, General Lewis Cass and Pontiac himself, were strong, upstanding pillars of human faith and endurance, The site of Brightmoor was a deep, silent wood by day, trod by moccasined feet, and made hideous at night by the wolf. Jefferson Avenue was a thin indistinct trail between the giant whitewoods, cottonwoods and oaks. No doubt Old Chief Pontiac once trod these historic paths and for aught we know pitched his deerskin lodge on the B. E. Taylor Subdivisions. From the days of Major Gladwin great profits have been realized in holdings of building spots. Nowhere in the middle west can a better prospect be found than in the West Side Golf Club District of Detroit. Westward Ho! Is he watchword. Come and see the property. Dick McBain or Bert Knowles will tell you more.

A letter received from J. P. Speer of Holleywood, Florida, recently, will be published next week in our columns. Mr. Speer gives a dark-brown opinion of the future possibilities of Florida as a land of bonanza, and he is certainly not of the optimistic class. Quite to the contrary we quote a couple of gents from Hillsdale—Howard Aulsbro and F. L. Farnsworth, recent arrivals in Sunshine City, and both the latter claim to believe that a bunch of knockers are out with their little hammers trying to jar Florida off the map. Rev. H. D. Allen Passes to His Reward

From Mrs. Dell Fuller comes the news of the sudden death of Rev. H. D. Allen at Seattle, Washington, where he went about ten years ago. Rev. Allen was 85 years of age and was yet acting as a supply for pulpits. The sad news was received by his son, Ward Allen of Battle Creek on Thursday of last week. The son is a grocer residing at 149 Champion street. Right around 35 years ago Rev. Allen occupied the pulpit at the Baptist church here having been in the mercantile business in Hanover previously. He later became pastor of churches at Jackson, Charlotte, Quincy Marshall with a large number of acquaintances in the whole of Southern Michigan.

Adams Township Had Largest Attendance

There was a larger attendanee of club members and their parents at the rally from Adams township than any other township in the county, at Pinkham & Wright's building in Hillsdale last Saturday.

The morning was occupied by games and songs led by Miss Ione Young with Miss Margaret Meeks at the piano. Dinner was served to over 300 members and parents. Music was furnished during the noon hour by Adams township members and the North Adams High School orchestra.

Adams township answered roll call by the following numbers: Song by the Club; piano solo by Ethelyn Stevens; and two songs by Jean Young in her pleasing manner. The Club championship for each project was announced as follows; James Meeks, potatoes and poultry; ewe lamb, Muriel Holcomb, Edward Delamater; Maurine Taylor 1st, and Hazel Walworth 2nd, garment project; the winners of each project are to receive a free trip to Lansing Agricultural College next summer during Club week.

Next club meeting of Adams township will be held at North Adams Grange Hall Saturday, March 13th.

Musser, The "Jungle Man"

Seldom does a public speaker, in one day's visit to a community, attract the attention of the community and impress it as did Rev. Dr. Howard A. Musser, a returned missionary, who spent ten years in India and has traveled in all parts of the world except South America, and who is a staff speaker of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal church.

Some of his descriptions and anecdotes are of special interest and deserve mention here.

Evangelism, carried on in a right spirit declared Dr. Musser is effective even yet, whether in a group of University students in America or among the superstitious people of the jungle. "The Hindus' faith in a transmigration which causes a human soul to reappear in form of a reptile, a fowl, a lion or tiger, a woman, or some other animal forbids his killing the most dangerous of beasts.". The fiercest beasts fear the human eye and the human voice. Even the man-eating tiger is not such until he has killed either a sleeping person or a girl or woman who is veiled according to the native regular custon. Then he will eat nothing else if he can get human flesh. One was known to kill twenty-nine men before he was wayla d in his air and killed by a British officer.

While Dr. Musser and a companion were traveling through a jungle they stopped for the night in a rest house provided by the British government. In the evening a sound was heard "meeow-hoo-hoo," which was recognized as that of a black panther. After the men had fallen asleep the companion was siezed by the beast and dragged into the jungle, but Dr. Musser, being awakened, succeeded in shooting the panther before he had killed the man though most of one hand had to be amputated.

The gigantic Cabuli, coming through the mountains from Cabullstan ("stan" meaning country), loaning money to the poverty stricken people of North India and collecting enormous interest with a big club was described. The custom which forbids a man to speak to a woman outside his own household renders women missionaries indispensible.

All Asia has suffered from the political intrigeres of Europe, The United States is only great power that has not tried to get a slice of China. The Chinese appreciate this, while Japan craves the friendship of America and has, largely on this account, materially changed its policy in Korea. Through the schemes of politicians our own policy excludes the immigrant from Japan, while it admits the more dangerous one from southern Europe, who comes to spread anarchy and furnish the great percentage of our bootlegging and criminal element, debauching in many instances our legislatures, courts, and public press.

Old Fences Made New At Slight Expense

IT DOESN'T take much time nowadays to keep fence lines stock-tight and in good repair. Not if you use these quick driven Red Top Steel Posts.

You can drive 20 or 30 Red Tops in an hour. And the fencing is attached in a jiffy so that it will never pull away. This means that you can get a lot of fence repaired even in odd moments.

It's pretty risky business letting fence lines go hang while waiting for a time when work is slack to put them in shape. The damage to stock or crops that can come from just one weak spot may be larger than the entire expense of keeping the fences in good shape. An ounce of prevention is certainly worth while here.

Keep a small stock of Red Tops on hand and get one of these One-Man Drivers. Then when you see a wood post going bad simply drive a Red Top alongside, take out the wood post and fasten the fencing to the steel post. These Red Tops will stop any farm critter you've got on your place.

We personally guarantee Red Tops and we are authorized to make adjustments promptly. Red Tops are not an experiment. They are a proved success and have been giving a good account of themselves in thousands of farm fence lines.

We picked the Red Top line because we believe it is the best value. That's the way we try to buy all lines of goods. We expect our business to grow on the basis of giving you a full dollar's worth for every dollar you spend. Come in and see us when you're in town. Get our prices on posts and the other materials you're needing. Prices are mighty reasonable now on posts and other special items.

SUFFERED MANY YEARS WITH FEMALE TROUBLE

PE-RU-NA

LIKE A GIFT FROM HEAVEN

Mrs. Katie Scheffel,
R. F. D. No. 5. Lowell, Ohio

"I have been suffering for years with female trouble. Was operated on five years ago. It relieved me some but I did not regain my strength. Two years later was taken sick and bedfast several months. I treated a long while without much relief. I was discouraged, my mind affected, so nervous I could neither eat or sleep and unable to do anything.

We tried several doctors but one after another gave up my case as hopeless. Finally a good friend advised me to try Pe-ru-na. I did. It relieved me almost immediately. Your medical department said I was suffering from chronic catarrh of the system. I began taking your medicine in March, 1914, and continued until August. I took ten bottles of Pe-ru-na and three bottles of Man-a-lin and felt like a new person. Your medicine seemed like a gift from Heaven. It was like coming from darkness into light.

We have used your medicine since for coughs, colds and grip with good results. We will always keep it on hand. I weigh twenty-five pounds more than I ever did, eat and sleep well and can do a good day's work. Everybody says I look fine. Even the doctors are surprised. I cannot thank you enough and will always recommend Pe-ru-na to sufferers from catarrh."

MRS. KATIE SCHEFFEL.
R. F. D. No. 5, Lowell, O.

Mrs. Scheffel is only one of many thousand women in the world, who owe their present health to Pe-ru-na. The record of this medicine is a proud one as Pe-ru-na has held the confidence of both sexes for fifty years or more.

If your trouble is due to a catarrhal inflammation in any organ or part of the body, do like Mrs. Scheffel. Try Pe-ru-na. Insist upon having the original and reliable remedy for catarrhal conditions. You won't be sorry.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

New Tax Bill, as Fixed by Conferees, Now Is Law—Wet and Dry Conflict.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

APPROVED by the house and senate and signed by President Coolidge, the "revenue act of 1926" as fixed up by the conference committees is now a law. The house accepted the conference report by a vote of 354 to 28. The negative votes represented the opposition of the radicals to reductions of high surtaxes and estate taxes and the protest of another group that wished the estate tax completely repealed.

Republicans recorded in the negative were Representatives Beck, Browne, Lampert, Nelson, Peavey, Schafer, Schneider and Voigt of Wisconsin, Ramsey (Iowa), Anthony and Hoch (Kan.), Johnson, Christopherson and Williamson (S. D.), Simmons (Neb.), and Sinclair (N. D.).

Democrats were Representatives Drane, Green and Sears (Fla.), Allgood and Oliver (Ala.), Howard and Morehead (Neb.), and Gilbert (Ky.).

Others voting in the negative were Representatives Carss, Kvale and Wefald (Farmer-Labor, Minn.), and La Guardia (Socialist, N. Y.).

Representative McDuffie (Dem., Ala.), was recorded as present.

Ten senators voted against the bill, with 61 recorded in favor of it. The negative votes were cast by Senators Frazier and Nye (Rep., N. D.), Norbeck (Rep., S. D.), La Follette (Rep., Wis), and Howell (Rep., Neb.), Walsh and Wheeler (Dem., Mont.), Blease (Dem., S. C.), and Trammell (Dem., Fla.), and Shipstead (Farmer-Labor, Minn.).

With the exception of Senator Trammell, who registered his protest against the continuance of the estate tax, the opposition was based chiefly upon reductions in high surtaxes and estate tax rates, repeal of publicity and other features which the more radical senators have attacked.

By the new law the government's income is reduced by about $387,000,000 in 1926 and $343,000,000 in 1927. Though the cut greatly exceeds that recommended by the treasury, Secretary Mellon is not worried for he believes that if business continues good the revenues will be sufficient. The President, too, is fairly well satisfied with the measure but counts on congress to be economical in appropriations for new expenditures.

An important feature of the new law is the creation of a permanent joint congressional committee of ten whose duty is to investigate the operation and effects of the present tax system, to investigate the administration of taxes by the bureau of internal revenue, to investigate measures and methods for the simplification of such taxes, to make a definite report to the senate and house embodying recommendations not later than December 31, 1927, and to report otherwise to the finance and ways and means committees and to the senate and house from time to time as investigations are made or recommendations decided upon.

THOUGH trained observers assert there is not the slightest chance for modification of the Volstead act at this session of congress, the wets are carrying on their campaign vigorously. Their "face the facts" conference in Washington was attended by more than 500 men and women from all parts of the country and was marked by Senator Edge's plea for a nation-wide referendum on proposals to legalize beer and light wines and to tighten the law against distilled spirits. In the house of representatives wet and dry members are advocating, respectively, examination of the books and activities of the Anti-Saloon league and the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment. William H. Stayton, executive head of the association, has announced that the organization is willing to have its books looked into if the league is ready to reveal its records, and if the World League Against Alcoholism, the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal church, the Committee of One Thousand of New York, and the Flying Squadron of Indianapolis are willing to follow suit.

The house alcoholic liquor traffic committee, having failed to receive from the rules committee a recommendation that it be given authority to inquire into prohibition, plans to make the investigation on its own account.

SENATOR WHEELER of Montana has introduced a resolution calling for an investigation of the alleged activities of the Hungarian minister to the United States to bring about the recent exclusion of the Countess Karolyi from the country by the State department. The resolution asserts that the charge has been made that the countess' exclusion resulted from the "forging of certain documents" which tended to connect her with undesirable political organizations with which the United States was not on friendly terms. It charges that the Hungarian minister to the United States paid a private detective agency $20,000 for inaccurate and false reports obtained through the "hounding" of the Count and Countess Karolyi while on a visit in this country prior to the trip on which she was excluded.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE lets it be known that he is opposed to the development of military aviation on the scale advocated by Col. William Mitchell and his followers because in his opinion it would entail what he regards as an enormous and unjustified expense and also would foster the same spirit of militarism in this country as moved Germany to embark in the World war. Furthermore, he thinks it would cause a renewal of the old game of armament competition between nations. The President urges the passage of the bills introduced which carry into effect the recommendations of the Morrow aircraft commission.

The White House spokesman says Mr. Coolidge is extremely gratified by the performances of this congress up to date. He does not hesitate to pronounce it a record breaker in prompt disposition of the tax bill, the world court resolution, appropriation bills and other bills, and is not surprised that the leaders now expect to clean up work and adjourn the session by June 1. He regards it entirely feasible to dispose of agricultural and railroad labor bills, Muscle Shoals, war debt settlements, remaining appropriation bills, and the aircraft program without prolonging the session beyond that date.

THERE is another fight on between the President and the recalcitrant group in the senate, involving several questions. These are the ratification of the Italian war debt settlement, approved by the house; the resolution aiming at prosecution of Secretary Mellon's Aluminum Company of America, supported by most of the Democrats and by the radical Republicans; confirmation of the appointment of Thomas F. Woodlock to be a member of the interstate commerce commission, opposed by those who call him a "Coolidge Democrat," a reactionary and a "Morgan man"; and confirmation of the appointment of Wallace McCamant of Oregon to a federal judgeship. It is predicted that the President will win in the two first mentioned matters and probably lose in the last two.

MEXICO has replied to our government's protest against its new land and oil laws, reaffirming its position that these laws are not retroactive and confiscatory. According to reliable information, Secretary of State Kellogg has virtually warned the Mexican government that American recognition of the government of President Calles will be withdrawn, Ambassador Sheffield called home, and diplomatic relations broken off if Mexico persists in giving a retroactive interpretation to the new laws. Such retroactive construction would have the effect of confiscating, our State department contends, not less than half of the $1,000,000,000 of American investments in Mexico.

Great Britain also filed a protest against the laws not long ago, and it is likely that if Washington withdraws recognition of the Calles government, the British will follow suit. English investments in Mexico amount to about $800,000,000.

CHICAGO'S determined effort to rid the city of the Sicilian gun men is being aided by the federal immigration authorities and is bearing fruit. The police gathered in large numbers of the Italians and sorted out more than a score who could not show their right to be in the country and will be deported. Dozens of others have fled to other localities, where they are being rounded up. The imported Sicilians have been especially active in the murderous wars carried on by the rum runners, hi-jackers and illicit distillers and they are held responsible for numerous killings. The police raids were brought on by a recent disclosure in court that American-born citizens are afraid to serve on juries where Sicilians are being tried for crimes. The Chicago authorities and the supervisors of immigration declare they are prepared to go the limit and Washington will not be slow to issue the deportation warrants.

POPE PIUS XI has opened the way for negotiations between the Vatican and the Fascist government of Italy which may result in the settlement of the whole Roman question and bring about an accord between the Holy See and the Italian state. In a letter to Cardinal Gasparri the pope said he would not recognize the forthcoming church reform laws, soon to be passed by the Italian parliament, unless an official accord was reached with the Holy See. The pope added that no such accord can be reached while he is kept a "prisoner in the Vatican" by the "iniquitous conditions" imposed on the pontiff when the Italians occupied Rome in 1870 and destroyed the temporal powers of the pope.

DIPLOMATS of Europe are looking forward to a stormy session when the League of Nations council meets March 8 for the purpose of admitting Germany. Berlin has asked that Briand of France, Chamberlain of Great Britain and Stresemann of Germany hold a preliminary meeting March 7 to try to come to an understanding on the question of enlarging the council by taking in Poland, Spain and Brazil or any one of them. The Germans do not object to giving Spain a permanent seat in the council but will not stand for the admission of Poland. Chamberlain's role of peacemaker is difficult. He professes to believe the permanent council should be enlarged, but the British cabinet is said to be flatly opposed to such action at this time, holding that it would be a breach of faith to Germany and a betrayal of the Locarno pacts.

CROWN PRINCE CAROL of Rumania seems to have won his fight against Premier Bratiano and the latter's brother-in-law, Prince Babu Stribey, favorite of the queen, and his early return to Bucharest is expected. Bratiano's power is broken and he has tendered his resignation, while Prince Babu has been forced out of public affairs entirely. Carol arrived in Paris last week, accompanied by Magda Lupescu, and the official courtesies accorded him were significant. He probably will soon retract his renunciation of the throne, go home and become regent for his aged and sick father, King Ferdinand.

THOUGH one hesitates to help along the publicity campaign of the countess of Cathcart, it seems necessary to record that, having been allowed ten days of liberty in New York on her personal bond, she is now likely to be returned to Ellis Island and thereafter deported to England unless she wins in the habeas corpus proceedings started by her attorneys. The Department of Labor has refused a rehearing of the case, holding that it is now within the federal courts. The department would welcome a court interpretation of the "moral turpitude" provision of the immigration law. The defense is ready to show the offense of the countess is not a crime in South Africa, where she and the earl of Craven spent a year after their elopement.

University's Great Aid to State Development

Seattle, Wash.—Economic development of the Northwest, husky young region constituting one of the corners of the Union, has received stanch aid from the University of Washington.

The college of fisheries developed a process of canning crabs that added, the first year, $450,000 to the resources of Washington and Alaska. It now is devising a method to can smelt and is giving studied assistance to the codfishing industry in the north Pacific, where there are 50,000 square miles of cod banks.

The college of forestry originated a kiln for drying Douglas fir in 33 per cent the time formerly required. A large lumber firm estimated the saving in the last five years at more than $250,000.

The college of mines is devising methods of using sponge iron for the manufacture of foundry iron and steel, and a way has been found for converting scrap iron into marketable steel cheaply and quickly, thus adding to the supply of raw material.

In the department of ceramics means of making roof and floor tile from Washington clays have been evolved so that now almost half the tile used in the state is produced within its boundaries.

Prof. Hewitt Wilson, with a view of utilizing a vast deposit of kaolin in eastern Washington, invented a compound to produce cheaper china of a grade supposedly obtainable only in England and Germany.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Monroe—The Monroe County road commission will receive bids here March 10 for the construction of the Erie-Bedford road, 16 feet wide and seven miles long, and the Vienna road, 14 feet wide and one mile long. Bids will be opened at 10 a. m. Both roads are to be built from Macadam and to be completed this fall.

Monroe—A petition has been received here by the county road commission asking to improve a road commencing from the village corner of Scofield on the Carleton-Scofield road, south half a mile and then east two miles and connecting with the Heiss road, Exeter township. Petition was taken under advisement.

Kalamazoo—Locked in her boarding place by Normal school students, who as a joke sought to defer her marriage to H. R. Leversee, Miss Lenora Canaday, outwitted her captors by making a rope of bed sheets and lowering herself from a window to the ground two stories below. The wedding took place at the scheduled hour.

Ann Arbor—Carefully avoiding the use of the term "birth control," Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the University of Michigan, nevertheless discussed the subject before the delegates of the American Congress of Internal Medicine here. The congress moved here from Detroit for clinical demonstrations at the University hospital.

Grand Rapids—Sentiment of the Michigan Retail Clothiers' and Furnishers' Association at its convention here, apparently was opposed to general adoption of the so-called 10-payment plan of selling merchandise, but a few retailers boldly asserted they have given it their fullest indorsement. One of the opponents was G. R. Rappart, of Pontiac.

Birmingham—The Briggs Investment company of Detroit has notified the village council of Birmingham that the construction of a $200,000 theater building at Woodward and Maple avenues will be begun immediately. The theater will be leased by the John H. Kunsky interests, who will equip it with furnishings costing about $100,000, including a pipe organ, it was announced.

Ann Arbor—Action that would have given the University of Michigan the new football stadium for which agitation has been carried on for the past few years, was postponed for a month at the last monthly meeting of the board of regents of the university. This is the second postponement of action on the matter, a similar course having been followed by the regents last month.

Ann Arbor—Urging that business men pay more attention to education and aid in the development of a training which will fit the student entering business to more readily acquire the methods and ideas peculiar to the business he undertakes, Dr. Clarence Cook Little, president of the University of Michigan, addressed the members of the Michigan Real Estate Association at the Michigan Union.

Albion—Miss Virginia Frank, of Dayton, O., Albion College student who recently was given a leading role in the opera "The Student Prince," despite a lack of stage experience, will not play for at least three weeks and will disappoint several hundred Albion friends who had planned to hear her either at Battle Creek or Jackson. She was taken ill while visiting friends here and underwent an operation at the Sheldon Memorial Hospital here for appendicitis.

Ypsilanti—The Willis Co-operative Association, an organization of farmers, has requested the Ypsilanti Farm bureau to take over the business of the Willis concern and operate it as a branch of the Ypsilanti bureau. Willis is a village southeast of Ypsilanti. The proposed merger will be passed upon by the Ypsilanti Farm bureau at its annual meeting March 3. Frank Wilson is manager of the local farm bureau which last year reported gross sales of $274,000 and net profits of $5,307.

Lansing—Fern Browers, 5-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Browers, of Milletts, a small town five miles southwest of here, burned to death when his clothing caught fire from a stove. The boy was at home alone when the accident occurred. The mother had left the house for a moment to go to a store nearby. When she returned she found the child in the doorway, his clothing a mass of flames. She extinguished the fire, but the boy had suffered such serious burns that he died within two hours.

Monroe—The committee in charge of the Monroe county historical pageant to be staged here June 23 and 24, announced that a large group of Indians from Walpole Island, Ontario, will be here and take special part in the pageant, depicting the early history of Monroe. The Indian band will accompany this delegation to play in the home-comers' parade on the afternoon of June 23 and an Indian village will be set up in the city. Bert S. Knapp is the chairman of the pageant committee and H. D. Schubert, secretary.

Monroe—Phil T. Colgrove, Hastings, president of the Michigan Good Roads association spoke in favor of the good roads in Michigan following a mid-day luncheon of the Monroe Exchange club here. Colgrove said that last year the tourists from the east and south parts of the United States spent more than $200,000,000 in Michigan. This was one of the financial returns to the state for the expenditure of the vast amount of money which the state expended during the last four or five years in the building of trunk lines.

Goats to Be Marketed

A dozen goats were turned loose on an island off the west coast of Mexico by Spanish adventurers 200 years ago. The island today, known as Guadalupe, is inhabited by 150,000 of the hardy animals. It was taken over recently by a development company which obtained a concession from the Mexican government. The animals are to be brought to the mainland alive and slaughtered. Horns and hoofs become glue and other by-products, the pelts going into the manufacture of shoes, gloves and other commodities.

Michigan Railroads Welcome Good Roads

MICHIGAN is one of the states that has made the greatest progress by the extension of its good roads. Its industrial importance has been greatly fortified by the development of a system of internal communication. It can still advance under a careful and judicious extension of this program. With the passing of transportation from the mud age to the hard road age there are indications that we are experiencing in the United States an industrial revolution as important in its effect as was that which marked the introduction of the macadam road and the steam railroad in England. This is evinced in the expansion of our national income.

For instance, the wealth of our nation—investment on our plant—in 1912 was 186 billions of dollars while our national income—the annual turn-over—was 30 billions of dollars.

The wealth of the nation in 1922 was 321 billions of dollars, and our national income over 80 billions.

It took a six-dollar investment to make a dollar in 1912.

It took only a four-dollar investment to make a dollar in 1922. An increase in efficiency of 33 per cent. in a decade.

THE utility of the railroad, as a freight carrier, has been increased many times through the complementary agency of the good roads system. The traffic in the old days could only be drawn from about eight miles on either side of the right-of-way of a railroad. Now, the railroad's range of activity is five to six times greater. True, these new transportation agencies present some problems that embarrass at times, but better transportation in whatever form it may be, operates to the general good.

The railroads do ask for reciprocal regulation.

Michigan is in the vanguard as an industrial state. Let us retain that position.

The Michigan Railroad Association approves the state's proposed program for more good roads because it will yield a large return on the investment.

Youth Commits Crimes

Michigan State Police claim to have apprehended the youngest fugitive from justice, with the longest record of of crimes for his age, of any taken into custody any place in many months. He is George Gami, 15. State Police, assigned to solve a mysterious robbery of a theater box office at Iron River, traced the job to the 15-year-old boy and obtained a confession.

Checking up on the lad it was found that he was a fugitive from the State Industrial School for Boys at Lansing, and a frequent visitor at the Detroit Detention Home. He confesses to 11 crimes and one attempted offense. He was sentenced to the state school from Detroit Feb. 11, 1924, for stealing an automobile.—Michigan Trooper.

Drive Them Out

With the coming of the Spring season the countryside will again be overrun with bands of Gypsies, who infest particularly the rural districts and smaller country villages. Having no visible means of support, they wander about the country exacting a toll of thievery wherever they go, a general practice being to carry along with them a bevy of dark hued handmaidens whose particular job is to separate the susceptable citizen from a portion of his bank roll under the guise of fortune telling and other mystic practices. Hardly ever, when a complaint is made to do more than return the amount of their pilferings and a command from the officials to continue right on their way into the next county. A good way to deal with this gentry would be to demand jail sentences when they are apprehended in their nefarious practices. A little of this kind of treatment would rid the state of their presence, a thing to be desired in view of the tourist business which is becoming an important part of Michigan summer, and who do not want to be compelled to camp along our highways at the mercy of these wandering hordes.

Farmers Planting Evergreen Trees

Michigan farmers will plant more than 300,000 seedling trees in their woodlots this spring, this number having already been ordered from the forestry department at the M. S. C.

The majority of the trees ordered are pines, spruces and walnuts, according to a check of the college order books. They will be used for woodland planting and reforestation work. It is estimated by Prof. A. K. Chittenden, head of the M S. C. forestry department, that the number of seedlings to be distributed will be enough to reforest about 4,000 acres.

The trees are sent out to farmers at cost from the college forest nursery. Orders haye grown so in recent years that the number of seedlings distributed in this way is said to be limited only by the capacity of the nursery to furnish stock.

Six states are included among the leaders in the international egg laying contest at the end of the first tour months of the year's test. White leghorns from the Hanson Poultry Farm, Corvallis, Oregon, stand high in the contest, with 904 eggs for the ten hens in their first four months. Other leaders in the different divisions of the contest are from Michigan, North Carolina, New York, Missouri and Alberta, Canada. One hundred pens of ten birds each are competing for honors in test, which provides valuable data on production efficiency in the poultry industry.

New Farm Campaigns Start In Counties

A series of intensive county agricultural campaigns, following up similar work carried on in many counties of the state in previous years, will be held this spring, according to a schedule just given out by the extension staff at the M. S. C.

Starting in Jackson county on March 8, the campain teams from the college will reach Barry, Mecosta, St. Clair, Newago, Wexford and Otsego counties before the last drive ends on May 14. The campaigns will be of the popular "barnyard" type, small local meetings being held at many points scattered over the county which is being covered. This type of campaign, with a week or two given over to the intensive work in each county, has proved unusually effective. Farmers have to travel only a short distance to reach a meeting, and they can go in their "work clothes."

More than a third of the counties of Michigan have already had the benefits of the "barnyard" campaign work. Definite improvement in agricultural conditions and practices is said to follow the lessons of the campaigns in the districts reached.

The Jackson county drive will feature Alfalfa and Fertilizer subjects to be taken up, are: Barry, March 15 to 26, Dairy and Alfalfa; Mecosta, March 23 to April 2, Dairy and Alfalfa; St. Clair, March 29 to April 2, Dairy and Alfalfa; Newago, April 12 to 16, Dairy and Alfalfa; Wexford, April 12 to 16, Alfalfa; Otsego, May 11 to 14. Dairy and Alfalfa.

Special soils campaigns of a similar nature have been held during February in Mouroe, Saginaw, and Livingston counties, with others booked for St. Clair and Huron during March.

What of The Morrow?

Is it any wonder the novice stops and stares as he passes the modern giant aeroplane at rest in its hangar since the wonderful development of aerial navigation has come to pass as one might say within the past three years. Previous to that time it was thought rather risky and unusual to attempt anything like a long flight with the plane. With all its horrors and disasterous aftermath the World war has yet brought to us a number of discoveries and unthought of things The use of the aeroplane in war has taught us more than 20 years of use during peace times. It is not gambling with truth to say that today practically all the large cities of the country are connected with aeroplane mail routes—and though a man gets killed occasionally on duty no one seems to take it seriously.

Verily "what hath God wrought" Plans are afoot now to build a flying machine that will carry as many passengers as a transcontinental train, and many tons of baggage. Of course as yet no man has solyed the problem of keeping a plane in air after the engine stops—but he has counteracted the danger by placing several motors all tuned ready to start, so that as one engine fails to function another will do its part thus avoiding an accident.

Henry Ford seems to be the leading light in this enterprise—probably because he has the money and the leisure to develop his ideas and lay out landing fields on the many routes out of Detroit and of course it's Henry's privilege to reap a goodly share of the reward which he will proceed to do as soon as his aeroplane factory is in full blast. He will be the only large corporation in America building all-metal planes—which means something like several million dollars cleaned up before the other firms are able to operate very generally.

The latest freak in aeroplane manufacture is a six cylinder compact internal combustion engine with the cylinders (air cooled) arranged around the hub as spoke of a wheel. This will eliminate vibration to a large extent, increase power considerably, and require vastly less space per horse power. It can be manufactured very much cheaper than anything in use at present and will be much longer lived. It is probably not generally known the modern 12-cylinder flying engine is a very short lived machine, and the strain of one long flight often puts it out of commission until new parts are installed.

Mr. Ford some years ago demonstrated what he believed regarding the conserving of water powers by buying a large number in Michigan—many of which he probably never will develop, and now he is considering utilizing the waste air for his mail routes so there is not much that can be done but to wait for the millenium. Its coming—and its so near you can hear the humming of its motors Old Mother Shipman builded so much better than she knew way back there in Merrie old England that we are now sitting up to take notice of the lingo rhyme published so many years ago regarding what our transportation was to be She spoke of "Carriages without horses would go" and man should mount up on wings as a bird, and he has done all these things—but what of the morrow. How can we stand the strain of inventing and developing as much in the next 100 years as in the past century? We must watch and wait.

Growing of Iris

There has just been issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture a timely bulletin on the growing of the Iris, sometimes known as flag or fleur-de-lis. This bulletin is entitled "Garden Irises", by B. Y. Morrison, of the Bureau of Plant Industry.

In the garden of the busy man or women there should be no plants which require undue care or attention. This is especially true of the flower garden on a farm, where labor is, of necessity, spent upon the vital activities of the farm business and where it is the exception rather than the rule to find any individual with leisure enough to tend an elaborate flower garden.

If the farmer or city dweller has a garden where he grows flowers other than shrubs, which make the largest show for a minimum of care, there is no candidate more worthy than the iris. It is to be had in a variety of colors and forms equaled by few hardy plants, is tolerant of many adverse conditions, is subject to attacks from few diseases and insects, and is reltively permanent.

The bulletin, copies of which can be secured without cost by addressing Congressman Joseph L. Hooper, Washington, D. C. will be of great value to members of garden clubs and others interested in flower growing.

BANKERS SURVEY STATE BANK LAWS

Find That Movement for State Guaranty of Bank Has Gone Into Eclipse.

New York.—A survey of state banking laws conducted by the State Bank Division of the American Bankers Association shows marked progress toward greater uniformity and more efficient bank supervision, it is declared by Frank W. Simmonds, in charge of the division, in a statement giving the results of the investigation. He says that the movement for state guaranty of bank deposits appears to have gone into eclipse.

"The division has urged that the office of bank commissioner be freed from politics and all other functions of state government and tenure be made more secure with sufficient compensation and discretion to attract men of outstanding ability," Mr. Simmonds says. "Gratifying progress has been made during the past year in important bank legislation in many states. Idaho, Wyoming and Oregon led the list by adopting entirely new modern banking codes, while Texas and Montana have new codes in preparation.

Uniformity Among State Laws

"The survey shows that it is generally agreed there should be a high degree of uniformity among the states in laws dealing with certain fundamental principles of bank organization, regulation and supervision, and that there is a strong tendency in this direction. We find a very definite trend toward increasing the minimum capital requirements of banks to $25,000; creation of banking boards to act in an advisory capacity with the state bank commissioner, and legislation empowering bank commissioners to take complete charge of insolvent banks and to liquidate them as distinguished from liquidation through the courts.

"We find also a trend toward legislation providing for closer supervision and regulation of building and loan associations; more equitable taxation of bank stock; legislation providing for merger, conversion or consolidation of banking institutions, the legalizing and regulating of what is known as 'departmental banking'; broadening the field for investment of funds of saving banks and trust companies, and increasing the power of the bank commissioner as to granting or denying charters for new banks, and authorizing his making reasonable rules and regulations governing bank management and prescribing penalties for the violation thereof.

"Additional general characteristics of state bank legislation are for increasing the compensation of the bank commissioner and lengthening his term of office of four, five or six years, with power to appoint necessary deputies and examiners; legislation providing for the reduction of mandatory bank calls to three and reducing the number of examinations required by law annually to one; making issuance of worthless checks a misdemeanor; limiting or prohibiting an officer or director of a bank borrowing from his bank unless his collateral is approved by a majority of the board of directors, and limiting or prohibiting the opening of branch banks.

Eclipse of Guaranty Movement

"The question of state guaranty of bank deposits appears this year to have passed into an eclipse, so far as the extension of the idea is concerned, notwithstanding the fact that state guaranty laws were recommended by the governors of two states, and bills were introduced in several of the states, all of which were defeated. The general tendency, so far as state guaranty of deposits laws are concerned, is distinctly the other way, the indications being that several states now having guaranty laws are trying to free themselves from this legislation. Oklahoma has abandoned the plan of state guaranty of deposits, and this year the South Dakota legislature has repealed the state guaranty law and has referred the repeal to the people at the next general election for ratification."

BANKERS RAISE FUND OF $500,000 FOR EDUCATION

A fund of $500,000 to endow scholarships and research in economics in American colleges was recently established by the American Bankers Association in celebration of its Golden Anniversary. The intention of the Foundation is to promote education in the direction of sounder general economic understanding. Half the total sum represents subscriptions by the American Bankers Association, the American Institute of Banking and individual bankers, and the other half quotas assigned to bankers in each state. The Association gave $50,000 from its reserve funds, and the American Institute of Banking, through individual subscriptions from its members, who are chiefly clerks in the banks, subscribed $25,000. Numerous subscriptions of $5,000, $2,500 and $1,000 each were made by individual bankers in all parts of the country.

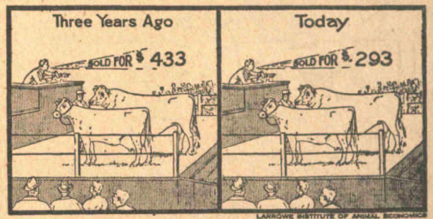
LARROWE INSTITUTE OF ANIMAL ECONOMICS

UNLESS a poultryman is clearing at least two dollars for each layer in his flock every year, there is something wrong with the methods he is using, says the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. It may be a case of poor layers, poor housing or just plain poor food.

Even the best bred hen will not lay day after day unless she is fed with those elements which she must have to turn into eggs. Any hen will lay in the spring—it's her nature to do this—but if poultry keeping is to be a profitable business the hen must be induced to lay throughout the year. During the cold weather season the days are short and the fowls require additional food. Quantity of grain is important but it takes mash containing egg-making nutrients to produce eggs from Labor day to Easter.

Bargain Pure Bred Prices Boost Dairying Profits



A PURE-BRED sire is the first step to profitable dairying, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics, which is urging farmers to take advantage of prevailing low prices of good breeding stock to organize their herds for greater production. A pure-bred bull and cow which three years ago sold for an average of $433 at auction may now be obtained for only $293, statistics show.

"Sire profits" may make all the difference between a farmer's labor income of $500 a year and another farmer's income that is twice that amount. In one agricultural college survey it was found that whereas the average labor income on farms heading their herds with pure-bred bulls was $837 in a year, farms using grade bulls returned a labor income for the year of only $489. But even as he breeds up better cows, the farmer can realize a greater profit from the cows on hand if he will but give more attention to proper feeding. The average cow under ordinary farm conditions is not producing profitably because her grain ration lacks milk-making elements or because she is underfed or overstuffed with poorly balanced food.

There are "poor" pure breds as well as "good." "Pedigree" alone only guarantees pure blood, not results. It takes a good cow, a good dairy ration and good management to succeed. Records of performance and the actual test are what need to be watched in these days of business farming.

"The Eighteenth Amendment brings to our people solid advantages which are more and more apparent and more and more fully recognized. That is why it is here to stay."

Turning to the effects of prohibition on business conditions, we find a statement of sound reasoning from Professor Thomas N. Carver of Harvard University. In part Professor Carver says, "There are many factors in the prosperity of any country or of any class. It would be useless to argue that prohibition has been the only or chief factor in the prosperity of this country or of our laboring population. That it has been one of the factors is a reasonable inference from such facts as we have, by any process of reasoning which we would apply to a similar problem."

Again, Professor Carver declares that "the money that used to be spent on drink, estimated at $2,000,000,000 annually, did not evaporate as soon as prohibition was adopted. It continues to be spent some of it, to be sure, for bootleg liquor. The poorer classes, or the classes that were formerly poor, are not the ones who are spending their money on bootleg liquor; it costs too much. Those who do, do not get so much better off. These observations probably have something to do with the fact that those who once formed our poorer classes are now so much more prosperous than they used to be. To be sure, the restriction of immigration is giving them higher wages than they would be getting if, at the close of the World War, we had opened our doors to the millions of wage workers who wanted to come. But even with our present wage scale, partly offset by our high cost of living, it is difficult to imagine our working people spending so much on other things as they are now spending if the saloon got so much of their money as it used to get, and if they were as frequently incapacitated by drunkenness as they used to be."

The writer then cites numerous fields in the economic world which have received some of the funds that formerly went to the liquor business. But the most significant figures he thinks have to do with large numbers of laborers that are entering the capitalist class. He finds proof of this in the fact that saving deposits have multiplied two and a half times from 1914 to to 1924, while the number of depositors increased more than three and a half times. Furthermore, "the investment of wage workers in the shares of corporations is increasing so rapidly that all statistics are out of date before they can be published." For example, he quotes the large number of present stockholders of the Bell Telephone System, the United States Steel Company, Armour and Company, Swift and Company, General Motors Company, the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company holding one or more shares of stock."

Professor Carver includes his article with the very reasonable statement that "any one who attempts to explains all these amazing signs of prosperity among our working classes without mentioning prohibition seems to me as extreme as the one who would explain them on the ground of prohibition alone. I cannot explain them except by bringing in prohibition as a very important contributing factor."

Another contributor to this symposium whom we wish to quote is Horace D. Taft, Headmaster of the Taft School. Mr. Taft, while admitting that enormous good has resulted from prohibition, takes the viewpoint that the method used is failing in its purpose. He sees America in the grip of the bootleggers with their wholesale corruption. That something must be done, he is certain; and he continues by recording three proposals which have been suggested. "First repeal the Amendment. I affirm that no man can think clearly on the subject who dreams of such a repeal. In the first place, though many know the constitutional requirements, few seem to realize them. Up in my little village some people talk as though a rousing majority in a Watertown town meeting would repeal the Amendment. What is it that the Constitution requires? First, a two thirds vote in one house of Congress, an enormous majority, then a two thirds vote in the other house, then a ratification of the repeal by three fourths of the States. Twenty six of the states, or two more than half, adopted prohibition for themselves before Congress touched the matter, and they are drier today than they were then. But the question hardly needs argument. Most of the wets admit that repeal is impossible."

The next way proposed is to "change the Volstead Act so as to permit the manufacture and sale of beer and light wines. The great difficulty is that we live in a hopelessly wet section and unless we study broadly the public opinion of the whole country we have no idea of the situation. You might as well ask a man at the bottom of a well his opinion of the landscape as to ask a New York or New Jersey club man his opinion of the United States on this subject. The man in the well is in a wet section too, The truth is that there is no hope whatever of a beer and wine amendment, for not only is the public opinion of the nation strong against it, but this opinion tends to grow stronger."

Many Numbers On One Car

The family tree of an old Ford truck taken as evidence of a state motor law violation by a State Police officer in Michigan was found to have more entanglements than European royalty. Trooper Edw. Maher made the arrest of the driver of a truck when it collided with one of the service trucks of the Jackson, Mich., fire department. The trooper was handling traffic at the fire when the collision occurred and began taking down the details for reference.

He took down the front license plate as 318:453 and in checking the rear plate found it was 664-953 When the truck and its driver were brought to State Police barracks, the state registration record showed the front plate of the truck belonged to a Buick roadster owned a a Lansing man, while the other plate was listed to a Ford Sedan owned by a Stockbridge man. In view of the large assortment, Maher checked the motor number and found it belonged to a Ford touring car.—Michigan Trooper.

Such Improvements!

The county road scraper has been doing good work on our streets this week. Our local scraper run by Bob Trumbull gets the dumps at times and refuses to do its work. Possibly it is a little light for winter work, but the county scraper comes out and the way she makes the snow fly is a caution!

One cannot help noticing the change during the past thirty-five years, which probably seems a bit long to most of our young folks but is only a short span to us. Thirty-five years ago it was customary to place a couple of good shovels in the box of your sleigh or cutter before starting on a journey to neighbor Jonas' from ten to twenty miles away, and mind you—it was considered good taste to take one other man along for an emergency at this season of the year. And when going you usually kissed the family "good bye" not knowing that you would meet them again in a week, Many incidents are recorded of men being found frozen to death on the road, but now it is different.

You take a teakettle of hot water from the stove and you drench Lizzie's interior works for a few minutes. You dope her with large quantities of hot water until she resembles a miniature boiler explosion. You carefully take a position at one side because the old girl might rear and plunge like a 'tang.

In due time you "wind 'er up" and Slam! Bang! Away she goes, coughing and spitting to beat the band. For the sixth time you yell to wife to "step lively" while in the meantime Lizzie is hitting her up around 3,000 revolutions and that aint half fast enough. In due season wife steps into the tonneau (that's the laundry basket of your rig) and you are all set for a journey to Aunt Jemima's over on the Pike. Whether it is eight miles or eighty makes little difference since your flivver is guaranteed to climb a telephone pole without batting an eye, or perchance she might wallow in snow three feet deep and come out smiling the next day but you don't have to. Nice roads in all directions with scrapers plowing them night and day, make winter travel a vast improvement on thirty-five years ago.

Keeping Cows Means $337,820 Extra Income for This County

The added income of $337,820 a year is enjoyed by Hillsdale county farmers indirectly as a result of keeping cows, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. This income is in the form of a more fertile soil due to the manure of the dairy cows in this county. On the basis of practically a $20.00 fertilizer valuation per animal per year this means a total of $337,820 added to the richness of soil in this county every twelfth month, Manure is a source of the most valuable plant food obtainable says the Institute, but to preserve it at its highest value or efficiency, it should either be put directly to the fields each day or conserved until such time as the opportunity offers itself to spread it. Feeding trials have proven that an ordinary cow, while putting from 15 to 18 per cent of the total energy of the feed she consumes into milk, actually returns to the soil 80 per cent of the elements of soil fertility in her feed in the form of manure. This had led many dairy men to discover that the purchase of good concentrate feeds for their cows not only more than pays for itself in increased milk production but that it also supplies necessary food to farm crops that are expensive when bought in the form of commercial fertilizer.

The precaution used by county fair officials to safeguard the health of livestock exhibits are described in a notice received by the United States Department of Agriculture from the San Joaquin County Fair Association of California. Through the influence of a Federal Inspector stationed in the county, the fair was the first on the Pacific Coast to require that all cattle 6 months of age be tuberculin tested and that a certificate accompany the entry. Fair officials also have adopted a rule that all hogs exhibited must be immunized against cholera This year the association is considering seriously a requirement that all livestock, especially sheep, be free from intestinal parasites. The progressive steps have received favorable comment by Federal Live Stock officials. The fair's premium lists also contain short educational articles on better livestock and disease control.

Charles Burns, living near Flint Mich., recently was completely thrown off his much advertised "one-drunk-per-week" schedule by a Michigan state policeman. Burns had maintained his schedule for some time and advertised the affairs widely—usually by causing disturbance. Trooper Chris Addison was invited in on one of the pre-drunk demonstrations and Burns decided to fight it out and "lick" a state cop by way of featuring his demonstration. Addison was agreeable and Burns' friends threw up the sponge early in the fight. Addison then spoiled Burns' drinking record by taking him to jail. He was sentenced to serve ten days in jail for blasphemy and the use of profane language before women and children.—Michigan Trooper.

"You met that skunk, did you?" he rasped, his control gone. Then, getting himself in hand, he went on: "And the people at Wailing River—did you stop there?"

Could the free-trader have read the thoughts of the man who faced him, as he asked for news of the doomed post, he would have started as one starts at the warning of a rattler. For the mention of Wailing River stirred a fierce desire in Steele to mangle with his bare hands the man who thought to obtain Denise St. Onge by bribery. But the bronzed face of the American masked his turbulent thoughts as he intentionally drawled, watching Laflamme's eyes:

"Well, it's a long story. Queer case, Wailing River, very interesting to an ethnologist—like myself. They've had a hard summer."

Steele knew from the quick interest in the other's face that he had won—that however deep was Laflamme's distrust of his motives in taking the Ogoke trail, the desire for news of the girl at Wailing River, for an inkling of the nature of St. Onge's answer to his offer, would result in an invitation to spend the night at the post. And he smiled inwardly as the manner of Laflamme swiftly changed.

"Mademoiselle St. Onge—was she well?"

"Why, as to that, I hardly know what to say," Steele answered. "Lascelles showed up there just as I left."

"What? Lascelles at Wailing River?" exploded Laflamme, patently knocked off his feet at the news. "What—what has happened? He's not going to marry her this fall?"

"No, he's not going to marry her—this fall." So emphatic was Steele's tone—so final the statement that it drew from Laflamme a sidelong glance of curiosity, in the course of his restless pacing of the landing.

"What brought him up river then?"

"Why, this Windigo trouble," lied Steele, anxious to learn if Pierre had brought the news to Ogoke.

The eyebrows of the Frenchman lifted in surprise.

"Windigo trouble? What do you mean, Mr. Steele?"

Steele was confident that Laflamme was dissembling.

"Why, haven't you heard that the Wailing valley is overrun by man-eating Windigoes?" he laughed, closely watching Laflamme's dark face. But though, a moment before, the trader had made no effort to conceal his emotion at the mention of Denise St. Onge, Steele now looked into cryptic eyes.

"Mon Dieu, no! You mean to say that the Indians are frightened?"

"Yes, you might call it that," said Steele, facetiously, "although I think that I would make it a bit stronger. You don't believe in the Windigo, Monsieur Laflamme?"

Laflamme smiled. "You are a joker, Mr. Steele. We will discuss the Indian superstition tonight over some—a—excellent whisky, if you like. You will do me the honor to dine with me—and my—sister, Mademoiselle Rose Laflamme."

"Thank you!" And Steele, accompanied by Antoine, of the scarred face, returned to the canoe, delighted that his interview, which had started so inauspiciously, had closed with an invitation to pass at least one night at the post.

While he shaved and changed his clothes in the shack assigned to him, and whither Laflamme, with marked hospitality, had sent hot water from his kitchen, Steele held a council of war with David, who had made a hasty reconnoissance of the post.

"Did you see Pierre?"

"No, but I smell plenty whisky on de Injun."

"How many hunters are there here still?"

"Seex—seven—tipi here. Queer t'ing, w'en I ask why dey are not on de trap lines, one of dem say dey not hunt dees long snows."

"How many post servants has he got—there are eight cabins?"

"Good manee."

"Did they speak of Wailing River or the Windigo?"

"No."

"Why do you suppose he is feeding all these bush Indians—what is he using them for?"

David's dark features stiffened as his eyes sought a crack in the floor. Steele paused in his shaving to glance quizzically at his friend.

"Oh, well," he laughed. "I suppose you've promised Michel not to tell me what you think or anything you see here. I must wait until November."

The Ojibway rose, rested a hand on the shoulder of his chief. "Eet ees not so, boss; but I promise Michel somet'ing. Sometam you know."

"That's all right, David; I want you to keep your promise, but don't you see that I might get more out of Laflamme tonight, if I knew what you and Michel had in your heads?"

David shook his head. "Laflamme ees smart man. He tell you noding."

"Nothing about what?" demanded Steele.

"Noding 'bout sendin' Pierre to scare de Injun—'bout stealin' de fur trade from St. Onge, wid whisky."

"Well, possibly he won't talk, but I'll give him a good opening."

The living room in the comfortable quarters of Louis Laflamme was a revelation to the man who anticipated finding the rude furnishings typical of northern fur posts. The shelves of books, the furniture—much of it brought from the railroad by canoe—the large graphophone, the pictures, were indicative of tastes which hardly squared with the reputation of the trader.

"You are extremely comfortable here," he said, as Laflamme led him into the room. "You're fond of music?"

"Ah! There's where this life is barren, monsieur," impulsively replied the Frenchman. "Why, I've hitched my dogs and traveled clear to the railroad in the middle of winter to hear some music. It's the thing I miss, and the phonograph is cold; I tire of it. If I played myself, but I don't." Then Laflamme turned a tense face on Steele. "Did she play while you were at the post?"

For an instant the muscles of Steele's body stiffened. To speak, as a stranger, of Denise St. Onge with the man who had plotted ruthlessly to win over her father—to buy her, sickened him. Yet menace though he was to the post at Wailing River, his hatred and jealousy of Lascelles might be put to good use if the opportunity offered, and Steele intended to play upon those passions of his host this very night.

"Mademoiselle St. Onge seemed to be greatly depressed and played little the few days I was there—then Lascelles appeared," he said.

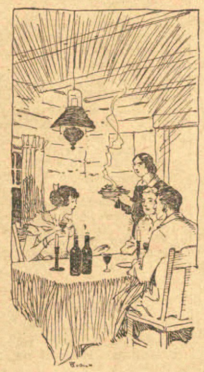
"She despises the dog, and yet he has openly boasted at Albany he would marry her," sneered Laflamme.

"I don't think he ever will," threw out Steele, lighting the cigarette passed him and watching the play of emotion on the handsome face of the other.

"Why?"

"Because she would kill herself first."

"Nonsense! Women don't do it, monsieur," scoffed the trader, but the fleeting look of approval which Steele caught belied the words. Laflamme's nature was elemental. To him, her death was preferable to having her the wife of Lascelles.



"Yes, It Is My Home, but I Seldom See It."

Steele writhed in his chair as the other paced back and forth, but the welfare of the girl at Wailing River demanded that he smother all outward reflection of his thoughts, so he fought himself slowly into a state of callousness at the mention of her name, necessary, if he were to draw out his host.

"Monsieur," Laflamme stopped his pacing and glared down at the man smoking in the chair, "you are right!" Then, as he walked to the end of the room, added: "She will never marry that rat of the Revillon people—she will marry—me."

"You seem hard hit," said Steele. "Although she spent but one evening with her father and myself, I found her charming, and I congratulate you."

"She is the—Shish! Rose!" And both men looked up to see a woman enter the room. Steele got to his feet.

"Rose, this is Monsieur Steele."

The woman who joined them and—to his surprise—said graciously, in English, with an accent, "Monsieur, you are veree welcome," was not at all what Steele had expected to find at Ogoke lake. Instead of belonging to a type more or less common to the frontier railroad towns, the girl posing as the sister of Laflamme was undeniably handsome, with a mass of straight, black hair, and the brilliant olive skin which so often characterizes the quarter or eighth blood. For that she was a breed, he had no doubt.

Extending a round arm, she gave Steele her hand with something more than the pressure demanded by hospitality, as her white teeth flashed in a smile.

"It is kind of you, mademoiselle, to take me in tonight," he said, and the thought shaped itself swiftly, as her thick-lashed eyes made a bold appraisal of the stranger at Ogoke, that this girl, of whom Laflamme had tired, might have knowledge invaluable—might even, by the adroit use of her evident vanity, betray the plans of the lord of Ogoke lake. For that she should be in ignorance of the infatuation of the latter for Denise St. Onge was unlikely.

"Oh, la, la! Eet ees to ourselves we are kind. Ees eet not so, Louis?"

"Yes, monsieur," replied Laflamme with a leer, "judging from the toilet of mademoiselle, one should say it is to Rose that you are kind. You have not worn that thing in months, Rose."

"No? I had reason. I do not waste myself on the blind."

"Ah! But monsieur is not blind, eh?"

"No man ees blind who has been months een the north with no one but the squaws to see, eh, Monsieur Steele?" And she smiled suggestively into Steele's amused eyes. Then her face darkened. "Oh, I forgot, monsieur has come from Wailing River," she said in a low tone, husky with emotion.

Good, thought Steele, she knows, and will talk.

Then he gambled with: "One can never see too many beautiful women, mademoiselle."

"Oh, you think her beautiful, eh?" replied Rose Laflamme, tapping the floor with the toe of her slipper. 'Louis say she ees not."

"Come, monsieur," interrupted the trader, with a scowl at the speaker, as an Ojibway woman stood in the doorway, announcing dinner.

As they seated themselves at the table, Steele was highly optimistic of what his stay at the post might disclose. Whether Laflamme had decided to take him at his word, or still suspected his presence at Ogoke, David had more chance of learning that night than he, but that the outraged pride of Rose Laflamme would lead her to talk, if the opportunity offered, he was now sure. Her reference to Wailing River had cleared any doubt on that score. The canker of jealousy and the flouted woman's instinct for revenge would play havoc with the half-breed in Rose Laflamme.

"You are from New York, Monsieur Steele, that wonderful city I have never seen?" the hostess was saying.

"Yes, it is my home, but I seldom see it."

"Seldom see it? And all the life there to enjoy—the theaters, the beautiful women?"

"But there are beautiful women elsewhere, mademoiselle; Ogoke lake, for instance," Steele hazarded, lifting his glass to the girl as he glanced furtively at Laflamme.

"Mon Dieu, but you are the flatterer! You are a man of thee ladies, monsieur, even eef you desert them to travel een this wilderness."

"It is only that my inspiration is great this evening," he returned.

Laflamme laughed unpleasantly in the girl's face, kindling with pleasure at the remark. In a flash, she turned with what was near a snarl, her dark eyes flaming. "You see, from others there is appreciation!" Then, lighting a cigarette, she rested her round elbows on the table, and leaning toward Steele with a challenging look, startled him with: "Say more pretty words to me, you big American!"

Steele threw a sidelong glance at Laflamme, to find only amused tolerance. He was in doubt whether the girl was making a forlorn attempt to arouse the trader's jealousy or merely set on his own conquest. Since his ready answers to a few well-chosen questions of Laflamme's regarding New York, Steele believed that the latter's suspicions had faded. But it was too early to hazard an attempt to learn anything. He was dealing with a man both ruthless and powerful. So Steele was discreet, but he saw that little more whisky was needed to loose the tongue of the girl beyond control. For that he waited.

Nothing but Justice

In this God's world, with its wild whirling eddies and mad-foam oceans, where men and nations perish as if without law and judgment for an unjust thing sternly delayed, dost thou think therefore that there is no justice? It is what the fool had said in his heart. It is what the wise in all times were wise because they desired and knew forever not to be. I tell thee again there is nothing else but justice; one strong thing I find here below—the just thing, the true thing. * * * If the thing is unjust, thou hast not succeeded, though bonfires blazed from north to south, and bells rang, and editors wrote leading articles, and the just thing lay trampled out of sight to all mortal eyes—an abolished and annihilated thing.—Thomas Carlyle.

Unique September

During all the variations in the calendar, September has always had 30 days.

Vast Store of Nectar That Is Unproductive

Apiculture, or bee-keeping, is one of the few branches of agriculture that does not tend to exhaust the soil. The account with the honey crop therefore does not include the usual item, "cost of fertilizer," says a report in the New York Times.

The nectar produced in the flowers is wasted unless gathered by bees or similar insects. It has been conservatively estimated that not over one-tenth of all the nectar produced in the United States is actually harvested. The amount that goes to waste in a dozen counties near New York city is over 1,500,000 pounds.

The study of the honey bee and bee-keeping methods is becoming more popular, and to satisfy those desirous of knowing more about this subject short courses are being offered in several of the leading schools and colleges, among them Columbia university. Many people living in the suburbs cannot go in for poultry raising, gardening, etc., because of lack of space. For them a few hives of bees should afford an interesting and remunerative enterprise.

We want you to make this test

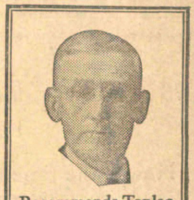
We want every weak, puny, fagged-out man and woman in America to make this test: buy one bottle of Tanlac at your druggist's, take it according to directions for one week and see how quickly you get started back to full strength and vigor.

We know what we are talking about. Tanlac has helped millions. In our files are more than 100,000 letters of praise from grateful users.

Don't confuse Tanlac with ordinary patent nostrums. It is Nature's own tonic and builder, compounded from roots, barks, and herbs that we gather at great expense from the four corners of the earth.

Tanlac goes straight to the seat of your trouble; cleanses and purifies the blood stream; puts your digestion in proper shape. First thing you know you have an appetite like a starved child. You rest at night and your whole body begins to feel the stir of strength and energy.

Don't you be discouraged. Don't put off testing Tanlac another day. Get a bottle now and in a week you should notice signs of real improvement. Then you will feel like your old self again. Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation.



Recommends Tanlac to His Friends

"Seven years I suffered from intestinal and stomach troubles, was "jumpy," irritable and often had dizzy spells. After three bottles of Tanlac my appetite and nerves are fine and health sound. I recommend my friends to try Tanlac, too."

Its A Joke

Off again, on again and then off again. That is just about what happens with the electric light system that Camden now has. It surely is disgusting the way we are served electric juice and its been this way for several months past, and the worst part of it is that the longest delay of lights out happens on the busist part of the week and that is on Saturday nights.

Last Saturday night Feb. 20 the lights went off at about 7:30 and did not come again until ten o'clock The barber shops and garages were out of lights entirely, the postoffice had to distribute the evening mail by the light of a little lamp. The stores had to resort to gas and oil lamps. The theater with a full house had to discontinue their first show and give back tickets and cash. It was a damage to the merchants in sales of over three hundred dollars if not more.

How much longer are we going to put up for this kind of service? Are we going to be "good fellows always" and allow them to continue putting the hooks into us? Its about time to squeal. Some action should be taken and that mighty soon. This village is paying about ten thousand dollars a year for this rotten service. Pretty expensive we think.—Camden Advance.

Spraying Trees In Bloom Injurious To Honeybees

When spraying fruit trees, care should be taken to do the work at time when there is the least danger of poisoning the honeybees which visit the blossoms and which are very necessary for the pollination of the flowers, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Spraying fruit trees while in full bloom with arsenicals is particularly injurious to bees, according to tests which have been completed recently by the Bureau of Entomology.

Of course the beekeeper does not want his bees poisoned, says the department, because as a result his honey crop is reduced. The subject should be ot even more interest, however, to fruit growers because with the loss of the honeybees they lose the most effective means of pollination in their orchards. In this respect the beekeeper, the fruit grower, and in fact everyone is benefited by honeybees.

The effect of arsenical sprays on the mortality of honeybees has long been debated, but only a few systematic investigations have been made to aid in settling the dispute. In the hope of answering definitely some of the questions so long debated, these tests were conducted. While they are limited in their scope, they do enable the department to make some recommendations.

Spraying apple trees during full bloom is not recommended because the codling moth can be as well controlled by spraying when 90 per cent of the petals have fallen and because spraying when the trees are in full bloom is injurious o insect pollinators.

Wath Your Step, Boys

To the gents who are in the habit of tanking up on bad booze and driving their autos while under the hypnotic influence of John Barleycorn, we wish to say it means something now since the State Police are going to finger print every last mother's son of you. Listen to this:

"Fingerprints and photographs of every drunken driver will be taken hereafter by Grand Rapids police and adoption of the plan by other departments in the State is being urged by those interested in strict enforcement of the new law making second offense of tipsy driving a state prison offense.

A recent Supreme Court ruling gives police departments the right to photograph all persons regarded as a menace aud there is no more dangerous citizen than the motorist who attempts to operate a motor car while drunk."

Copies of the identification records made in drunken driving cases will be sent to the State Police headquarters where they will be easily available to the Secretary of State's offices, and where all revocations of driver's licenses are recorded."—Michigan Trooper

Between 4 and 5 o'clock last Friday the three year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Fink of Cement City was instantly killed on the Pike in the east limits of the village of Moscow. The Finks were riding in their car and owing to ice in the road the machine skidded and side swiped a tree by the roadside. Three children and the mother were thrown out with great force and Donald's neck was broken, the mother was quite badly hurt and car wrecked. Linus McCowan ran to them and rendered first aid. Dr. Sterling was called from Jerome and ministered to the victims. Mrs. Fink sustained a broken rib and jaw while Mr. Fink was unhurt. The injured were taken into the home of Linus McCowan. Cause of the trouble is said to have been a dog in the road which Mr. Fink ran into after turning out to pass a truck. The auto turned turtle and smashed the rear wheel badly and wrenched the whole frame.

Russell Smith and wife of Detroit spent Sunday with her brother Will Anderson and wife and Mrs. Sam Anderson.

Mrs. Fred Masker of Hanover is serving on grand jury in Detroit. This is a unique distinction which comes to few women.

The North Adams Brotherhood Quartet furnished vocal selections with Mrs. Herbert Wells at the piano. Jean Young rendered a solo with Lucille Van Wert at the piano. Loinel Crocker of AnnArbor University gave a play let entitled "Mr. Antonio". Patrons of our district as well as the pupils are finding in these affairs genuine helpfulness and a spirit of fraternity. It is hoped the problems of school life can be threshed out more satisfactorily by a mutual get-together of parents and teachers.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Societies of Jonesville, Moscow Plains, Quincy and Litchfield will conduct a joint meeting at the North Adams Methodist church on Friday March 19 1926 beginning at 10;30 a. m. and continuing through out the day at which time the principal speaker will be Mrs. I. G. Hall a returned missionary from Siam. Mrs. Hall was born in Siam while her parents were missionaries there and remained there until 13 years of age, coming to America where she was married to Mr. Hall also a missionary. Later the couple journeyed to the Philippine Islands as missionaries but were obliged to give up the work on account of his failing health. Since their return she has been following the lecture platform and we guarantee you will thoroughly enjoy listening to her talk. A full house is hoped for. Potluck dinner.

Results of Village Election

Although it was expected village election would be a farce with nobody out, the contrary proved to be the case. Altogether 78 ballots were cast and following is a list of candidates: President Giles Stevens 41; Rex Northrup, 34; Clerk C. J. Alpaugh 47: Howard Williams, 29; Treasurer, Frank W. Holcomb, 72: Assessor, James Jones 72; Trustees L. D. Ford 72; Frank E. Caswell 67 Lewis B. Eggleston 74.

Mr. Stevens and Mr. Williams were not nominated by the electorate, but evidently the bunch took a notion to change matters slightly and that's what they did, and it is safe to say everybody is satisfied.

The Village council now stands as follows: President, Giles Stevens clerk, C. J. Alpaugh; trustees, L. D. Ford, Glen Mercer, Harley Fry, Dr. Caswell, L. B. Eggleston and Darwin Carney, and it goes without saying these gentlemen have something to settle since the electric service is far from satisfactory, and a general overhauling of the system will be necessary before another year rolls around.

Death of Brewster Kies

Brewster E. Kies of Bankers formerly a resident of this vicinity died at his home Wednesday evening March 10th from heart failure. Mr. Kies was a prominent Democrat and Granger for many years in this county and was candidate for Representative to Washington as opposed to J. M. C. Smith of Charlotte. He was about 72 years of age and leaves to mourn the wife, one son Glenn Kies of Lansing and a host of acquaintances and friends in this vicinity where his early life was passed. Funeral services will be held Saturday March 13 at the home at 1:30 p. m.

Death of Charles Reimold

Charles Reimold, a resident of Adams township for 53 years, passed away at his home one and a quarter miles north of this village on Tuesday, March 9th. His demise was sudden and unexpected. For the past few days he had been slightly indisposed but he went to the cellar to attend to the furnace where he was discovered dead at about 3:00 p. m.

Surviving are one brother, Christian Reimold of South Bend, Indiana, an only daughter, Mrs Mae Bauman of the same neighborhood, the wife having passed to the beyond last fall. In his death the community loses a valuable citizen, and an esteemed friend of all who knew him. His impulses and desires were always for the betterment of his neighbors and fellow men and the welfare of the neighborhood in which he had resided since about 1873.

He was born in 1845 in Washtenaw county near Saline, and was slightly more than 81 years old at the time of his death.

Funeral services are held to-day (Friday) at 2:00 p. m. at the home of his daughter, Mrs, Ernest Bauman Rev. Virgil Hunt pastor of the North Adams Congregational church officiating and interment will be in the local cemetery beside her who has gone before.

Old Fences Made New
At Slight Expense

IT DOESN'T take much time nowadays to keep fence lines stock-tight and in good repair. Not if you use these quick driven Red Top Steel Posts.

You can drive 20 or 30 Red Tops in an hour. And the fencing is attached in a jiffy so that it will never pull away. This means that you can get a lot of fence repaired even in odd moments.

It's pretty risky business letting fence lines go hang while waiting for a time when work is slack to put them in shape. The damage to stock or crops that can come from just one weak spot may be larger than the entire expense of keeping the fences in good shape. An ounce of prevention is certainly worth while here.

Keep a small stock of Red Tops on hand and get one of these One-Man Drivers. Then when you see a wood post going bad simply drive a Red Top alongside, take out the wood post and fasten the fencing to the steel post. These Red Tops will stop any farm critter you've got on your place.

We personally guarantee Red Tops and we are authorized to make adjustments promptly. Red Tops are not an experiment. They are a proved success and have been giving a good account of themselves in thousands of farm fence lines.

We picked the Red Top line because we believe it is the best value. That's the way we try to buy all lines of goods. We expect our business to grow on the basis of giving you a full dollar's worth for every dollar you spend. Come in and see us when you're in town. Get our prices on posts and the other materials you're needing. Prices are mighty reasonable now on posts and other special items.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Rejection of Nickel Plate Merger Is Factor in Collapse of Stock Market.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MERGER of the Nickel Plate, Chesapeake & Ohio, Hocking Valley, Pere Marquette and Erie railroads, as proposed by the Van Sweringen brothers of Cleveland, was disapproved last week by the interstate commerce commission, and those so-called wizards of the railway world will have to devise a new plan if they wish to try again to bring about the giant combination. Their work on the rejected scheme is said to have cost them between two and three million dollars. If it had gone through, according to those who opposed it, the brothers would have pocketed a profit of about $100,000,000.

The commission based its disallowance of the merger on a disapproval of the financial structure of the proposed new Nickel Plate company, holding that the terms and conditions of the proposed acquisition of control by the new company of the other companies were unjust and unreasonable. The commission held that the merger would be in the public interest from the standpoint of providing efficient transportation, leaving the inference that it would have been approved had the financial provisions been above criticism.

"We cannot escape the conclusion that the plan was arranged with the intention of keeping control in the hands of its proponents, even though their interest is a minority one in fact," the commission said. "Such an arrangement is not in accord with sound railroad practice. The Nickel Plate is the only railroad of importance in the country in which preferred stockholders do not have the right to vote, and now it is proposed to extend this feature to over $155,000,000 of new stock of a company comparable with the New York Central, Pennsylvania and Baltimore & Ohio."

IN FINANCIAL circles the immediate result of the Nickel Plate ruling was the biggest day's trading in the history of Wall street, with a perpendicular decline in prices that involved practically all stocks and in one extreme case reached 50 points. The stock market had been in a state of comparative collapse for several days, anyhow, and this was a staggering blow to the bulls. Trading eclipsed every former record, which had stood for years. The total for the day was 3,864,600 shares. The size of the market may be judged in comparison with the Northern Pacific panic market on May 9, 1901. On that day 3,072,305 shares were traded in.

Stocks had been technically weakened in seven previous days of drastic decline; the confidence of shareholders in the speculative shares had been shaken by loss of from five to fifty points or more in their holdings. Many margin traders had reached the end of their tether.

The excesses of the wild upward speculation in many shares which had continued over a long series of months since the election of President Coolidge were being corrected and brought down to a wholesome level by the market itself. Stocks were engaged in seeking their true market value, based on earnings rather than on merger prospects, or stock dividends, which this year and last have fanned the speculative flames.

The collapse of the stock market, which was accompanied by severe reactions in the grain and other speculative commodity markets, was described by experts as mainly a speculative orgy of powerful groups and professional operators. The general public was not caught to any great extent.

BY CLOSE votes the house military affairs committee junked all the pending army air service legislation, this including the bills for a separate air corps, for a unified air service, for the creation of a department of national defense and for the adoption of the recommendations of the Morrow board. The committee then proceeded to write its own bill, using as a basis the $150,000,000 five-year program submitted by Secretary of War Davis.

The new War department proposals contemplate appropriations of $30,000,000 a year more than now is available for the air service during the five-year period. Of this $7,500,000 would be spent each year in the purchase or construction of new planes. At the end of the five years, according to the Davis program, the air service would have 2,200 modern planes, 1,650 regular army officers, 500 reserve officers on active duty, 15,000 enlisted men, and 500 flying cadets.

According to Representative Morin of Pennsylvania, the measure when finally reported by the committee will embrace most of the major recommendations of the Morrow board. Secretary Davis said his program had been concurred in by the chief of staff and the chief of the air service.

FARM organization leaders of the middle western states, together with a number of governors from that region, gathered in Washington last week for a conference and let the congressmen know plainly that they wanted speedy action on legislation for the controlling of farm export surpluses so as to increase domestic market prices. In their statements were hints of a political revolt in the West unless their demands were heeded. A committee from the conference called on President Coolidge and on Secretary of Agriculture Jardine, and its spokesmen afterward said that the prospects for an agreement between farmers, legislators and the administration on the mechanics of necessary legislation were exceedingly bright. President Coolidge expressed his sympathy with the aim to stabilize agricultural conditions and let it be known he would favor any legislation unanimously agreed on by the Department of Agriculture, the farm organizations and the various agricultural committees in congress.

THE Watson-Parker bill, abolishing the railroad labor board and providing for the settlement of rail labor disputes by direct conference between railroads and their employers and on mediation and voluntary arbitration, was passed by the house by a vote of 381 to 13. The measure has been favorably reported to the senate and its early enactment into law is expected. The board has before it cases involving approximately $30,000,000 in wage increase demands and doesn't know what to do with them, as the Watson-Parker bill makes no provision for disposition of the pending disputes.

Executives representing about eighty western railroads met in Chicago and selected a committee of twelve to conduct the wage conferences with conductors and trainmen. These workers ask a raise of 7 per cent and the managers have gone on record as opposed to this boost.

SECRETARY OF STATE KELLOGG sent a new note to the Mexican government in reply to its latest communication concerning the new land and oil laws, and while not revealing its contents, he told the senate committee on foreign relations that he hoped it would end the controversy. Presumably the administration has toned down its demands a little. Some of the senators, however, were not satisfied and Mr. King of Utah was preparing a speech on the subject.

The Mexican government has notified all foreign Protestant ministers in that country that they are in the same category with the Catholic priests and must get out. The first of the expelled Catholic clergy to reach the United States arrived in New York on a steamer. In the party were ten priests, one nun and four Marist brothers. They were penniless, stating they were not given time to take even their breviaries. The states of Vera Cruz and Tamaulipas have issued laws limiting the number of priests. Vera Cruz allows one priest in communities of 10,000, two in communities of 30,000, four in communities of 60,000, and a limit of six in larger communities. Tamaulipas provides only one priest for each community, with the exception of five.

AT THIS writing the prospect is that the session of the League of Nations council in Geneva will be exceedingly lively and that the net result will be that Germany alone will be given a permanent seat in the council. The probable compromise plan is for the holding of a second session at which it will be proposed that Poland be given a non-permanent seat. In this way Germany, through Doctor Stresemann, would be enabled to participate officially in the council's action. It is likely that a special committee will be named to study the question of a reorganization of the council.

According to a London correspondent, Premier Mussolini, with the aid of Spain and the Vatican, has formed a Latin-South American bloc in the league by which he hopes to control it. The first demands of this bloc will be for permanent seats in the council for Spain and Brazil and another temporary seat for another member of the group. The story says that the bloc is prepared, if it does not get its way, to leave the league and form a new association of the Latin states of Europe and America.

With only 71 votes in opposition, the French chamber of deputies ratified the Locarno treaties, giving Premier Briand a splendid indorsement. The approval of the senate is assured. The Polish diet also ratified the pacts.

Our State department last week officially notified the secretariat of the League of Nations and 48 governments that the senate had voted for adherence to the World court. Copies of the reservations were enclosed in the letters. Department officials said they expected these reservations would be accepted, although jurists of several European countries had favored their rejection.

FIERCE fighting for the control of Peking marks the progress of China's civil war between the national armies, directed by Marshal Feng Yu-hsiang, and that general's opponents, who include Marshal Chang Tso-lin of Manchuria and Marshal Wu Pei-fu, who heads a Hupeh army. The names and localities do not mean much to the average American reader, but the result of the conflict probably will be that the government will fall into new hands.

IN MOROCCO the French and Spanish armies are preparing for a great offensive by which they hope finally to crush the Riffians. But Abd-el-Krim is alert and already has started the fighting himself, attacking the French and certain tribes that are unfriendly to him. Both sides are trying for strategic positions from which to negotiate peace.

POLITICS in Chicago has reached a stage where it not only amuses the rest of the country but in a way becomes of national interest. Strange combinations of Republican factions are fighting bitterly and one result has been a request that congress investigate crime conditions in the Illinois metropolis. Naturally, the Democrats are happy and hopeful. George E. Brennan, the astute Democratic national committeeman from Illinois, has announced his candidacy for the senate seat held by Mr. McKinley of Champaign, and for which Frank Smith is a Republican contender against the incumbent in the primaries. Mr. Brennan says his platform has only two planks—modification of the Volstead act to permit light wines and beer, and home rule for Chicago. The coming election, he says, will be a referendum in Illinois on Volsteadism.

REPRESENTATIVE HILL of Maryland was re-elected chairman of the unofficial committee of congress on modification of the Volstead act and was instructed to appoint a committee of five, called a "temperance board," to outline a program for the drys. This board will begin hearings on March 31, preliminary to drafting a bill for revision of the prohibition law. All congressmen and private citizens will be given opportunity to express their views on prohibition and its success or failure.

THEODORE and Kermit Roosevelt have returned from their adventurous trip to central and southern Asia, bringing back many fine specimens of the animals which they went to get. Theodore refused to talk politics when he landed in New York, but there were indications that he would again be a candidate for some office, perhaps the governorship of the Empire state.

Tibetans Kill Party Importing Machinery

London.—High up in the Himalayan region on the border of Tibet a band, believed to have been made up of Tibetans who were transporting modern machinery to Lhasa, the "Holy City" in the "Land of the Lamas" is reported to have been massacred.

At an altitude of 12,000 feet in a mountain pass the party is said to have been overwhelmed by representatives of the new Tibetan government and murdered. Some 300 tons of electrical equipment, which was to have been used in lighting the "Forbidden City" was destroyed and thrown over a precipice. All the members of the party are said to have been cruelly murdered.

The report, printed by the Daily Mail, says the machinery, which was manufactured in England, would have been the first of its kind admitted into Lhasa, the capital of the Dalai Lama, the supreme head of the Lamaist hierarchy. He is surrounded by his famous "fighting monks," who are fanatically resentful of western innovation as threatening their power. Lhasa is virtually a closed city to Christians.

The Daily Mail also says the massacre may cause an abandonment of the fresh attempt in the summer to climb Mount Everest in the Himalayas some 300 miles southwest of Lhasa. Brig. Gen. Charles C. Bruce, who led the unsuccessful 1922 expedition, was to have been in charge of the 1926 attempt.

Helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cleveland, Ohio.—The friends of Mrs. Helen M. Kowalczyk of 6819 Hope Avenue were glad to hear that she has regained her health. For quite some time Mrs. Kowalczyk was quite ill and it was impossible for her to work. She took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to build her up. After she had started taking it, she wrote to the Pinkham Company as follows: "I certainly boost Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I feel stronger already and sleep sounder. I am very glad to spread the good news of how it has helped me."

Detroit, Michigan.—"I heard of this medicine through an advertisement in the 'Detroit News' and wrote to Mrs. Grace Gillem, whose letter was published. Then I started taking the Vegetable Compound and got the best results. I used the Sanative Wash, too. I am really happy if I can advise women to take your medicines."—MRS. M. E. STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Grand Rapids—The council of the city of Milwaukee has asked the Grand Rapids city commission to adopt a resolution expressing itself in favor of an amendment to the National Prohibition Act legalizing the sale of beer and wine. The matter has been referred to the committee on legislation.

St. Joseph—Deputy Sheriff Milton G. Hinchman, who recently was convicted of manslaughter for the shooting of Royal Bostater, Allegan County farmer, whom he suspected of being a thief, has filed a motion for a new trial in the Berrien County Circuit Court. Hinchman charges one of the jurors was not a taxpayer.

Grand Rapids—Only one death caused by traffic accident in the past three months as against 12 in the same period a year ago, has placed Grand Rapids in the lead in the United States in comparative absence of automobile tragedies, John R. Brownell, manager of the Grand Rapids Safety Council states. The one death was in January.

Lansing—The Department of Conservation warns all fishermen in the Lake St. Clair district that spearing fish through the ice became illegal March 1. This covers all of the connecting waters between Lake Huron and Erie. It still is permissible to use five ice lines in taking fish but this method of fishing must stop April 1.

Owosso—Osmer Arnold, 59 years old, Middlebury Township farmer, pleaded guilty to a charge to cruelty to animals and was given 30 days in the county jail. Steps also were taken to have his five children taken from him. They range from three months to eight years in age. Arnold drove one horse to death, and starved two others, officers say.

Gobles—Barking of a German shepherd dog led John Gilbert, a passerby, to discover the body of Peter Bramble, 70 years old, who died of apoplexy, while sitting before the fire in his home near this village. Gilbert's timely arrival is believed to have saved the life of Mrs. Bramble, a helpless paralytic, who has been bedfast for years and was dependent on her husband for food.

Pontiac—Archibald McGlip, Pontiac chiropractor, is defendant in a $10,000 damage suit in which Mrs. Clare Whittaker, of Auburn Heights, charges malpractice. Mrs. Whittaker says McGlip burned one of her legs with a diathermic electrical treatment machine Oct. 16, 1925, causing an injury which has made her lame. She testified the burn is on the under side of her right leg at the knee and caused a contraction of the muscles.

Owosso—The State Health Department soon will announce a prophylaxis for scarlet fever, Dr. C. C. Young, of the department, told members of the Shiawassee County Medical Society. He said that as soon as the antitoxin is perfected, it will be distributed free to the physicians. Dr. Young declared that the research work in perfecting prophylaxis had been slow because tests had to be made on human beings, as animals, ordinarily used for such tests, did not respond.

Ann Arbor—Dr. Arthur Robertson Cushny, former professor of materia medica and therapeutics at the University of Michigan, died recently at his home in Edinburgh, Scotland, according to word received here by members of the university faculty. Dr. Cushny was instructor in Michigan from 1983 to 1905, going from there to the University of London, England, and then to a faculty position at the University of Edinburgh. He was the author of many books on medicine.

Grand Rapids—A telegram has been received by Charles Holden, collector of internal revenue, instructing him to defer action regarding collection of income tax from domestics. The telegram, according to Mr. Holden, said a letter would follow giving more explicit instructions as to subsequent steps by the collector's office. The telegram was the result of a protest against action of Deputy Collector W. J. Mickel requiring domestics to file returns, counting their board and room as equivalent to $10 a week.

Lansing—Mrs. Lucile Burgess, 83 years old, died in a hospital of burns received when a newspaper that lay on her lap became ignited from a stove near which she was sleeping in her chair. Neighbors who saw the flames rushed into the house and smothered the blaze with rugs taken from the floor, but Mrs. Burgess died within a few hours. The woman was alone in the house at the time, as her son and daughter with whom she lived were at work. She had been an invalid nearly 50 years.

Flint—A quarrel which had its inception in an upbraiding he received for failure to deliver a load of coal as promised and its culmination in the fatal shooting of Mrs. Nina Evans, resulted in the conviction on a charge of manslaughter of William Ely. Ely said that when he called at Mrs. Evans' home she "went into a tantrum" over his failure to deliver coal and that when he laid a gun which he carried on a table, she made a movement toward it and he seized the weapon which he said was discharged accidentally in the struggle.

Lansing—The State Administrative Board has released $300,000 of the University of Michigan's appropriation for the purchase of land. It also released $100,000 for building contracts at the Michigan State College, $15,000 for an addition to the School for the Deaf and $25,000 for a store house at the Girls' Training school. A report submitted by Henry Croll, budget director, said that all sinking funds are up to date, with the full amounts set aside by appropriations or otherwise available for interest and fund investment.

In Shabbytown

IN Shabbytown they do not care if things look seedy everywhere. They have no pep, they've lost their grip, they simply sit around and yip, in envy's tones, of Glossyville, the shining village on the hill. Oh, Shabbytown is punk and gray, and it shows symptoms of decay, and strangers passing through remark, "It surely dates back to the Ark." "Clean Up and Paint Up" makes men frown along the streets, of Shabbytown. A can of paint makes no appeal to this bum village, down at heel; the people think there is no sense in going to so much expense; so things are always going down, and getting worse in Shabbytown. It always gives my soul a thrill when I arrive in Glossyville. The town looks like a blooming bride; the people take a hearty pride in making things look clean and bright, and in their labors take delight. They're lavish with the helpful paint, selecting colors chaste or quaint, and decorating every shack; thus warding off decay's attack, and making all the buildings look like buildings read of in a book. And strangers, when they see the town, say, "Here we'll come and settle down, and raise us nineteen kids apiece, and live and die as slick as grease." This happy burg goes right ahead, while Shabbytown is prone and dead.

Letter From J. P. Speer

Mr. Speer who went to Florida late last fall writes us a letter concerning the conditions in Florida and we are giving it to our readers this week as promised hoping the facts therein will interest a few who might be concerned in visiting the "land of sunshine":

Hollywood, Florida, Feb. 28, 1926
Editor of the Advocate, North Adams Michigan.

"Not long ago the Governor of Florida was called upon to take hurried and drastic measures to extinguish a fire in the Everglades. The Everglades have been heralded by real estate men as the richest agricultural land in the world. It has been drained at great expense and people have developed tropical farms and built homes there but one or two facts about the Everglades soil have never been made public. It burns. After being drained properly for agricultural purposes the hot sun dries out the decayed vegetation which is filled with many fine roots and the soil becomes an inflammable loam like some of our peat bogs in the north so a fire started there somehow in the rich ground and burned a score of farmers buildings and all. When the people went to discover the extent of the damage they found that six to twelve feet of the richest farm land in the world had been converted into ashes with a sand and coral rock sub-soil.

I never thought a farm with an inflammable loam and sand sub soil would be a good investment. So much for the rich muck land. The remainder of the state is just sand, sunshine and real estate men. Of course the bloated millionaire is in evidence now and then, fanning himself on the veranda of the four million dollar hotels but I never figured him as an asset to the community, unless he does something else than smoke 50 cent cigars. eat five dollar meals, sleep in twenty-dollar per day rooms and roll in the beach sand in a bathing suit. There has been millions spent in the development of Florida East Coast from West Palm Beach to Coral Gables which later is six miles south of Miami. Most of the development has been in Fort Laudderdale Hollywood and Coral Gables. Streets, sidewalks, water works, electric lighting and cooking plants have been built. A great many private homes have also been erected. All of these things have brought a great many people of all classes and trades to Florida. The greatest development business has been dispensing sunshine and sand to the buyers of what they call real estate. I think I will quote you a verse that was inspired while standing on the highest point of Florida (about four feet above sea level):

> "Oh, Florida sand, Oh, Florida sand,
> And on thy highest sand I stand
> And look away across the sand
> I wonder why you call it land
> For sand it is from shore to shore
> And sand 'Twill be for evermore."

There have been fortunes made and fortunes spent in this land during the past three or four years but this seems to be about at an end, and from what I can learn, hear and see one who buys anything, residence or business lots, at this time can figure in keeping the property the remainder of their natural lives, or letting it go to the state on tax title. There has been very little real estate transferred during the past two months, and in the last month the big companies have laid off hundreds of workmen, who have left this part and probably the state entirely. There is a great lull in activities. Real estate men try to be optimistic and put out a big sign on their office "Business is Good" when their wife is working in a restaurant or laundry down the street a few blocks to supply food for such optimism. Some say it is only a temporary slow down which occurs every year A boom like this has to be sanctioned by the public and the people must be satisfied to make the boom permanent.

There are too many dissatisfied people in Florida today to make this boom a lasting go, according to many with whom I have talked. The influx of buyers who were expected just after the holidays never arrived. Many working people who bought cheap lots and established a shack home back in the palmetos have found themselves out of work and have been compelled to leave to find employment elsewhere While the boom was on prices on sunshine and sand went sky high; residence lots sold as high as $12,000 to $20,000 but now they are offering lots in the same blocks and just as good for $6,000 to $10,000 and I think they will shade these prices by half in a few months As a permanent place to live I don't think it will take well as I have heard many northern people say who were here last summer that they would never spend another summer in Florida. Of course they were people from the north who migrated out of the latitude in which they were born. Florida at the present time would not appeal to me as a good place to make an investment, either permanent or speculative. The way I look at it. it's up to the people. If they come back and spend their time and money to continue development of course Florida will grow, but I don't think there will ever be another boom in this generation Too many people got wise in this one and it will take a long time to breed another set of fools.

The trip down here was accomplished with only minor mishaps, such as tire trouble, and a ground on the switch wire which we finally located and repaired. Other than that we had no trouble, in fact we did not have enough trouble at any time to be noticed by any one but a pessimist. I hope you receive this letter in time to do you good in your advice to the public. as it gives not only my opinion but the opinion of many with whom I have talked.

Yours very truly,
J. P. Speer P. O. Box 638,
Hollywood, Florida."

SUCCESS IN AMERICA AN OPEN HIGHWAY

How Four Boys of Humble Origin Have Become Chiefs of the Greatest Financial Organization in the World.

Broad highways of achievement are wide open to all in America no matter how humble their beginning, it is brought out by a writer in Forbes Magazine, telling of the successive elevation of poor boys to the chieftainship of the most powerful association of financial power in the world.

"Nowhere is opportunity so democratic as in caste-free America, nowhere is recognition for faithful service so little conditioned by inherited position and wealth," the article says. "The bounty of America in bestowing her rewards of great success upon those of modest origin is again notably manifest in the rise of Oscar Wells to the presidency of the American Bankers Association.

"The son of a tanner, John H. Puelicher, was elected to this eminence in 1922. Circumstances ended his public schooling in the seventh year and he went to work in a carpet store in Milwaukee. At sixteen he entered a bank as a clerk, rising step by step until he became president. Recognition of his abilities as a banker and civic service through public education in sound economic understanding brought him the highest reward from his profession.

"A former country school teacher, Walter W. Head, born in a farm hamlet in Western Illinois, was elected president of the association in 1923. He gave up teaching and a salary of $75 to enter banking at $40 a month in a small Missouri town. He subsequently became president of a bank in Omaha, the largest in Nebraska and a dozen neighboring states. The position he occupied in advancing agricultural welfare during the period of depression led to his being called the 'Granger President of the American Bankers Association.'

"From Irish immigrant lad to supreme head of banking in America epitomizes the career of William E. Knox, president of one of the largest savings banks of the country in New York. His business career began as an office boy in a publishing house, and he later entered the bank as a clerk. Experience with humble people in their problems of personal finance and his inculcation of economy in all matters attracted country-wide attention.

"Oscar Wells, who rises in 1925 as successor of these men, was born in an old weather-boarded log cabin house in the Missouri River bottoms of Platte County, Missouri. He became an orphan when three years of age, losing his parents in an epidemic that ravaged the countryside. He passed under the care of an uncle, head of a small country bank in Platte City, a town of a few hundred inhabitants, growing up on a farm and receiving his early education in a rural school. He later entered Bethany College, West Virginia, but at the end of his junior year he had to quit college and go to work in the bank."

His subsequent career was one of steady progress, first to higher positions among small country banks, then to larger city banks in Texas, where he rose to the top. In 1914 he was chosen first governor of the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank and served through the opening period of the establishment of that institution. He resigned to become president of a bank in Birmingham, Alabama, which has grown under his administration to be one of the largest and most successful institutions in the South.

HUGE GROWTH IN SCHOOL SAVINGS

New York.—School savings in the United States for the year 1924-1925 increased in aggregate bank balances by $5,500,000, with a growth of 630,000 in the total number of pupils participating, it is shown in reports made to the American Bankers Association, which declares that the returns encourage belief in the permanence of school savings as a part of the educational program in the public schools.

During the year the number of reporting school savings systems increased from 683 in 742 districts to 760 in 1,557 districts, the number of schools from 9,080 to 10,163, the number of pupils participating from 2,236,326 to 2,869,497, the deposits from $14,991,535.40 to $16,961,560.72 and the bank balances from $20,435,144.64 to $25,913,431.15, says W. E. Albig, in charge of the Association's savings activities.

Since 1920, the first year for which comprehensive statistics are available, the number of schools having school savings banking has increased 271.4 per cent, the enrollment in school savings districts 278.9 per cent, participants 520.2 per cent, deposits 506.1 per cent and bank balances 516.3 per cent.

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

A third proposal is to let the law become a dead letter. But the writer asks, "How can we possibly make a dead letter of a law when 60,000,000 people are determined that it shall be enforced?"

One way out remains—"the straight, honest, open way, obey the law and enforce it." And with a reassuring hope for the friends of prohibition Mr. Taft adds, "The most important thing to keep in mind is that public sentiment is not a fixed quantity. It has changed on many subjects and on nothing more than on the liquor question. There has been a revolutionary change of opinion on this question in the last hundred years. Its continuation for a third of that time will bring a dry world. We must remember that the remarkable growth of the temperance sentiment during the past century took place without help from the law enforcement sentiment. Now hundreds of voters who were opposed to prohibition or were lukewarm on it are in favor of strict enforcement of the law."

So these three reports are commendable tests of the Eighteenth Amendment at the end of a five year period. In them is to be found a special message to the churches which is ably stated in the Federal Council report:

"This situation presents an unprecedented challenge to the schools and the churches. Thus far the delinquency of the churches is perhaps even greater than that of the federal government. In former years temperance education was stressed as a part of the religious educational program. It was often of a decidedly inferior type, to be sure, but the importance of temperate living and self control was kept continually before our youth. With the passing of the prohibition laws the task of moral education with reference to temperate living has been all but ignored. As a part of the study here reported a careful analysis was made of the materials of religious education now in use with respect to the training of children and youth in temperance and in the responsibilities of citizenship entailed by the prohibition laws. The results, which have been published elsewhere, were chiefly negative. Even the rude awakening that the outbreak of lawlessness has brought seems to have registered more in mere protest, on the one hand, and in discouragement and dissatisfaction with prohibition, on the other, than in the perfectly obvious alternative of setting about the performance of an educational task for which no amount of social legislation can ever be a satisfactory substitute.

"A new opportunity is at hand, The crisis that has developed in the enforcement of prohibition calls for a frank facing of the facts and a new assumption of responsibility. The federal government has announced a right-about-face enforcement policy. That is the government's task. It is not its task to change the minds of people. Religion and education must do that."

The degree to which the churches accept this challenge will help to determine the verdict at the end of another five years. It makes little difference now what has been done or left undone in the past. But it makes considerable difference whether or not the people of America realize the moral and political principles which are involved in this issue.

NOTE: Since the above article was written the report of the Federal Council of Churches has received still greater discussion by the press, on the platform, and by individuals. This situation has called forth several pertinent statements from the leaders of the Federal Council.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, president of the Council, made the following statement: "The Federal Council is thoroughly committed to prohibition, but it has felt the need of an unbiased study of the situation, in order that the churches and all decent people might know just how serious a problem they have to deal with in an effort to make prohibition effective, They cannot get those facts from either side, when they are deeply engaged in mere warfare one with the other.

"Some newspapers have given the impression that the report has shown prohibition to be a failure. As a matter of fact, it shows very definite gains from prohibition, but it also discloses the fact that we have a long way to go in destroying the liquor traffic, It also shows that the abolition of the saloon has been an untold blessing to America, and that prohibition has had a wholesome effect upon living conditions and home life. But it also reveals the fact that for several years there has been a trend away from the earlier benefits of prohibition because of the enormous power of the bootleg industry.

"Two lessons are to be drawn from this report: First, that it will take all the force of self respecting citizenship in America to complete the task of battling the liquor traffic. Second, that no amount of legislation can take the place of religious and moral education. This is the primary lesson which the church must learn. She has not learned it, for she has been neglecting it and has been depending altogether too much on the power of the state. Without education in self control and temperate living prohibition laws can never make a sober nation."

Dr. John A Marquis, chairman of the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council, expresses a similar view. He says, "The report on the prohibition situation is precisely what it was announced to be, namely, a research document dealing with the facts of the present situation. It in no way involves the attitude or policy of the Federal Council with reference to prohibition. The Federal Council as is well known, always has been and is now, wholly committed to national prohibition.

"The purpose of the Department of Research of the Council is not propaganda but a scientific study of the actual facts in social situations involving the public welfare. It is composed of men and women who know the technique of research and are thoroughly scientific and impartial in their methods.

"The department sought simply to gather the facts and state them frankly and fairly to the public. It believes that any effort in order to be effective must be intelligent. It is the hope and belief of the department that its presentation of the facts will awaken the friends of prohibition to the necessity and urgency of a much more active support of the Government in its efforts to enforce the law than has obtained heretofore."

A further explanation of the report comes from Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert, general secretary of the Federal Council. "With the coming of national prohibition there has been a tendency to rely on legislation alone and to relax educational efforts as to the evils of alcohol and the moral meaning of temperance. A survey of the methods of religious education now in use in the churches shows that training and habits of temperate living have made little or no progress in recent years. Such a situation, if long continued, would be fatal. It is believed that one of the results of the reporr will be a move ment to reinstate a program of thorough temperance education in the Sunday schools, adult classes and other organizations of the church."—The Congregational Adult Magazine.

Representative McClain Made A Misque

Representative Doc McClain of Quincy got right up out of his seat in the House at Lansing the other day and told the boys just how he felt about Groesbeck's big stick policies, but the brain storm soon petered out and Doc fell back exhausted.

It seems the Governor has been pricking up our marble browed representatives a little, so that they might perform some tasks that need doing instead of frittering around chewing gum, smoking and swapping yarns during the extra session which was recently convened.

Well, Mr. McClain is handy with his tongue as he once spoke in North Adams and we know he can put the spots on "right smart" but the brother representatives in the House seemed to think otherwise, at least they did not consider Doc's remarks fit to print in the Journal. in other words they expunged his remarks from the record of the session.

That's too bad—that a single golden remark of our law makers should be lost to posterity. One thousand years hence when the great archives of Michigan's Congress are dug up and surveyed by the millions, as pearls of the purest English, this acrimonious speech will not appear.

"Yea—Verily though a man possess the whole world and hath not charity in his soul, he is as a sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal."

Both Rich And Miss King Scandalous

Doubtless many of our readers are closely following the Rich-King trial at Mason, Mich., wherein the young Co-ed nurse from Battle Creek training hospital is claiming she was assaulted and maltreated by her escort near a deserted golf link during an auto ride in the suburbs. Enough evidence has already been taken to warrant a complete throw out of the case and it would be a blessing to the public if the Judge would quash proceedings at once, thus cutting off the flow of indecencies running through the state papers. Testimony given by Miss King on the stand leaves the impression that she is a slightly shop-worn frouzy whem no one cares to respect. No doubt lies have made up the principal stock-in-trade of most of the witnesses but that young lady herself has admitted damaging facts unless the reporters lie like horse thieves.

Wine, women and song seem to have been the most of Rich's troubles and wine, whisky, cigarettes and foolishness the major trait of Miss King.

This is a pretty good example of the consistency of "petting parties" and what they produce, but is by no means an exceptional case. Such things are as common as grasshoppers in August, and a long-shot more dangerous. Any poor foolish girl whe imagines she can be protected by the courts after such immorality as this Co-ed nurse indulged in, is mistaken. She had to confess to drinking as a soak, swearing as a trooper and smoking like a roustabout, and we dare say a lot more which is not fit to print.

The whole case has an aroma that would drive a dog off a scavenger wagon, and yet the state dailies play up the salacious stuff across the front page with great "scare heads" and photographs too poking the nastiness under the noses of the young and impressionable throughout the length of the land! Come out of it, boys! If this is what you suppose the reading public craves, either you or the public are degenerating.

Don't Risk Neglect!

To Ignore the Early Warnings of Kidney Trouble Is Serious and Often Fatal

ONE'S health depends upon one's kidneys. The kidneys must filter every drop of blood. If they fail to properly do this work, there's a poisoning of the whole system. Then comes backache, dizzy spells, bladder irregularities and loss of vitality. Why wait? Why not use Doan's Pills? Doan's have helped thousands. Ask your neighbor!

A Michigan Case

James Deacey, prop. meat market, North Main St., Evart, Mich., says: "Heavy work put my kidneys in poor condition and brought on backache. Mornings, especially, there was a severe pain in my back. My kidneys acted too often and I was sure they were responsible for my discomfort. I lost no time in getting Doan's Pills and one box rid me of the trouble."

Thousands of people who are sufferers from constipation do not become aware of it until they seek out the cause of their frequent headaches.

"Those bilious headaches can be prevented"

"I know how agonizing they are. For years I was a chronic sufferer.

"And the headaches were not the worst part of it. The strong drugs I used to take to relieve the pain upset my stomach and slowly but surely undermined my general health.

"Finally I found out that my headaches were due to constipation. My doctor advised Nujol. After taking it regularly a few weeks the trouble disappeared.

"Since then I have never had another headache. There is no reason why I should, for the cause has been corrected."

Nujol Corrects Constipation in Nature's Way

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. Nujol simply softens the waste matter and thus permits regular and thorough elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is gentle, safe and natural in its action.

You can take Nujol for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today and begin to enjoy the perfect health that is possible only when elimination is normal and regular.

Measuring Time

In a wholesale test made at Johns Hopkins university men and women were requested to sit at ease for a definite time—two minutes was the actual period. They were then asked to estimate how long they had been seated. The males all measured the time as being within half a minute and three minutes. The calculations of the women ranged all the way from ten seconds to twelve minutes.—Los Angeles Times.

"But, mademoiselle, you must be surfeited with pretty words from Monsieur," he said maliciously, sure of the effect.

"Pretty words from heem?" She laughed bitterly, "that ees a joke! No pretty words from heem since the lady, who will marry Lascelles at Albany, drive heem crazee, eh, Louis?"

Laflamme scowled into her mocking eyes, but was silent. He rose and led his guest to the living room. Then the sound of voices outside attracted his attention, and shortly, the Ojibway girl appeared and spoke to him in a whisper.

"You will excuse me for a little while? I am called to the trade-house?" At the door he added with a brutal laugh, "Help yourself to the cigarettes and whisky. And—a—Rose will keep you entertained, no doubt."

Steele wondered if David had run into trouble. If the trader were free with liquor with his men, which seemed improbable, David might have been set on, but the Ojibway was too wise to imperil his chief or their plans.

Following the slam of the outer door the girl rose, placed her fingers warningly on her lips and tiptoed out of the room, leaving Steele curious, uneasy. He heard talking in low tones from the direction of the kitchen, then she returned, and walking to his chair, looked quizzically down.

"Are you as much of a man as you look?" she demanded.

"How long before Laflamme surprises us, mademoiselle?" he countered, forcing a yawn, having no intention of playing into Laflamme's hands.

"You theenk I'm working for that beast? Are you blind? Can't you see he's done with me?" She began, dramatically, then, "Why did you look at heem that way before dinner? I saw you! You stabbed heem with your eyes. You needn't deny it! You hate heem! Why?"

"You are mistaken, mademoiselle. I never met Laflamme before today."

"You lie! But you are suspicious; you theenk thees is a game—theenk he ees listening. Don't you see hat ees why I went out—to learn if he had left the house? Oh, you can trust me! This ees the naked truth. I would kill heem tonight if I could get away. But you—why do you hate heem, too?"

"Does Laflamme suspect me?" he asked, ignoring her question.

"No, he knows you are what you claim to be."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Mon Dieu! Get me out of dees place—take me with you! He's keeping me here because I know too much. He's afraid I weel talk."

"Talk about what—the whisky trade?"

She lowered her voice to a whisper. "The whisky ees not all—you would not believe me if I told—" A door closed outside, and Laflamme entered the room.

"Ah, this is most unromantic, monsieur," he protested, hand raised in mock gesture. "I return suddenly, to find you still in your chair—alone."

Steele was on his feet. "My man David in any trouble?" he snapped, ignoring the sarcasm.

"Oh, it wasn't his fault. Baptiste fancies he's strong, and took hold of him."

"What's happened?" Steele's blood heated at the possible harm to David, outnumbered ten to one at the trade-house.

Laflamme raised a deprecating hand. "Nothing, nothing at all. I'm glad of it! Your man cracked some of Baptiste's fingers—just squeezed his hand and Baptiste had enough. He always was a bit yellow."

"But will Baptiste follow this up? I don't want trouble here. Where is David now?" Steele was relieved; he had feared the worst. But that meant that David and he would leave the post in the morning. He knew his half-breeds. It would be dangerous to stay—and as yet nothing had been learned from the girl.

"I sent them all to bed. Baptiste won't follow it up. Antoine is with him. I'm boss here," laughed the trader.

Then Steele was aware of the attention of a pair of shining eyes. "Ah, it was magnificent, monsieur—the way you looked," said the girl. "Your eyes were like your name—of steel."

"You are embarrassing, mademoiselle."

"You must excuse Rose this evening," said Laflamme with a grimace. "She has not seen a white man in a year! Not but what she's sincere, but whisky makes her think out loud, doesn't it, Rosie?"

If the glitter of black eyes could have killed, Laflamme would have met sudden death. Instead, he refilled the glasses, while Steele's mind was busy with what the Frenchman's return from the trade-house had checked the girl from disclosing. If Pierre were Laflamme's man, as he seemed to be, Steele was curious to learn what tale the Indian had brought from Walling River concerning the lost fur canoe and the Windigo terror. He finally decided to drive straight at the point with the hope that the girl would drop something.

"Did I tell you this afternoon that I heard a Windigo at Walling River?" he began.

"What? You a scientist, mean to tell me that you heard a Windigo—a creature of Indian myth and superstition—a bugaboo of the medicine man?"

Steele grinned with delight into the trader's puzzled eyes. "I certainly do. I was waked by his howling on the ridge across the river from the post."

Laflamme smiled, suggestively tapping the bottle at his elbow, as he teased: "Scotch is a wonderful stimulant to the imagination, monsieur."

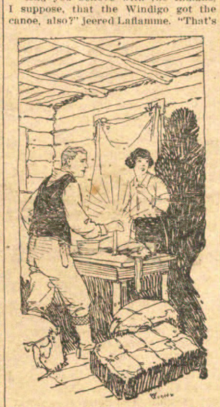
"You know that the Indians attribute the loss of St. Onge's fur canoe this summer to the same devil?" continued Steele, watching Rose's face.

"The loss of their fur canoe!" cried Laflamme. "You mean to say that St. Onge didn't get his fur to Albany this year?"

"Not a skin," said Steele. This was news that Pierre assuredly would have brought from down river. Then he caught a furtive signal from the girl. She cautiously lowered an eyelid, as she watched Laflamme.

So the Frenchman was deceiving him. Pierre had been on the trader's business at Walling River. But why did Laflamme wish to conceal it? He could not suspect that Steele would return to the Walling.

"And you believe with the Indians, I suppose, that the Windigo got the canoe, also?" jeered Laflamme. "That's a bit too raw, monsieur! It is not the first boat to be smashed in that white-water."



The Face of the Girl Went Gray With Fear. "Mon Dieu! If It's Laflamme!"

"But it was not lost in the rapids. That has been proved, for no trace of boat, fur or men was ever found. They couldn't steal the fur and get out by the Albany or through the muskeg country. That leaves the Windigo as the only solution, doesn't it?"

"Well, that finishes St. Onge, then," said Laflamme.

"And helps your little plan, eh, Louis?" Rose added.

The trader's face hardened. "Yes, it helps the trade here, of course, if they quit down there. By the way, did St. Onge say anything about sending a canoe up river this fall?"

Rose Laflamme paused in the act of draining her half-filled glass, intent on Steele's answer.

"I left the post early in September on a side trip, intending to return before starting for home, but never went back." Then, seizing the opportunity to deceive Laflamme into waiting until the last minute before kreaking his vengeance on St. Onge, Steele boldly gambled: "He said something about my taking a letter to you."

"He did?" The dark face of the trader flushed with pleasure.

"Yes, now he'll send Michel."

A glass was shattered on the table. In a fury of passion Rose Laflamme, leaping to her feet, glared at the Frenchman. "Oh, you think you've got her at last, do you?" she screamed. "When do I go, then? You'll send me now, when she comes? You'll let me go, now?"

What Steele had waited for had happened. Alcohol and her hatred of Laflamme had loosened all restraint on the tongue of the maddened girl.

Infuriated, the trader rose and pointed to the door. "We've had enough of this: you're drunk! Monsieur Steele will excuse you. Good night!"

The insult drove the blood from her flaming face: sobered her. She walked to the door, where she turned and said quietly to Steele: "Bon soir, monsieur, I leave you with thees gentleman and—cutthroat."

Although pressed by Laflamme, Steele did not stay. He had failed utterly in his plan—had learned nothing. If only the trader had remained in the trade-house five minutes longer, the girl would have told him what he wished to know. And now they were leaving in the morning.

CHAPTER X

From the outside the cabin where he and David were to sleep was dark, but he entered to find David, aided by the light of two candles, busy with their bags.

"What's the trouble?" Steele asked, noticing the blankets with which David had masked the windows. "You don't think he'd dare fire in on you?"

"Maybe," and the Ojibway pointed to the contents of a large waterproofed bag on the floor at his feet. "Dey have come to see eef you are w'at you say."

"They've been through our Indian stuff?"

"Yes, dey look at dese bag and not pack dem good."

A low knock checked the conversation. David reached for a candle. "No!" said Steele, "stand by with that!" pointing to David's rifle, then opened the door.

It was Rose Laflamme.

Disapproval was stamped on David's face as he slowly shook his head.

"Monsieur Steele, I wish to talk with you in private—" she hesitated, with a nod of her head toward the Ojibway.

"David, wait outside a minute," said Steele concealing from the girl a lowered eyelid.

"You needn't worry, Laflamme's asleep," she began, then approaching Steele, placed her hands on his shoulders as she begged: "Will you get me out of here, now—tonight?"

The girl's knowledge might be of vital importance to the future of Walling River—of the woman there he loved, and the American did not hesitate to dissemble.

"But, Rose, I haven't bacon and flour. You'd starve if we left tonight, unless we struck game. You don't want to live on fish."

"I can leeve on anything with you, you beeg American!" she said. "Onlee get me away—away from that thief. Once I loved heem—but now, I hate, hate, hate!"

Steele temporized: "But why can't you wait until tomorrow night? We'll have flour then."

"I'm afraid. He cursed me tonight for telling you something. Oh, you don't know that man—the cleverness of heem? He knows thees won't last—two, three years, thees hell here!"

"Of course he wants to get rid of the post down river?" Steele ventured.

"Oh, St. Onge is done for—and he'll get the girl," she muttered.

"But what was that Indian Pierre doing at Walling River?" he abruptly demanded.

"Pierre?" She turned on Steele in surprise. "You saw Pierre? He was told to keep under cover."

"Yes, he was spreading wild tales about the Windigo. Laflamme sent him to do that?"

Her large eyes lighted in amusement. "Oh, yes, of course! but what he went down river after was—Quick! the candles! There's some one coming!" The face of the girl went gray with fear. "Mon Dieu! If it's Laflamme!"

Steele pinched out the candles and she clung to him helplessly, her body trembling against his, as they listened.

There was a sound of a scuffle outside, the fall of a body, the dull impact of blows. Pushing aside the frightened girl, Steele seized his rifle, and opened the door.

"I got heem!" came the low voice of David from the blackness. "Han' me dat rawhide."

The man who had approached the cabin had walked into the strongest pair of arms in the Nepigon country, and lay helpless on the ground, choked and beaten into insensibility. Returning with the thongs, Steele peered at the face of David's victim.

"Laflamme?"

"Yes! We feex heem and start?" urged the Indian, fiercely.

Handshake Guide to Love

The handshake is a correct and infallible guide to true love. This is the contention of Dr. David V. Bush, a teacher of applied psychology. "Shake hands," he says, "before you start a courtship—not because you are to start something resembling a pugilistic bout, but because if the hands don't fit perfectly, don't start it." Doctor Bush says "the altar isn't even a milestone in the course of love; it's apt to be a millstone. A marriage certificate is no guarantee of love. Marriage, looked at as the goal of love, is apt to be a grave if the game ends when the knot is tied." The exponent of applied psychology thinks trouble can be avoided by proper character analysis before the courtship advances too far.

A Pity

Some people take so much pleasure in telling what they know that it's a pity they know so little.—Boston Transcript.

Cricket Is Held in High Importance in China

In Shanghai the public parks, the gardens and the trees of the cathedral yard, in the center of the business district, are the hunting grounds of hundreds of Chinese coolies and boys. The quarry is the green cricket. To the Chinese a chirping cricket is a symbol of good luck. And crickets swarm on all the trees in the international settlement and their noise rises above even that of the traffic. Boys climb the trees, pick off the crickets, put them into small basketlike cages and then go through the streets selling them for a copper or two each. One cricket or more are to be found in almost every native home, where they chirp and trill all day and all night. The noise of a cricket is to a Chinese the height of musical excellence plus the added virtue of good luck. If all the multifarious noises of the noisy city of Shanghai were boiled down into one, the song of the cricket would drown them. No opera singer could capture half the rapturous interest that the cricket is getting from the Chinese today.

Mrs. Otto Miller returned the first of the week from North Adams where she has been employed at the Leo Ballard home.

The Freshman class entertained the local school Friday afternoon with a program which was one of the best if not the best yet presented. A play "Just Like a woman" with Donald Frantz and Jane Randolph taking leading parts and with Norman Burr, Lawrence Walworth, Geraldine Little and Lettie Sawdey assisting was put on while a negro farce "The Darkey Wood Dealer" played by Norman Burr, Lawrence Walworth and Geraldine Little occupied the latter part of the program. Supt. Wertenberger and Principal Horton who furnished music were encored several times.

Iva Wilkes was born in 1881 at the farm home of Chas and Caroline Wilkes and passed away Friday at the Addison Hospital. In 1899, she was married to John Anderson and to this union were born five children who survive at the present time. They are as follows: Susie Anderson, Orlando, Fla. Mrs. L.J. McCarthy and Leon Anderson of Horton, John and Belle at home. She is also survived by her present husband, Vern Fouty to whom she was married a few years ago, and a daughter, Beulah Fouty, two years of age, her father Chas Wilkes, four brothers, Samuel, Forrest and Chas Wilkes of this section, Orville Wilkes of Horton and two sisters, Mrs. Edward Walker of Homer and Mrs. Melvin Shaw of Jerome. Rev. Scott officiated at the funeral at the church Tuesday afternoon with burial in the local cemetery. Floral offerings were made by the school, by the community and L. D. Walworth and wife.

Center Adams

Rev. and Mrs. Stoll of Cambria were guests of J. R. Dewey and wife for Sunday dinner.

Mrs. Linnie Post was in Pittsford on Friday to see her uncle Frank Nicholson who is critically ill.

Mrs. Delcie Shufelt and son of North Adams visited over the week end with Jesse Dewey and wife.

Mrs. George Bates and little granddaughter Helen Curtice visited friends in Jackson from Friday until Sunday night.

Earl Felleck and wife of Tondacordia Florida are spending the week with Mrs. Felleck's mother Mrs. L. E. Chase and family.

Harold Gordon is detained at home and is quite ill with measles. Barbara and Harry Gorden who are having whooping cough are reported as much better.

The I. C. E. Club was entertained at the George Ambler home Saturday evening. The house was decorated in commemoration of St. Patrick's Day. After a bounteous potluck supper the evening was spent with games and dancing.

Some changes are being made in this vicinity this spring. M. C. Church and family are moving from the I. C. Post place to the Walters farm in Hill district and Ralph Bradshaw and wife are moving onto the Post farm. While we regret the going of Mr. and Mrs. Church from our midst, we welcome Mr. and Mrs. Bradshaw to our neighborhood.

Town Line

Mrs. Cleve Westcott is ill with Grip.

Judd Westcott and wife are visiting her sister Mrs. Sutfin in Addison.

Abner Jennings is still confined to the house. He fell on the ice and injured his knee.

Fred Southard and wife of Addison were guests at the Jennings home Thursday March 11th.

Mrs. Fred Giddings spent the week end in Royal Oak the guest of her daughter. She also called on Addison Farmer and wife of Jackson,

The County Club Prize winners of Hillsdale county have just been announced as follows; We give those living in this part of the county: Garment Project; 2nd year, Maurine Taylor, Hazel Walworth; Canning Club, Clara Gochanour Moscow; Poultry, James Meeks; Potatoes, James Meeks; Ewe and Lamb, Edward Delamater and Muriel Holcomb. Prize awarded the winners will be a free trip to Lansing M. S. C. next summer some time. It is noticeable and highly commendable that these young folks are given the opportunity to demonstrate what they can do in the home and farm industries, and it is pleasant to know they are building for the future life no matter in what channels they may be called. The world heretofore has been too full of dreaming ne'er-to-do-wells, whose principal aim has been to do nothing and yet to reap the benefits of a busy life. Parasites, you might call them, living off someone else. Far too many of our young ladies aspire to the stenographers desk and graduate as failures—they might much better be educated into the mysteries of the kitchen and the homemaking. Too many of our boys aspire to emigrate to the city and there fall into temptations, when they could gain an honorable and influential citizenship by remaining on the farm and seeking to uphold the profession.

Obituary

Ella Jane Clement Seeley died at 8 p. m. Sunday March 14 1926 at her late home in Jerome Mich. aged 57 years, 3 months and 14 days. Deceased was wife of Ralph M. Seeley.

Mrs. Seeley was born in the state of New York, Scoharia Co. Nov 26 1869 and came with her parents in 1884 to Mich. and has since resided in Hillsdale county. Was united in marriage to R. M. Seeley Jan. 1, 1888. To this union a daughter was born which died in infancy.

The deceased is survived by husband and three brothers, Wesley H. of Hale Mich., Marcus D. and Charles D. of Jackson Mich.

Mrs. Seeley was united with Jerome M. E. church 35 years ago and has been a faithful worker. Her faith as a Christian gave courage for what may come and with this ardent faith, she leaves us. Ella has gone to her reward and we have a new reason to go on with renewed courage and faith to meet her in the beyond.

Besides other relatives many friends mourn their loss.

Hillsdale County Milk Producers

Three hundred or more humble sons of toil assembled Monday afternoon at the building of Pinkham & Wright at the county seat to discuss ways and means of increasing the monthly tariff check on the lacteal fluid which many of the rural boys are coaxing from the udders of their kine.

James Post as head gavel pounder called the conclave to order and introduced E. A Beach, assistant secretary of the Michigan Milk Producers Association who said a plenty on the subject of marketing the juice of the farmers' money bag.

He could have said more but time was pressing.

M. L. Noon of Jackson who is also an official of the Milk Producers Association and a leading light in the Farm Bureau spoke and warmed up on the subject of co-operation to bring results.

Committees have been appointed with members in each township to look after the interests of milk producers and check up on the number of them. A constitution and bylaws are to be drafted and presented at the next meeting March 22nd at the same place, (Pinkham & Wright"s) The skeptics will have to admit that Southern Michigan is fast becoming a dairy region.

First, we farm the cows then we farm the tourist by selling him the milk. The time is not far away when the whole area of these southern counties will be one vast rolling meadow of succulent quack grass with soft eyed bossies manipulating their cuds in the shade of the walnut trees. The roads—oh they'll be clean ribbons of asphalt-concrete lined with buttermilk and 'hot dog' stands. Come on, you Florida resorters! We'll take care of you.

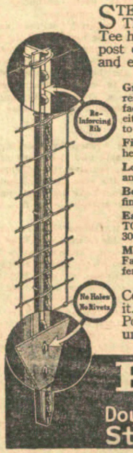
Get the Big Value in the Fence Post Field

STEEL fence posts are no longer all alike. The RED TOP Double Strength Studded Tee has set a new standard. It is a stronger post of longer life, easier and cheaper to set and easier and cheaper to fasten fencing to.



Greater Strength—due to adding more metal in a reinforcing rib (see illustration) and also due to the fact that there isn't a single hole punched in the post either for staples or anchor plate. No rivets required to attach anchor plate. (See illustration.)

Firmer in Ground—the RED TOP Anchor Plate is heavier and stronger than ever.

Longer Service—the new aluminum metallic finish and solid post make it longer lived.

Better looking fences—the aluminum metallic finish gives the post a neat, trim appearance.

Easier, cheaper setting—with the One Man RED TOP Driver one man without a helper can set 200 to 300 posts per day.

More efficient fence fastening—RED TOP Handy Fasteners makes it possible for one man to attach fencing to posts. And fastener holds fencing tighter.

Come in and see this better post. Handle it. Inspect it. See how the new One Man Post Driver works. Don't buy a fence post until you do this.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Waterways Seems to Be One of Livest Issues Before American People.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WATERWAYS seems to be one of the livest issues of the day before the American people. The week has seen several striking demonstrations of importance of the subject and of the popular interest.

Possibly of first importance was Secretary of Commerce Hoover's address at Chicago outlining an inland waterway system that would work wonders for the Middle West—and therefore for the whole nation. Within five years, he predicted, the Mississippi system would be functioning from Chicago to New Orleans and from Pittsburgh to Kansas City. Congress and the President are agreed upon the necessary appropriations.

Secretary Hoover considered the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway even more valuable. Two problems, he said, are involved: the deepening of the channel to the sea and the stabilization of lake levels. The lakes are from two to three feet shallower than they were seven years ago. Something less than one-sixth of the fall he attributed to the diversion of water at Chicago and the rest to the climatic cycle. Whatever the cause, the remedy, he said, lay in the construction of control works above Niagara falls.

"Our United States engineers tell us—and we have the best engineer corps in the world—that they can restore the level of the lakes by curtailing the outflow at Niagara until they fill up," Mr. Hoover explained. "They tell us that proportionately to the gigantic flow it is a small job. By so doing we will have equalized the vagaries of climate and stabilized the vagaries of emotion."

ATTORNEYS GENERAL of half a dozen Great Lakes states, a former secretary of war, and a former solicitor general of the United States argued for four hours in a final presentation to the United States Supreme court of the controversy over Chicago's right to divert Lake Michigan water for sanitary and waterway purposes.

Arrayed against Newton D. Baker, former secretary of war, who appeared as chief of counsel for Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Indiana, Michigan, and New York, seeking an injunction to prevent further diversion, was James M. Beck, a former solicitor general of the United States, assisted by Hugh Johnson, assistant attorney general of Illinois, and Daniel N. Kirby, attorney general for Missouri.

Mr. Baker's contention before the court was, in brief, that the War department was not authorized to permit the diversion of lake water for any purpose—that such authority was vested alone in congress.

Mr. Beck pointed out that as solicitor general he had upheld the right of former Secretary of War Weeks to issue the diversion permit of March 5, 1925, and that he had represented the government in earlier litigation which resulted in a decision affirming the War department's right to issue such permits.

LETTERS written by Secretary of War Davis and Secretary of the Navy Wilbur praising the military advantages of the proposed all-American canal between Lake Ontario and the Hudson river stirred up two flurries in Washington.

"You can't criticize the secretary of war before this board," said Brig. Gen. Edgar Jadwin to Representative John B. Sosnowski (Rep., Mich.), at the waterways hearing in the Munitions building. Of course a red-hot row started, with talk of free speech, the rights of congress, etc. Finally the contestants, and even General Jadwin agreed that opponents should be heard later on the military phases of the all-American project. Thus ended the first flurry.

The congressman from Detroit came to the waterways hearing to fight New York's all-American canal project on the ground that the taxpayers of Michigan were opposed to it.

THE second flurry was occasioned by the statement in the Davis letter that "from the military standpoint it is essential that waterways connecting the Great Lakes with the Atlantic seaboard shall be entirely within American territory." Senator Lenroot (Rep., Wis.), Senator Willis (Rep., Ohio), Former Governor Harding of Iowa, and Charles P. Craig of the St. Lawrence Tidewater association hurried to the White House in protest. They charged that Davis was attempting to induce War department engineers who are now studying the project, into recommending the all-American canal, rather than the St. Lawrence route. From the White House they went to the War department, where Secretary Davis assured them he would give the St. Lawrence route a fair deal.

C. LORNE CAMPBELL, a Canadian engineer, laid before a gathering of leading Chicagoans his plan for a "Sixth Great Lake" which he asserts would restore the levels of the Great Lakes, provide for Chicago's water diversion and develop immense hydroelectric power. He would fill up a large natural basin in Ontario by damming the Albany and Ogoki rivers, which now run into Hudson bay. This new lake would be twice the size of Lake Ontario. A surplus of 15,000 cubic feet a minute—twice Chicago's diversion from Lake Michigan—would be delivered into Lake Superior through a short canal to Lake Nipigon, that lake and the Nipigon river. Mr. Campbell says the cost is not excessive and the project would benefit both America and Canada, as well as the entire Great Lakes region. Chicago's water-diversion problem would be solved. Harbor and river dredging by both governments and by lake ports would be saved through restored water levels. Ontario would get immense water power at the Nipigon river and a market for the pulp-wood forest in the basin of the new lake. The cargo capacity of lake carriers would be restored. Increased water flow would aid both waterway projects, Great Lakes-St. Lawrence and Great Lakes-Gulf. Altogether, Mr. Campbell thinks, the benefits would be so large that the interests benefited could well afford to pay the cost of construction on some sort of pro rata basis.

BRIG. GEN. SMEDLEY D. BUTLER, United States marine corps, filed charges of drunkenness and conduct unbecoming an officer against Col. Alexander Williams of the San Diego marine base. General Butler took command of the San Diego base upon being released from the job of "mopping up" Philadelphia, relieving Colonel Williams.

General Butler's action followed a dinner given at Colonel Williams' home in Coronado in General Butler's honor. Cocktails, it is said, were served at the dinner, which was attended by a number of officers of the marine corps and their wives. The charges against Colonel Williams, however, were based on a party which was held later at a hotel in Coronado, all of those at the dinner having been invited.

Several affidavits accompanied the charges. General Butler and some other officers declared in the affidavits that Colonel Williams was intoxicated. Other affidavits declared he was not. Colonel Williams was placed under technical arrest at the hotel and was summarily removed from command of the Fourth regiment of marines, to which command he reverted when General Butler relieved him as commander of the marine base recently. Presumably the Navy department in Washington will order a court martial.

THE first telephone was patented by Alexander Graham Bell at Washington, March 7, 1876. Sunday, the fiftieth anniversary of the "scientific toy," New York and London chatted for four hours by radio telephone across the Atlantic—about current news, weather, prohibition and short skirts.

The demonstration was staged for engineers and newspaper men by the American Telephone and Telegraph company, the Radio Corporation of America and the British general post office. The American talk was broadcast from Rocky Point, L. I., across 3,300 miles of ocean to Broughton, England. The British voices were thrown 2,900 miles from Rugby to Houlton, Maine. The wave length was 5,770 meters. Only one conversation can be conducted on the same line. The achievement was the two-way conversation.

While the American and British commissioners were drawing up the treaty of Ghent to end the War of 1812 the British sent a secret expedition, supposedly invincible, with the purpose of capturing New Orleans after peace had been declared and hanging onto the whole Mississippi valley. In fact Gen. Andrew Jackson most astonishingly defeated the British fifteen days after the signing of the treaty. The first Atlantic cable was laid in 1865. Now comes the radio telephone across the Atlantic. Man is mastering time and distance. What next—Mars?

PREMIER ARISTIDE BRIAND of France has formed a new cabinet and is back in Geneva. That is about all that can be said definitely at this writing of the muddle into which weeks of diplomatic intrigue over the enlargement of the council has dumped the League of Nations.

The council, just the same, is investigating the reservations made by the United States senate concerning America's entry into the World court. During a private, semi-official session it appointed a committee of four judicial experts for the work: Sir Cecil Hurst of Great Britain, M. Fromageout of France, Sig. Belotti of Italy, and M. Sagimura of Japan.

The committee is given a free hand to hold its meetings where it will. The committee also is empowered by the council to ask the World court for an advisory opinion on the United States' reservations if deemed advisable, or they may recommend to the league council that it ask an advisory opinion from The Hague.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE has issued a proclamation for the observance of American Forest week, April 18-24. It was until last year called Forest Protection week and its program was in charge of the United States forest service, with special emphasis on protection against fire. At a meeting in Chicago the name was changed and the scope enlarged to all phases of the complicated problem of American forestry.

Frank O. Lowden, former governor of Illinois, was made permanent chairman of a directing committee of representatives from over a hundred organizations. There are five vice chairmen: Mrs. John D. Sherman, president of the General Federation of Women's clubs; Frank G. Wisner, president of the National Lumber Manufacturers' association; Will Dilg, president of the Izaak Walton League; W. B. Greeley, United States forester; George D. Pratt, president of the American Forestry association.

Local committees are now preparing programs with which they hope to awaken the American people to the menace of the forestry situation.

THE senate concluded a controversy which had been continued in executive session on several different days by approving, 48 to 20, the nomination of Charles W. Hunt of Iowa as a member of the federal trade commission. Mr. Hunt had been serving under a recess appointment since the expiration of his original term last year. He has been considered the "dirt farmer" member of the commission, having been named by President Coolidge to fill out the unexpired Murdock term.

IMPROVEMENT in the condition of Col. John C. Coolidge, father of the President was reported. Dr. Albert W. Cram, the colonel's physician, said the patient was very comfortable and there was no immediate cause for alarm. For several days Colonel Coolidge, ill for several months and with his legs paralyzed by a heart affection, had had considerable pain, Doctor Cram reported, and his appetite had not been up to standard. But sedatives helped to remove his discomfort and the appetite improved. President Coolidge keeps in constant touch by wire with his father or with the doctor. It is announced he is ready to start for the bedside of his stricken father at Plymouth, Vt., the moment he receives word of an alarming change. A force of men are working to keep the roads clear from Ludlow.

Claims He Has Secret of Artificial Creation

Lorain, Ohio.—John F. Mazur, Lorain's young and until now obscure bacteriologist, has revealed the five years of work and experiment which, he says, have resulted in the accomplishment of something the fundamentalists and the evolutionists of the world unite in saying can't be accomplished—the creation of animal and plant life by artificial means.

Mazur claims he has created artificial cells, artificial plant life and a low order of animal life.

As proof of his claims he offers thousands of land snails, an unidentified species of weed and sixteen varieties of cells, all of which he says he has made himself with chemicals and sunlight.

An accident was responsible for his discoveries, the bacteriologist states. "I accidentally obtained cells while analyzing sputum in a disease case five years ago," he said.

"I did not know how they had been produced and it took a year to find out. Since then I have traveled all over the United States testing my discoveries, finding new forms of life and striving unsuccessfully to gain recognition."

The creation of artificial snails, Mazur claims, is his latest achievement. "I have produced more than 5,000 of them in three experiments. While small, my snails are natural in every respect. They assimilate food, grow, reproduce themselves, and eventually die.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Jackson—John H. Kelly, 76 years old, oldest employe of the Michigan State Prison in point of service, is dead at his home after a short illness. Mr. Kelly was a guard at the prison 36 years, being on duty daily until a month ago.

Pontiac—Robert Beelby, proprietor of a pool room at Holly, is on trial in Circuit Court here on charges preferred by a 15-year-old Holly girl. Beelby is past middle age. Mrs. Beelby is a daily spectator at the trial and expects to be one of the witnesses in his behalf.

Pontiac—Because of a burn sustained, she claims, when Archibald McGlip, chiropractor, was treating her with an electric diathermic machine on October 16 last, Mrs. Clara Whittaker of Auburn Heights has been awarded damages amounting to $4,500. She sued the practitioner for $10,000.

Ypsilanti—Ypsilanti is in the throes of an influenza epidemic, the cases numbering about 1,000. City Physician J. J. Wood states that all are mild and there is no need of alarm over the situation. Few have developed into pneumonia: About 20 per cent of the students at the Normal college are absent.

Grand Rapids—Horace P. Stewart 94 years old, former Lake Odessa farmer, is dead at the home of his son, Frank H. Stewart, of this city, as a result of injuries received when he is believed to have fallen from his bedroom window to the ground. The body was found by the son on the ground below the window.

Grand Rapids—Stock control of the Fourth National bank has been acquired by Joseph H. Brewer with the result it was stated that the old Fourth National bank building on Campau square and the 40 feet adjoining it on Pearl street may eventually be placed on the market. Brewer's holdings are said to be more than 50 per cent of the stock.

Pontiac — Petting parties on the front seat of automobiles in Pontiac would be punishable by fines up to $100 or 90 days imprisonment in the county jail under the terms of an ordinance introduced recently before the Pontiac City Commission. The proposed ordinance would make the penalty the same for the driver of the car and his or her companion. The ordinance was tabled temporarily.

Adrian—Improvements costing $40,000 will be made in the local yards of the Toledo & Western Electric railroad this summer, it has been announced. A new electrical substation will be constructed and a new rotary converter installed. The new equipment will increase the capacity of the state to 500 kilowatts. A number of improvements on the roadbed have been made during the last year.

Lansing—A committee representing the paper manufacturers of the state will be given 60 days to decide upon a definite concerted plan to treat the waste they have been dumping into Michigan streams so the waste will not be dangerous to fish life and the public health. Approval of the plan lies with representatives of the Department of Health, Department of Conservation and the Attorney-General's office.

Iron Mountain—A fight between the American Legion membership of the Lower Peninsula of Michigan and that of the Upper Peninsula is forecast when the Legionnaires gather at Iron Mountain in convention on Aug. 23. In this impending fight, which will center about charges that the Lower Peninsula ignores and discriminates against the Upper Peninsula veterans, the entire Upper Peninsula membership will be asked to join.

Grand Rapids—The Milwaukee council asked the Grand Rapids commission to express itself in favor of an amendment, but the commission, adopting a committee report, declared "it is our opinion city councils and commissions are entirely outside their sphere of authority and activity in attempting to change the Constitution of the United States. Further, it is the duty of municipal authorities to enforce the laws upon the statute books and to stand behind those laws to the fullest extent."

Lansing—The Motor Wheel Corp., which holds patents on steel wheels and balloon tires which it claims entitle it to royalties on all such tires produced, has not started suit against competitors but negotiations are being continued, according to an announcement made to stockholders of the corporation by H. F. Harper, president and general manager. "Nothing definite has been accomplished of interest to stockholders but negotiations are still in progress," said Mr. Harper.

Lansing — Delegates have been named by Gov. Alex J. Groesbeck to represent Michigan at the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety at Washington, March 24, in response to an invitation by President Coolidge. The object of the conference, the second of its kind to be held at Washington, is to decide upon a uniform traffic law for all states. The president in his letter to Gov. Groesbeck contends the need for such a law is imperative and points out the year's casualties of 24,000 killed and 50,000 injured.

Ann Arbor—That the menace of democracy lies in its failure to develop distinction was the opinion expressed by Dr. Lynn Harold Hough, pastor of the Central Methodist of Detroit, in his address on "Can Democracy Produce Great Leaders?" given before members of the Wesleyan Guild of the Methodist Church here. "Democracy cannot develop great leaders, for men are not judged on the same moral and intellectual [illegible] Dr. Hough. "Democracy must efface artificial barriers if it [illegible] its paramount purpose."

Let Tanlac restore your health

If your body is all fagged-out and run down, if you are losing weight steadily, lack appetite, have no strength or energy—why not let Tanlac help you back to health and strength?

So many millions have been benefited by the Tanlac treatment, so many thousands have written to testify to that effect that it's sheer folly not to make the test.

Tanlac, you know, is a great natural tonic and builder, a compound, after the famous Tanlac formula, of roots, barks and herbs. It purges the blood stream, revitalizes the digestive organs and enables the sickly body to regain its vanished weight.

You don't need to wait long to get results. Tanlac goes right to the seat of trouble. In a day or so you note a vast difference in your condition. You have more appetite, sleep better at night and the color begins to creep back into your washed-out cheeks.

Don't put off taking Tanlac another precious day. Step into the nearest drug store and get a bottle of this world-famed tonic. That's the first important step back to health and vigor. Every day's delay means unnecessary suffering, for Tanlac starts to clean out and tone up the system right away. And by acting promptly you will avoid further loss of energy and weight due to your present run down condition. Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation.

Tanlac Brought Back Her Health

"I suffered agony for eight years, due to gas on stomach. Eating caused knifelike pains to shoot through me. Tanlac was a godsend for today I eat well, sleep sound and wake up refreshed."

Fourteen Points of Encouragement

Now and then pessimistic friends with the corners of their mouths drawn down, approach us, and in doleful tones, inquire, "Aren't you utterly down-hearted over the present prohibition situation?"

If these visitors allow us five minutes to give expression to our feelings they go away convinced that our frame of mind is as far from discouragement as the North Star is from the Southern Cross. We frankly admit that the prohibition millennium has not arrived, but who would expect it in six short years? Neither, we beg to remind them, has the tax-paying millennium, nor the safe driving millennium. But nobody can make us believe that we haven't gone a long, long way toward actual prohibition of the liquor traffic.

First—We have the Eighteenth Amendment safely landed in the Constitution, and even our antagonists view with dismay the herculean task of attempting to remove it, knowing that if it ever could be done it would take a huge amount of labor and a long, long period of miseducation.

Second—We have secured the Volstead Code, which notwithstanding many attacks by its enemies, still remains on our statute books as a law in good and regular standing, upheld by the Supreme Court of the Nation.

Third—We have a Congress that we have every reason to believe can be depended upon to stand firm for the retention of the Volstead Code, without modification downward.

Fourth—We have in almost all our commonwealths excellent enforcement laws in harmony with the national dry law. These laws, too, have withstood the numerous assaults of the wets.

Fifth—We have on our side the majority of the governors of our states, convinced of the value of prohibition and endeavoring to see that the law is enforced in their commonwealths.

Sixth. We have in the Hon. Calvin Coolidge, a President who is the incarnation of a well observed prohibition law. Neither he nor his family drink alcoholic beverages; nor do they serve such in the White House, and as the result of his example and admonition, Washington society is said to be gradually but surely "going dry."

Seventh. We have as generalissimo of the enforcement forces, General Lincoln C. Andrews, who with his splendid force of officials, is demonstrating ability to handle successfully his big job.

Eighth. We have on the part of our judges a growing sense of responsibility for imposing adequate penalties upon law violators, even though they may be personal friends or neighborsr

Ninth. We have a vast amount of scientific facts and findings proving the injurious effect of alcohol even in beverages like beer, that if widely disseminated will build up sentiment for prohibition.

Tenth. We have an increasing volume of evidence from the highest and most dependable source that the economic and social effect of prohibition has been highly beneficial to business, home life and individuals.

Eleventh. We have whole heartedly with us the membership of a vast number of churches, which when aroused to a sense of their obligations, are a mighty power that none can withstand.

Twelfth. We have throughout the nation thousands of newspapers published in the smaller cities and towns, and not a few in the metropolitan centers, that are flaming heralds on the subject of prohibition and law enforcement.

Thirteenth. We have stong organizations of men, women and young people, diligently carrying on educational campaigns among the people, and awakening them to a sense of civic responsibility to help enforce the dry law.

Fourteenth and finally, we have a Divine leader, who is panoplied with wisdom and power, whose hand is not shortened and whose arm cannot fail.—National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

Scholarship Cup

The Interfraternity Scholarship Cup at Hillsdale College was awarded Saturday morning to Beta Alpha Delta. The four fraternities ranked as follows: Beta Alpha Delta 2,743, Delta Tau Delta 2.398, Delta Sigma Phi 2.235, Alpha Tau Omega 1.916.

This prize is a large silver cup presented by members of the class of 1921. It is awarded each semester to that organization of men belonging to the Hillsdale Interfraternity Council which maintains the highest average scholarship. Permanent ownership is obtained by holding the cup for five successive semesters.

Lillian Pendell of North Adams Michigan is in the list of sophomores students at Hillsdale College ranking with the highest 10 percent of the class for scholarship. This list was made public at the chapel exercises Saturday and includes the following students: Leon B. Wolcott, Union City, Michigan; Donaly Kinsey, Stockbridge, Michigan; Aileen Nichols Hillsdale, Michigan; Charlotte Morlock, Hillsdale, Michigan; Owen Wyandt, Bryan, Ohio; Lillian Pendell, North Adams, Michigan; Edwina Learmont, Croswell Michigan; Faye Haroff, Buchanan Michigan; Ruth Resseguie, Hillsdale, Mich.; Catherine Lamni, Crystal Falls, Michigan; Ruth Hanny, Chicago, Illinois; Verda Herbster, Put-in-Bay, Ohio.

The list of freshmen students at Hillsdale College ranking with the highest 10 percent of the class for scholarship was made public at the chapel exercises tuday and includes the following students: Zelma Haines, Montpelier, Ohio; Ruth Richardson, Onsted Mich.; Myrtle Walters, Coyert, Mich; Ellen Austin, Detroit Mich; Vivid Bainbridge, Howell Mich.; Charlotte Coye, Sturgis Mich.; Mae Bradford, Sparta Mich.; Raymond Neff, Three Rivers Mich,; Earl Pifer, Alvordton Ohio,; William Ellis, Petosky Mich.; Theron Randolph, Jerome Mich.: John Wier, Ligonier Ind.; Thelma Payne Hillsdale, Mich.; Horace Crawford, Hillsdale Mich.; Elaine Rowe Hillsdale Mich.

Basket Ball Champions of N. Y. C. Lines

Eight railroad teams of men and three of girls will compete in Rochester, N. Y. on Saturday, March 20 for a trophy, individual medals and the title of "basketball champions of the New York Central Lines." It is expected that the State Armory in that city will be filled by rooters who will travel by special trains to the scene of one of the biggest industrial basketball events yet staged by one organization.

The keenest rivalry exists and inasmuch as these teams are all district champions in their own right, the best amateur basketball to be witnessed anywhere will probably be on display in the Rochester tournament. Each team won the right to represent its territory by first winning a territorial championship in tournament play.

Every player is a member of a New York Central Lines Athletic Association. Each year a track meet and baseball championship game, as well as bowling, trapshooting, entertaining and educational events are held by the employes of the New York Central Lines who number more than 160,000. However, this is the first year that a basketball championship tourney has ever been attempted.

The men's teams are from Rochester, Elkhart, Ind., Columbus O., Jackson, Mich., Indianapolis, Pittsburgh and two from Chicago. They represent the New York Central East and West of Buffalo, the Big Four, the Michigan Central, the Cincinnati Northern and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroads, all of which are part of the New York Central Lines. The girl's teams from Charleston, W. Va., represents the Ohio Central Lines, the team from Cleveland, the New York Central and the team from Detroit the Michigan Central.

Aside from the athletic aspect of the tournament, several entertaining features have been provided. A 30 piece band from the Oswego Shops of the New York Central will play throughout the afternoon and the ballet corps from the famous Eastman Theater in Rochester will dance.

Arthur Rich son of a wealthy Battle Creek manufacturer, should come as a sinister warning to young society where certain of their numbers (a very small percent) have been inclined to ape some of the mannerisms and practices that seemed to become popular as an aftermath to changed social conditions following the trial of the World war.

It is a solemn warning our young people should heed. Although it may be aping the ultra to indulge in flask-toting and petting parties, there is always in such actions the harm that may result from what at first appeared to be only a pleasant and exciting experience. Young Rich had all the advantages that wealth could offer. He was a pampered son who chose to disregard the splendid advice given him by upright parenthood, and sought instead the fleshpots of what he believed a bizarre age.

Today he languishes in a prison cell, while his misdeeds have crush

ather and mother who loved him most. The experience he bought and will now have to pay for with his liberty, is too gruesome a lesson to be overlooked by a single boy or girl in Michigan.

Smoke damage to merchandize is qutte common in city stores in California near large orchard districts, where frost protective heating is carried on extensively. Although the fruit frost service of the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture is maintained primarily for the fruit growers, the forecasts of temperatures sufficiently low to require heating are now supplied to the merchants as a warning to protect their goods against smoke, and are utilized extensively by them.

The Rich-King Trial Cost Vast Sums

and yet it is not finished. Ambitious lawyers are now figuring how they can bring the case before the Supreme Court of Michigan which will be the means of costing several thousand more dollars to settle something which ought to have been settled when the Judge pronounced sentence. Rich is now behind the bars at Jackson and it is not worth while to bother about such birds. He got what the laws of this state prescribe for women attackers, but the hundreds of similar offenders who get by with scarcely any sentence would seem to indicate that Justice is a little addled. It has been predicted that Rich might get by with a light sentence as did the boy murderers of Chicago. but evidently Michigan jurists are composed of different stuff.

Miss King goes back to Battle Creek but not in peace and security. She made an awful mistake and few of her kind ever entirely recover from such blunders. She should have carried a strictly automatic gun when she went riding with Rich. In the company of such morons she was not safe unless armed with the quickest and most deadly weapon manufactured. She should have taken a real practice shoot at a target to get thoroughly wonted before accepting an invitation to accompany the party of roughnecks. The liquor in transit would have given her the necessary nerve.

As the matter stands she is only one of thousands swept into the maelstrom of social evils. She will be punished for her delinquencies and the institution of which she is a co-ed need not feel proud of the result.

Had she shot her attacker she would have been hailed into court as a murderess, but the Judge up on hearing the truth could do naught but hand her back the gun with admonitions to do likewise on all similar occasions.

As it is she is not exempt. She will be considered tolerable by certain classes, though a young lady who drinks liquor as a soak, smokes cigarettes as a roustabout and flaps about with such chaps as Rich is reputed to be, would scarcely be welcome in a Methodist prayer meeting, unless society has changed since the World war.

Ypsilanti will spend $55,854.45 in paving this season and Milford buys a new fire engine.

SUCCESS IN AMERICA AN OPEN HIGHWAY

How Four Boys of Humble Origin Have Become Chiefs of the Greatest Financial Organization in the World.

Broad highways of achievement are wide open to all in America no matter how humble their beginning, it is brought out by a writer in Forbes Magazine, telling of the successive elevation of poor boys to the chieftainship of the most powerful association of financial power in the world.

"Nowhere is opportunity so democratic as in caste-free America, nowhere is recognition for faithful service so little conditioned by inherited position and wealth," the article says. "The bounty of America in bestowing her rewards of great success upon those of modest origin is again notably manifest in the rise of Oscar Wells to the presidency of the American Bankers Association.

"The son of a tanner, John H. Puelicher, was elected to this eminence in 1922. Circumstances ended his public schooling in the seventh year and he went to work in a carpet store in Milwaukee. At sixteen he entered a bank as a clerk, rising step by step until he became president. Recognition of his abilities as a banker and civic service through public education in sound economic understanding brought him the highest reward from his profession.

"A former country school teacher, Walter W. Head, born in a farm hamlet in Western Illinois, was elected president of the association in 1923. He gave up teaching and a salary of $75 to enter banking at $40 a month in a small Missouri town. He subsequently became president of a bank in Omaha, the largest in Nebraska and a dozen neighboring states. The position he occupied in advancing agricultural welfare during the period of depression led to his being called the 'Granger President of the American Bankers Association.'

"From Irish immigrant lad to supreme head of banking in America epitomizes the career of William E. Knox, president of one of the largest savings banks of the country in New York. His business career began as an office boy in a publishing house, and he later entered the bank as a clerk. Experience with humble people in their problems of personal finance and his inculcation of economy in all matters attracted country-wide attention.

"Oscar Wells, who rises in 1925 as successor of these men, was born in an old weather-boarded log cabin house in the Missouri River bottoms of Platte County, Missouri. He became an orphan when three years of age, losing his parents in an epidemic that ravaged the countryside. He passed under the care of an uncle, head of a small country bank in Platte City, a town of a few hundred inhabitants, growing up on a farm and receiving his early education in a rural school. He later entered Bethany College, West Virginia, but at the end of his junior year he had to quit college and go to work in the bank."

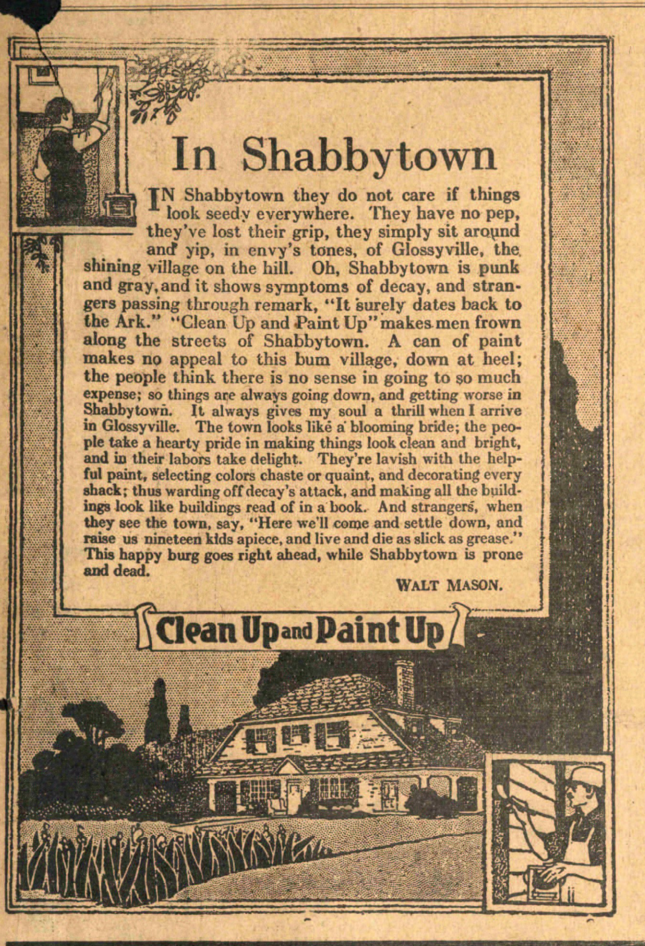
His subsequent career was one of steady progress, first to higher positions among small country banks, then to larger city banks in Texas, where he rose to the top. In 1914 he was chosen first governor of the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank and served through the opening period of the establishment of that institution. He resigned to become president of a bank in Birmingham, Alabama, which has grown under his administration to be one of the largest and most successful institutions in the South.

HUGE GROWTH IN SCHOOL SAVINGS

New York.—School savings in the United States for the year 1924-1925 increased in aggregate bank balances by $5,500,000, with a growth of 630,000 in the total number of pupils participating, it is shown in reports made to the American Bankers Association, which declares that the returns encourage belief in the permanence of school savings as a part of the educational program in the public schools.

During the year the number of reporting school savings systems increased from 683 in 742 districts to 760 in 1,557 districts, the number of schools from 9,080 to 10,163, the number of pupils participating from 2,236,326 to 2,869,497, the deposits from $14,991,535.40 to $16,961,560.72 and the bank balances from $20,435,144.64 to $25,913,431.15, says W. E. Albig, in charge of the Association's savings activities.

Since 1920, the first year for which comprehensive statistics are available, the number of schools having school savings banking has increased 271.4 per cent, the enrollment in school savings districts 278.9 per cent, participants 520.2 per cent, deposits 506.1 per cent and bank balances 516.8 per cent.



Clean Up and Paint Up

In Shabbytown

IN Shabbytown they do not care if things look seedy everywhere. They have no pep, they've lost their grip, they simply sit around and yip, in envy's tones, of Glossyville, the shining village on the hill. Oh, Shabbytown is punk and gray, and it shows symptoms of decay, and strangers passing through remark, "It surely dates back to the Ark." "Clean Up and Paint Up" makes men frown along the streets of Shabbytown. A can of paint makes no appeal to this bum village, down at heel; the people think there is no sense in going to so much expense; so things are always going down, and getting worse in Shabbytown. It always gives my soul a thrill when I arrive in Glossyville. The town looks like a blooming bride; the people take a hearty pride in making things look clean and bright, and in their labors take delight. They're lavish with the helpful paint, selecting colors chaste or quaint, and decorating every shack; thus warding off decay's attack, and making all the buildings look like buildings read of in a book. And strangers, when they see the town, say, "Here we'll come and settle down, and raise us nineteen kids apiece, and live and die as slick as grease." This happy burg goes right ahead, while Shabbytown is prone and dead.

CENSUS REVEALS ASTONISHING FACT

8,549,511 Working Women in United States

Many Say Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helps Keep Them Fit to Work

8,549,511 women would be a vast army. According to the 1920 Census of Manufactures, that is the number of women and girls employed in all trades in the United States.

Napoleon said, "An army travels on its stomach." This army of women travels on its general health. Every working girl knows that time lost through illness seldom is paid for and seldom can be made up. Employers demand regularity. If she wants to keep her job or hopes for a better one, she must guard her health.

Atlanta, Ga.—"My system was weak and run-down, and I was tired. I was this way for five years or more. I read your advertisement in the papers and I decided to try your medicine, the Vegetable Compound, but I did not begin to take it regularly until after I was married. I got so much good from it that I feel fine and have gained in weight. I work in a broom shop, but my work is not so hard on me now, and I keep my own house, and work my garden, too. I am telling all my friends of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and how it has helped me."—Mrs. W. M. Bailey, R. F. D. No. 5, Box 27, Atlanta, Georgia.

Missouri Woman Helped

Parkville, Mo.—"I am proud to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was so ill that I could not lie down at night. Then I got my husband to go to the store and buy me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I was up and around before the first bottle was gone, although I only weighed about ninety pounds. I took six or eight bottles and was able to do all my housework, washing and ironing, take care of my five boys, and tend to my chickens and garden, where before I had to hire my washing and part of my housework."—Mrs. Anna Cole, R. R. 2, Parkville, Missouri.

France Filling Up

During 1923 and 1924 the excess of foreign immigrants arriving in France over those departing was in the neighborhood of 200,000 for each year. In the first three-quarters of 1925 it dropped to 75,453.

"You allowed constipation to become chronic—until finally it resulted in organic disease.

"People don't realize how insidious constipation is. Its first effects are hardly more than annoyances—headaches, loss of appetite, sleeplessness and the like. But in time, as the body is subjected to continued intestinal poisoning, it may lead to high blood pressure, rheumatism, diabetes or even Bright's disease.

"Stop constipation if you wish to live long. Take a little Nujol every day—that will keep you regular."

Nujol relieves constipation in Nature's way

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It does not affect the stomach and is not absorbed by the body. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is safe, gentle and natural in its action.

Nujol makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly in accordance with the directions on each bottle. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today and begin to enjoy the perfect health that is possible only when elimination is normal and regular.

"No! Tie him up and put him in the shack and get our stuff to the canoe! I'll get rid of the girl!"

The die was cast. Every minute at the post spelled danger. But Steele now had an excuse for refusing to take Rose Laflamme to the railroad.

"You understand, David? Keep your knife out of him. Your turn will come on the snow. Now get the canoe!"

David carried Laflamme into the shack, and went for the canoe.

Returning to the girl, trembling in the dark, Steele said: "It was he. David knocked him out, but he's not hurt. We must get away at once."

With an impulsive movement, Rose Laflamme found Steele's neck with her arms and kissed him wildly.

"But," explained the harassed American, "we've got to travel fast; they'll follow us—we can't take you!"

"You mean you'll not take me now?" gasped the girl in her despair.

"We'll have to run the portages, break our backs to beat the Indians he'll send after us. If you go, they'll get us!" protested Steele.

"Take me, take me with you!" she moaned. "Am I not beautiful, beeg American? Don't leave me here!"

Then Brent Steele gambled: "What was Pierre doing down river?"

"I weel tell you in the canoe," she parried, and he crunched his teeth in his chagrin. "When we are in the canoe I will tell you things—things you nevaire dream of," she urged, "I know all."

She would exchange her information at a price—her freedom; and that price Steele would not pay. But it was necessary to get her back to the house.

"All right," he said, "go and get some heavy clothes, and be at the log landing in an hour. Don't make any noise. We don't want them to find Laflamme until morning. Now be careful!"

With a low cry, she again circled Steele's neck with her arms, kissed him and disappeared. In an hour he and David would be far down the lake on their way to Nepigon house. She had intended making a catspaw of him to escape from Ogoke and Steele wasted no sympathy on her. He wondered whether, on finding herself tricked, she would arouse the post or take to her bed, feigning ignorance of the whole business.

And he also wondered whether if Denise St. Onge ever learned of this night's work at Ogoke, she would believe that every act and word of his had been in her service.

Through the night, the churn-swish, churn-swish of the paddles of David and Steele ceaselessly marked off the miles, for with the sun might come a head wind, which meant fighting for every foot while their pursuers gained on them with a four or six-man crew. Time and again through the long hours, the keen eyes of David alone had sensed through the murk in which they traveled, the menace of a rocky point or the threat of bowlders, awash, square in their course.

"How far have we come?" asked Steele, laying his paddle on the gunwale to stretch his stiffened arms.

"Wal, dees point ees ver' far up de lak'. Eeen two hour we hit de inlet."

"Good! If that is so, we're thirty miles ahead of them."

The Ojibway shook his head. "We tak' no chance—we travel lak' h—l!"

On shore the tea-pail was soon boiling, while David and Steele overhauled their scant supplies. There were barely beans, bacon and flour to do a week, and Nepigon lake was two weeks' hard travel. It meant shooting their way out, unless the fish would bite, for they had given their net to Michel.

"Let's have a look at the old Mannlicher," said Steele as David watched the bacon sputtering in the pan. "We may need her before we get out of this mess. I was a fool to stop there I might have—" He had thrown the bolt-handle up and back, when his face sobered. The startled eyes which met the inquiring gaze of the man at the fire drew a quick: "W'at you see—ghost?"

Making no reply, Steele sprang to the canoe, tore the lashings from a bag and fumbled with its contents—then emptied the bag on the beach. Taking David's rifle from the canoe, he opened the breach.

"Both guns empty!" he said in dismay. "They've got our shells—two boxes in the bag! Not a shot left—cleaned out!"

The white man looked long into the immobile face of the Indian.

"If they catch us—we're done! If they don't, we can't even shoot our way home. It's fish—or starve!"

The Ojibway squatted on his heels and resumed his frying. "Wal, boss," he said stoically, "we have beeg feed dis mornin'—den paddle lak h—l!"

For two hours the canoe was driven as only seasoned men can push maple paddles. Then, leaving the lake, they faced forty miles of the swift Rouge before they turned off on the portage to the Jackfish. Once on the Jackfish they could travel as fast as their pursuers, for from there it was all down stream to Nepigon. But the thought which added pounds to the thrust of pole and lunge of paddle through the travail and sweat of that October day was the chance of being headed by Indians sent overland to the Jackfish portage. With no shells for their rifles, they were at the mercy of the first half-breed to come up with them. So, without stopping at noon, the fleeing canoe pushed on up the Rouge, and not until dusk settled on the valley, was it turned to the shore.

There, unloading the weary crew carried boat and outfit back into the "bush" against the possible chance of their camp smoke being seen at daylight by those at their heels.

Dawn found them at their galley slavery with another back-breaking day to live through before the clearing of the Jackfish portage would open up ahead. Unless they were run down shortly, that night the fleeing canoe would ride the Jackfish, and they had won.

They were rounding a bend below a backwater when the man in the bow lifted his hand and pointed. In the shallows, not fifty yards away, stood a yearling moose.

"Meat to take us to Nepigon!" groaned Steele.

David slapped the water with the flat of his paddle. "Marche, you!" he cried, "or de cutt'roat behin' us wee! get you."

"One shell would have got him!" said Steele, ruefully, as the moose slowly turned and disappeared.

"Wal, I not wast' de last shot on moose," and the Indian held up a shining cartridge for the inspection of his friend.

"Where in the devil did you get that?" cried the amazed and delighted stern man.

"I fin' eet een de grub bag."

"And you never told me! Is that fair, David?"

"Wal, eef I tell you, you fire eet at de moose."

"Why not? We would have red meat then, to Nepigon."

The Ojibway shook his head soberly: "Daveed save eet for one of Laflamme's men."

To Steele, who felt now that sundown would find them at the Jackfish portage; that their pursuers were far in the rear; the words of David sounded unduly ominous. It was possible that some of the Indians on their trail could travel the forty miles of broken, bush-grown river shore in a night and a day, but he doubted it. So he laughed loudly at the square back of his friend when, an hour before sunset, they landed at Jackfish portage.

"Well, we did it, old boy!" cried Steele, slapping the knotted shoulder of the grinning David. "Now we'll take her all over in one trip or throw this museum stuff away. Can we do it?"

David nodded. "De carry to de lak' ees short. I tak' the canoe an' de Injun stuff. You tak' de rest."

"Man alive! It will go four hundred—with the boat."

But David was busy slinging his tump-line to the largest of the bags and made no answer.

So, after further protest, which the Indian brushed aside, Steele packed the three hundred pounds of bags on the Ojibway's wide back, and on top balanced the canoe, and the thick bow-legs of the red son of Anak moved steadily up the trail.

With the dusk, the canoe was in the Jackfish and the two men gripped hands in mutual congratulation. They had set Laflamme's gang a pace over a hundred miles of lake and river which they would not soon forget. Dropping downstream they camped in the thick spruce, back from the river, and for the first time in two days, baked cornbread for their beans and bacon, and feasted.

Beside a fire which the scrub masked at fifty feet, two men, at ease with the world, pulled on after-supper pipes. With a little luck in the pike lakes of the lower Jackfish, they could eke out their scanty food supply; and if, as seemed certain, they had left their pursuers hopelessly behind, the shell in David's rifle might bring them meat.

"Boss," said the Ojibway, after a period of silence which was characteristic, "I nevaire tell you w'y I hunt dis Laflamme."

From a revery in which Denise St. Onge again played to him on her Hill of Dreams, far in the north, Steele turned with interest to the speaker.

"No, I should like to hear."

"Eet was manee year back—ten, twelve. Dis Laflamme trade wid de 'Jibway up Los' lak' way. My brodder work for heem. He sen' my brodder an' 'noder man to mak' cache on de Pelican riviere. One day, beeg spruce log, she fall and hit heem in de back. De 'noder feller try carry heem ovair de portage but eet pain my brodder too much. He say, 'I stay here w'ile you breeng men from Los' lak. Dey tak' me ovair de long portage on de spruce pole!'"

For a long space David sat with head on hands, staring into the fire. Steele smoked in silence, waiting for the mood of his friend to change, when the rest would be told.

At length, David straightened and turned to the other, black eyes glittering, as he hoarsely demanded: "W'at you t'ink dat Laflamme say w'en de feller reach Los' lak'? Dees ees w'at he say: 'Dat man ovair on de Pelican ees dead by now. I got no men to sen'. You not go back; I got work for you wid beeg canoe down in Wabigoon.'"

Again David paused, his face black with his thoughts.

"So Laflamme left your brother to die alone—to starve?"

David nodded.

"Dat feller had fear of Laflamme, but he go back to de Pelican w'en he get chance."

"What did he find?" asked Steele.

"Nodin'."

"What?"

"My brodder crawl to de riviere an' drown heesel'—before he starve."

"David," said the man across the fire, "I want to apologize for keeping you off that snake. He was helpless and I thought if I allowed you to go back that night, and we were afterward overhauled, it would mean our finish; but now I wish you had throttled him."

"I had hard fight not to keel heem—but you're de boss," added the loyal Ojibway.

"You'll have your opportunity this winter—never fear."

"Mebbe; but dey may wait for us tomorrow at de Frying Pan."

"You still think that some of them may have been sent overland to cut us off?"

"Wal," said the cool half-breed, "eef I hunt canoe traveling dis way from Ogoke, dat ees w'ere I sen' dem."

"But they won't have had time to get there."

"Mebee not. Tomorrow we see." And the red stoic rolled himself in his blanket.

* * * * * * *

The stars still hung above the Jackfish, although there was a hint of dawn in the graying east, when a canoe slid swiftly through the shadows on the way to the Frying Pan rapids. Once over the carry around this roaring cauldron of white-water, into the spray of whose flumes and cross currents no man, red or white, had ridden a canoe and come through, and the two friends could snap their fingers at Laflamme's pursuing pack of wolves, for thirty miles of hard-running river, from which they would not lift their flying canoe, then lay before them.

As they paddled toward the carry above the thundering Frying Pan Steele asked the Indian whose eyes ceaselessly searched the shore below them: "Have these rapids ever been run?"

"No! Dey are ver' bad een some place," muttered David.

"Could we run them?"

The Indian shook his head.

"Then why did you insist on our having our setting poles handy?"

David did not answer.

"You're wasting your time watching that portage," laughed Steele.

Still the Ojibway ignored the man in the stern. Then the scoffer suddenly wondered why the bowman was edging the nose of the boat, as they drifted, away from the carry. A thrill shot through him. Had David seen something suspicious?

The boat was fast approaching easy rifle range. With his paddle buried, the Indian, simulating leisurely action, and followed by Steele, was rapidly adding to the distance between the canoe and the shore. But to the straining eyes of the American the scrub told nothing.

"What is it? I can't make anything out," demanded Steele.

Back from the bow came: "Keep on paddle; dey are dere!"

The words froze Steele where he kneeled.

On drifted the craft, ever edging farther and farther from the ambush. Stiff as stone knelt the man in the bow, outthrust arms rigid, eyes anchored to the beach, wrists alone in motion. Hunched in the stern, fingers fiercely gripping his paddle, Steele, marveling at the Ojibway's nerve, waited for his order. A hundred yards more and the suck of the first chute would draw them into the Frying Pan. The boat was now passing the portage, yet the rifles on the shore were silent. Then Steele understood. The plan was to drown them.

Realizing His Profits

He walked into a brokerage office several months ago, deposited $10,000 and bought some stocks on the firm's advice. No one saw him until lately when he walked in again and asked how much profit he had.

"Twenty thousand dollars, or thereabouts," replied one of the partners, after the account had been checked up.

"Sell my stocks and give me my profits in cash," the customer directed, after a few minutes.

As soon as the orders could be executed and a messenger returned from the bank, the partner counted out to him twenty one-thousand-dollar notes and some odd bills and change. He stuffed the money in his wallet and sat down. Then after he had enjoyed for half an hour the sensation of carrying his profits in his clothes, he pulled out the money, handed it back to the partner, and said:

"Buy all those stocks back again!"—Wall Street Journal.

Words

Words, too, are more than sounds; they are garners stored with history and the experience of generations of their users. Languages, also, have their distinctive characters, and forms of expression and meter suited to one language do violence to another. Even words seem to welcome the emotion, the rhythm which the poet brings, and respond to his touch.—Lascelles Abercrombie.

Wreaths on Statues Are Barred in London

One of the little-known forbidden things in London is to lay a wreath before a statue. Five Americans of Scottish descent brought a wreath of bay leaves to lay before the statue of Robert Burns in the Embankment gardens, the occasion being the 129th anniversary of his death and they being Americans who keep note of such things.

A park ranger caught them at it and soon stopped this rash attempt to add to the decoration of the Embankment gardens. He ascertained at once (as he suspected) that they had no official and properly sealed permission to lay a wreath on Robert Burns' memorial.

The Americans asked him what he would have done if they had laid their wreath before Burns without being seen. The ranger replied honestly enough that in that case he would have taken it off when he did see it. So the Americans took their wreath away sorrowfully and laid it before the bust of Lincoln at the Savoy hotel. But why should it be necessary to get permission to do so innocent and pleasing a thing as to lay a wreath before a statue?

Amateur Gardeners To Study Problems

Michigan's amateur gardeners, a class said to include a great majority of all the home owners in the state, will have an opportunity to study the particular problems of their "home" plantings during a special gardening short course which is to be given at the M. S. C. from March 22 to 27.

The program for the week's course includes everything from the proper laying out of the small grounds from the landscape point of view, to detailed cultural study on vegetables, flowers and shrubs. House plants, window boxes, and even the control of insect pests will also be taken up in the "school"

That many women-folks, as well as the men gardeners of the family will be interested in the gardening short course is the opinion of Prof. V. R. Gardener, head of the M. S. C. Horticultural Department, which is sponsoring the course. Emphasis on flowers and on the small home vegetable garden should appeal to the housewives

This year will mark the first time that the school for "amateur" gardeners has been offered at the college.

M. S. C. Enters New Educational Field

Creation of the office of Director of Continuing Education at the M S. C. has been announced here by the State Board of Agriculture. John D, Willard, at present director of agricultural extension work at the Massachusetts Agricultural College, has been selected to fill the new place and will assume his duties on September 1, 1926.

The new executive will have general administrative oversight of all educational activities of the college which are carried on "off the campus", in contrast to the resident teaching work. It is said, however, that the organization of agricultural and home economics cooperative extension work will remain under its present executive organization. The new office will correlate all of the extension activities, and will develop new lines of adult or "continuing" education.

It is believed that the M. S. C. is one of the first institutions in the country to accept the continuing education idea in its whole range, and the creation of the new Director of Continuing Education is referred to by President Kenyon L. Butterfield as probably one of the most important and far reaching actions ever taken by the State Board of Agriculture.

Mr. Willard, appointed to hold the new office, has had unusually thorough training for the place. Born in Wisconsin some 40 years ago, Mr. Willard received his education in the public schools of Amherst, Mass., at Amherst College, and at the Hartford Theological Seminary. His experience in later life includes a period as country preacher; social welfare work in the rural towns of western Massachusetts; secretary of the county farm bureau in a prosperous eastern agricultural county; secretary of the Massachusetts Food Supply Committee during the World War and director of extension work at the Massachusetts Agricultural College since 1919.

Mr. Willard has taken rank as a leader in national agricultural extension work and is in close touch with the economic and social problems of agriculture.

Aeroplane Travel Becoming Commonplace

Eddie Stinson of Detroit who has spent a large amount of his life in the air (so tis claimed, something like 11,000 hours) has just completed what is thought to be the best and most practical aeroplane for travel yet devised. Of course he does not advertise it for the populur bargain prices of $1.98 and $2.79, but from a description it looks as if all of us were going to ride in planes instead of "Flivvers" soon. Eddie's machine carries 4 passengers in a beautifully upholstered closed cabin with heating, cigar lighter and other modern conveniences. The machine has self commencer, brakes on the wheels and the latest 6-cylinder radial engine with a speed of 105 miles per hour, and is much easier to handle than the old-style plane. No men are required to start the propeller or turn the machine around on the ground, which will turn in its own length aud is much easier to steer than an auto. Eddie will organize a corporation immediately to manufacture this machine and put it on the market. As we understand it, the plane is of all-metal construction thus minimizing chances of burning.

Further than this the system of controls are such that the plane will guide itself and keep in an upright position without any assistance from the pilot, should anything occur to distract his attention. There remains just one important thing to be done. Aeroplanes must be so built as to rise perpendicularly from the earth, thus doing away with a large take-off field. This can be done and is being done, but mechanics have not yet reached that feature in building.

Ben Leiser of South Bend, Indiana, representing the Sinclair Oil Company who has been visiting his mother, Mrs. George Taylor, returned home Thursday.

Superintendent R. C. Young who has been our high school head for some time, has been offered and has accepted the position for another year which will be good news to most of the patrons and pupils.

The Oratorical contest to be held on April 8th at Hudson will be entered by two young ladies from North Adams high school Miss Ione Young whose subject is "The New South" and Miss Jean Young whose subject is "Importance of Good Heritage."

From Congressman J. C. Hooper of Washington, D. C., comes a splendidly bound memorial of the resolutions and speeches of Michigan men on the floor of Congress in Washington, following the death of Hon. J. M. C. Smith of Charlotte. This, we presume, is a contribution to every publisher in this district.

On page 6 of this issue will be found the ballot for Township Grant to Consumers' Power Co., of Jackson which the electorate will be asked to vote on at the regular election. It is for confirming the resolutions of the Township Board taken some time ago allowing the Consumers' Power Company the free use of all township roads and public places for its lines and poles. This, of course, doos not include the incorporated village of North Adams which must settle the question for itself.

In Memoriam

The body of Mrs. Mauck, beloved wife of President Emeritis Joseph W. Mauck, of Hillsdale College, arrived in the City from Cairo, Egypt, on Thursday. Upon arrival of the funeral party in Boston they were met at the wharf by a party group of Alumni. The body will be taken to the College Church on Friday to lie in state from 1:00 to 2:30 p. m. prior to the Memorial ser vices. Mrs. Mauck passed away February 21 at Cairo. She was a very popular lady in and about the institution of which her husband was president.

In her passing the student body has lost a valued friend the county a good citizen and the family a loving wife and mother.

William Carroll Bohn, youngest son of Coonrod Bohn, is very ill with the measles at the home of A. F. Moore at Melvindale. Miss J. M. Bohn is caring for him.

Daniel Hoxie who sustained a shock of paralysis does not improve as rapidly as his friends might wish. His daughter Mrs. Dick McBain has been called here from Moscow to help care for him.

Little Miss Margaret Mary Moore nine-year-old daughter of A. F. Moore of Melvindale and granddaughter of C. F. Bohn, of this place, has recovered from a severe case of scarlet fever.

Hugh Gochanour of Moscow was in North Adams on Wednesday on business relative to the township. Mr. Gochanour is candidate for Supervisor on the Democrat ticket and Ed McBain is Republican candidate for the same office in Moscow township.

Bert Wisner of Battle Creek visited his relatives in this vicinity the first of the week and returned home on Wednesday. Bert expects to journey to California soon as the guest of his son, who is engaged in the mining business there. Mr. Wisner also has a daughter in California.

T. N. Lamb who has been our efficient principal of High School for the past four years severs his connection with the end of the year in June. About the middle of the month they will remove to Horton where Mr. Lamb has been engaged as Superintendent of the High school with five teachers under his direction. North Adams will be extremely sorry to lose so efficient a principal but circumstances must be complied with. As yet no supply has been secured for this position in our high school.

Practically the last stand patters on bobbed hair in this village have finally capitulated and visited the tonsorial artist where their tresses were snipped off. It does beat all how contageous such diseases are. Speaking of bobbed hair we notice there is a vast difference in the effect produced on different ladies. Some are greatly beautified while others are rendered shop worn and dowdy. But then of course this is of minor importance so long as the style is followed. As a rule short dresses and white stockings are supposed to belong to the regular outfit, though sometimes not used. The universal prayer of mankind offered up to the God of Fashion is for a change of style and may it come right speedily.

Last Saturday the Superintendents and Coaches of schools in the county met at Jonesville and organized a County League for the furthering of aihletic sports such as basketball, football, track baseball and tennis. There are thirteen High schools to engage in the league as follows: Hillsdale, North Adams, Jerome, Jonesville, Camden, Montgomery, Litchfield, Allen, Frontier, Waldron, Pittsford, Prattville, Ransom. As we understand it these schools were very anxious to form such a League and will hold a universal field day this season beginning at 10:00 in the morning and all track events will be run off. In the afternoon the Northern and Southern parts of the county will engage in a ball game for the county championship. Hillsdale College has extended an invitation to all schools in the county to meet at the College grounds for the tennis event. The schools have the option of going in to the Field day or keeping out of it—as they see fit.

That age-old custom of electing township officials again occurs on Monday April 5th and as far as Adams Township is concerned there is no cause for worry no matter which party wins out. We firmly believe and expect the voters will use the best possible judgment in electing men who must guide the destinies of the township for the ensuing year. Mr. Stevens the Republican nominee has served many terms as Supervisor in this township and always his record has been of the best. His valuation of real estate and personal has always been incontestable. Mr. Shepard, the Democrat nominee, is also an efficient executive who has served two terms with absolute infallacy as far as we are able to learn. It is of small concern to the average citizen which of these men becomes the next Supervisor. Other officials lower down on the tickets will average up fairly well. More and more the voters of this township are coming to realize that party is one of the most asinine handicaps of obtaining good officials. Always on all tickets there are good, bad and indifferent, and it remains for the electorate to pick and choose which they should do with a conscience fully governed by the highest citizenship. The duty and responsibility of every voter who goes to the Polls should be as sacred as the man who raises his right hand to swear in as a qualified juryman on our dockets of criminal court. He is the Judge and Jury for the township and upon his personal choice will the future welfare of the municipality depend.

"There's a Week's Work of Fencing—Done in a Day"

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Germany's Election to the League of Nations Is Postponed.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

THE League of Nations assembly on March 17 voted to adjourn the question of Germany's election to the league until the September session. The vote came after announcement by Afranio Mello Franco, Brazilian representative, that the decision of his country not to vote a permanent council seat for Germany unless Brazil was given one at the same time, was irrevocable. Then Sir Austen Chamberlain gave notice that it would be impossible for him to propose the admission of Germany into the league at this time. He concluded a long speech by expressing the conviction that the September assembly would see "that great nation, Germany, assume her rightful place within the League of Nations."

As a result of this action there is profound disappointment among well-wishers for the League of Nations throughout Europe over the breakdown of the session of the league called to elect Germany to membership. In some countries the hope of an agreement at Geneva tending toward general peace and security is regarded as indefinitely deferred, and fears are expressed that there will arise political recriminations in their domestic politics which may add to the difficulties.

Such recriminations already have been strongly manifested in England, where the anti-government press is making every effort to bring about the political downfall of Sir Austen Chamberlain, the foreign secretary, who, with Premier Briand of France, is declared to be the author of the Geneva collapse. Chamberlain's mission will be discussed next week in the house of commons, and a vote of censure may be moved against him. In such a case the present indications are that he would be saved by the big conservative majority. There are some reports, apparently based on speculation, that he will forestall an attack by resigning.

It remains to be seen whether Premier Briand can inject his optimism regarding the future of the league into his countrymen. Dispatches from France reflect the disappointment over the failure at Geneva as are expressed elsewhere. Briand must resume his difficult task of restoring the financial situation of his country to normal. With the failure of the league to elect Germany to membership, his "security" ambition failed of accomplishment, as the Locarno pact cannot become effective until Germany is a league member.

Chancellor Luther and Foregin Minister Stresemann of Germany must face parliamentary fire, particularly on the part of the Communists and Nationalists, who will endeavor to unseat them.

THE Prince of Wales and Stanley Baldwin, the prime minister, figured in a "bombing" scare on St. Patrick's day which still is a source of mystery. While the prince was attending the St. Patrick's day banquet of the Irish club in London someone in a passing taxi threw into the entrance of the restaurant where the dinner was held a cardboard box from which acetylene fumes were escaping. An examination showed the contents included among other things moistened calcium carbide and a piece of tarred rope. No damage was done.

A similar "bomb" which blazed fiercely and emitted clouds of smoke was flung from the gallery of the Hotel Cecil where Mr. Baldwin was attending a St. Patrick's day banquet. It fell on the table not far from Mr Baldwin, rolled on the floor, and set fire to the carpet. Consternation was caused among the guests. A woman at a table near Mr. Baldwin fainted and was carried out. The prime minister, however, remained calm and the fireworks and burning carpet were soon extinguished.

There was nothing to show whether the missiles were mischievous pranks, or the manifestation of anger by persons with grievances or a political protest of some Irish irreconcilables against their countrymen's hobnobbing with British royalty and British ministers.

SENATOR SMITH BROOKHART (Rep., Iowa) will lose his seat in the upper house in favor of his Democratic opponent, Daniel F. Steck, if the senate elections committee upholds the report submitted by a subcommittee which holds that Steck was elected by a majority of 1,420 votes. The subcommittee report was presented by Senator Caraway (Dem., Ark). It was unanimous, the other members being Senator Ernst (Rep., Ky.), who is chairman of the full elections committee and the subcommittee; Senator Watson (Rep., Ind.), and Senator George (Dem., Ga.).

In holding that Steck is entitled to the seat the subcommittee took the position that the intent of the voters in the November, 1924, election should be recognized. Iowa election authorities threw out hundreds of ballots which were marked by arrows which were designed to make it clear that the voters desired to vote for President Coolidge and at the same time vote for the Democratic senatorial nominee. Arrows of this sort had appeared in newspaper ballots, and many voters, not being aware that such action might invalidate their votes, copied the marked ballots, arrows and all.

Senator Brookhart is one of the four members of the La Follette group read out of the party by action of the Republican senate caucus. If he is unseated he will be free to enter the primaries as a candidate against Senator Cummins (Rep., Iowa) and it is regarded as certain that he will make the race.

THE United States and other powers delivered an ultimatum to Chinese factions demanding that blockade of the port of Tientsin be ended and all impediments to harbor and river traffic be removed. The ultimatum, signed by signatories of the protocol of 1901, was handed to the commanders of the forts at Taku and Chinese vessels outside of Tientsin. The United States, Great Britain, Japan and Italy have a dozen or more naval craft in these waters. The protocol of 1901 made stipulation concerning the disarmament of forts at the mouth of the Pei river, on which Tientsin is located, and also guaranteed an open way to the sea.

The blockade has been preventing access to Peking from the sea and recently resulted in Chinese troops firing upon two Japanese destroyers.

EVIDENCE that the law has not yet caught up with the radio is shown by a peculiar case of "radio slander" that has occurred in Chicago. State's Attorney Robert E. Crowe was sitting at home the other night, listening to a radio program broadcast from a downtown cabaret. He was startled to hear the station's announcer tell the world that Mr. Crowe and some of his friends at that moment were seated at a conspicuous table at the cabaret, enjoying the entertainment.

Mr. Crowe ordered the arrest of the announcer, who was held in jail for twelve hours before he was formally charged with disorderly conduct. Mr. Crowe's assistants spent much of the intervening time trying to find some more serious charge to place against the prisoner, but there were none. The law has not yet caught up with radio. Mr. Crowe can sue the announcer for damages, but presumably cannot indict him. If, instead of telling thousands of listeners that Mr. Crowe was having a night out, the announcer had published a handbill to the same effect, he could have been charged with the crime of libel. The law makes that distinction between the spoken and the printed word. To defame a man by word of mouth is slander and no crime; to defame him by means of the printed word may be criminal libel.

Prosecution of the case against five defendants has been set for April 24 and the decision of the court may set an important precedent in bringing the laws of slander and libel up to date in this radio age.

ANOTHER important event in the radio world was the passage in the house of representatives by a vote of 218 to 124 of the White bill designed to create a federal radio commission of five members to co-operate with Secretary Hoover in keeping order in the air, where broadcasting and other forms of wireless in the past have operated in some instances with great confusion. The bill provides for the issuance of station and operators' licenses by the secretary of commerce. Opposition to it centered about the contentions of some members that no machinery was provided that would insure against radio monopoly and that it gave the secretary too much power.

Only one major amendment was added to the committee draft of the bill. This change, proposed by Representative Davis (Dem., Tenn.), struck out a provision to give the Commerce department the power to remit fines imposed for infraction of radio regulations. The five members of the radio commission would be appointed from five zones to be established. Operators who were refused licenses would have the right to appeal to the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. It was stipulated that the President should have power to close any station during war "or other emergency."

UNDER a suspension of the rules, hotly contested by a minority group, the house of representatives passed the Porter bill, authorizing the appropriation of $10,000,000 for the purchase or construction of adequate embassy and consular buildings in foreign capitals.

Under the terms of the bill, which was approved by the President, the budget bureau and the State department, expenditure of the money will be limited to $2,000,000 a year for five years, under the direction of a building commission, which will include three members of the house and representatives of the State department. The bill is designed to permit the concentration in one building of all government activities in a particular foreign capital.

MANUFACTURERS in the Middle West were rallying for a final fight against passage of the Gooding bill, pending in congress. If enacted, the bill would have the practical effect of preventing permanently the interstate commerce commission from rescinding its ruling against establishment of cheaper rail rates on certain commodities from Middle West points to Pacific coast cities.

Mid-West shippers take the position that without the cheaper "long haul" rates they cannot hope to compete with their rivals on the Atlantic seaboard on account of low rate water transportation via the Panama canal. Manufacturers say important industries are likely to desert Chicago for more favorable locations adjacent to water routes. Refusal of the commission to grant the request of industrial leaders of this section and of the transcontinental railroads, that the through rates be lowered, spurred to a greater activity opponents of the Gooding bill. Many believe the commission's ruling may weaken opposition to the bill in congress.

SECOND LIEUT. JOHN S. THOMPSON of the United States army was hanged for the murder of his seventeen-year-old fiancee, whom he said he could not live without or marry because of his insufficient salary. He was the first American officer to be executed in peace time.

Thompson killed Miss Audrey Burligh at Manila in the early morning of April 5, 1925. She was the stepdaughter of Capt. Hamilton P. Calmes, medical corps, and they were engaged to be married.

THE annual circus season this year will lack one of its greatest thrills for the children, according to word coming from headquarters of the big circuses at Peru, Ind.

The circus parade, it has been decided by showmen there, is to be abandoned. The high-priced performers, especially the Europeans, will not parade. The big circuses now visit only the larger cities, it is explained, and noonday traffic problems and the growing distance of the circus lot from the railroad make the parade physically impossible.

Ten years ago there were 20 circuses with trains of ten or more railroad cars. Now there are only a dozen, but these have expanded until the largest circus in the country travels with 1,500 persons, and the smaller ones carry about 600.

Says French Wives Are Happier Than American

New York.—American women do not have half the happiness in marriage that is enjoyed by the French, it seems to Mlle. Maza Nordau, daughter of Dr. Max Nordau, noted French political and philosophic writer. The American woman does not have nearly so much of her husband's society, says this French girl, nor does she share his interests or have with him a real companionship, as do French women.

"Oh, yes, the French women have always been most happy in their married life—" as surprise sits high in the interviewer's face. "Our French wit, our freedom of speech and manners, our theater, have given a different impression. But it is not the true one. In most cases our marriages are extremely happy. Husbands and wives share high ideals. There is a deep moral intimacy between them.

"The woman is the center of the home, and yet her interests are not confined to it. Her husband comes to her with many of the problems of his profession or political life—there is a saying in France, 'Cherchez la femme'—and it is true that for every man in a position of influence there is almost always a woman. More often than people think, it is his wife.

"Still, there are some bad laws for women. What French women would like to gain is a few improvements in their laws, without losing anything in the matter of the good position they now occupy with their men. And I believe we can do it."

MOTHER OF SEVEN CHILDREN

Helped in Caring for them by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Glasgow, Ky.—"I am the mother of seven children, the eldest being only 12 years, and I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped to pull me through the roughest places of my married life. At one time I was so downhearted that life was a misery. A friend in Indianapolis, Indiana, told me of the Vegetable Compound, and after taking a few bottles of it I became myself again and it was a pleasure to do my housework and gardening. Since then I always use your medicine when I feel weak from overwork and it straightens me out."—Mrs. Melissa Barders, Route 2, care of O. F. Steenbergen, Glasgow, Ky.

New Orleans, La.—"I could not do a thing after my first boy was born. I was so weak, I had no appetite, lost weight and was not able to do my work. I was this way for seven weeks, then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got wonderful results from it."—Mrs. C. Faurie, 4014 Dauphine St., New Orleans, La.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been growing in popularity among women for over fifty years.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Fremont—All service on the Big Rapids-White Cloud branch of the Pere Marquette Railroad has ended. The Interstate Commerce Commission, overruling the protests of business men along the line, granted the road's petition to abandon the branch. The property has been offered for sale.

Plymouth—Gas mains will be installed throughout an area of 2[illegible] square miles in the properties along Plymouth road from the city limits of Detroit to those of Plymouth, according to a tentative agreement recently arrived at by officials of the Marquette Park Development association and H. K. Wrench, manager of the Plymouth and Northville Gas company, subsidiary of the Michigan Federated Utilities of Battle Creek.

Detroit—Michigan's prohibition rally April 22 to 26 is designed primarily as the opening gun in the Anti-Saloon league's campaign to elect a Michigan delegation in congress this fall that be aridly inclined and contest any attempt to modify the Volstead law, R. N. Holsaple, head of the Michigan Anti-Saloon league said recently. Holsaple made public the league's plans for a monster rally in connection with the nation-wide prohibition demonstration.

Grand Rapids—Tax collections for the Western Michigan district on 1925 incomes seem likely to equal the 1924 payments despite the marked reduction in tax rates under the 1926 Revenue Act, according to Charles Holden, collector of internal revenue. Indications are the number of non-taxable returns will be the lowest since 1917. Receipts are averaging about $300,000 daily, but about 60 days will be required to check the totals accurately.

Grand Rapids—Better law enforcement was asked of the state administration by the Michigan division, Izaak Walton League of America, at its annual convention here recently. The report of the committee on resolutions submitted by H. A. Savage, Saginaw, chairman, adopted in full by the division, stressed the need of law enforcement as essential, in the interest of more forests, more game and more camping places, which were demanded by the division.

Ann Arbor—Three students who will represent the University of Michigan in the debates with Oxford, Cambridge and other English colleges in England, during May, were chosen here after a series of tryouts. The three selected are: Ephriam Gomberg, Duluth, Minn.; Gerald White, Lowell, and William King, Carthage, Mo. The Michigan team will leave Ann Arbor about May 1, with Professor R. D. T Hollister, of the public speaking department, who will act as coach.

Kalamazoo—George H. Wigginton, president of the Kalamazoo Loose Leaf Binder company, who after a conference with anti-Groesbeck factionists, recently declared his intention of entering the race for the Republican nomination for governor, has announced that he has reconsidered the matter and will not permit his name to be used. Wigginton says that he will devote his energies towards healing the breach in the party instead of uniting with any faction to widen it.

Jackson—Harry H. Freeman, who took office March 1 as Jackson city manager, was removed from office recently at a special meeting of the city commission. Freeman came here from Kalamazoo, where he was city manager for three years. "A number of occurrences," was the only explanation of Freeman's removal given by members of the commission. T. H. Knight, assistant city manager, was named acting manager by the commission.

Detroit—"The total number of illiterates in Michigan," said Mrs. Cora Wilson Stewart, director of the national illiteracy crusade, speaking before the Detroit Institute of Technology, "is 88,046. Of this number 29,954 are in Detroit. Michigan is one of the few states that had more illiteracy in 1920 than in 1910. The number increased 14,000. Michigan is seventeenth among the states in illiteracy and nineteenth, based on native born whites."

Traverse City—J. H. Dugal, Charles Provencher and Charles Bracken, all former employes, have purchased the stock and business of the Brown Lumber company, local pioneer firm, and will continue the business under the name of Brown Lumber & Supply Co. It was announced recently. Dugal will act as president, Provencher as vice-president, and Bracken as secretary-treasurer. The purchase was made from W. W. Parr, for years owner of the company, but whose chief interests are now in Manistique.

Ferndale—The district on the east side of Woodward avenue in Ferndale known as Urban Rest, is to have complete mail service beginning April 1, it has been announced by Superintendent John W. Allison, in charge of the Ferndale branch of the Detroit postoffice. Due to the lack of sidewalks in this section it has received unsatisfactory service heretofore. The district is bounded by the Nine and Ten Mile roads on the south and north, by Chester road on the east and by Grand road on the west.

Lansing—It is possible that re-opening of the telephone rate investigation by the state public utilities commission may react favorably to Detroit subscribers, whose temporary victory in obtaining a reduction in rates is now questioned by the Michigan Bell Telephone company in federal court proceedings. As conditions now stand, Detroit phone users are guaranteed the reduced rates at least until federal court makes a finding on the company's petition to restrain enforcement of the January 7 order on the ground it is confiscatory.

Backache Wearing You Out?

Every day find you miserable with backache? Suffer sharp, stabbing pains? Feel lame and stiff—always tired, nervous and dispirited? Then look to your kidneys! Your kidneys are the blood filters. Perhaps they have failed to properly rid the blood of body poisons. Naturally, then, you suffer the injurious effects of this slow poisoning. Don't risk neglect! If your kidneys need help, use Doan's Pills. No other kidney diuretic is so well recommended nor so successful. Ask your neighbor!

LAURA WALWORTH, EDITOR

From The Athletic Field

The high school senior was quietly investigating something. Just what his fellows did not know but it seemed to be about smoking, and as he was the best all-round athlete in the school, captain of the track team, quarterback on the eleven, member of the glee club, a fine student and a general trusted favorite, the boys freely gave him the information he asked for, especially as they knew he would keep his promise not to reveal the name of any fellow who had given him a special piece of information.

The principal of the high school allowed him to consult the school records of marks and attendance, and so as a piece of senior school work X—finally prepared his report on the effect of smoking on student efficiency.

He found there were three groups of boys: (1) Those who had never taken up the habit of smoking; (2) those who had smoked more or less but had given it up; (3) those who were habitual smokers. Here is what he discovered about the boys of the second, and third years of the high school. Their average percentage during the entire time they had been in the high school was as follows:

36 Non-smokers 83 percent. 20 reformed smokers, 79 percent. 38 Smokers, 76 percent.

There were 62 Freshmen in this high school. Here are their marks: 41 Non-smokers, 84 percent. 4 Reformed smokers, 82⅓ percent. 17 Smokers, 76 percent.

(Report by R. L. Sandwick in The School Review.)

Most interesting of all perhaps were the records of those who had recenty learned to smoke, for the marks showed a slump after they began the practice.

Before they began to smoke their general average of marks had been 85 percent; afterwards, it fell to 78 percent. One young man who confessed to having smoked fifty cigarets in a single day, when he learned these facts stopped his smoking, and in six weeks his marks increased 10 percent on the average.

The ten boys in school having the highest rank averaged 90.9 per cent in marks; not one of them used tobacco. The ten smokers having the highest rank could only show an average of 78.9 percent.

Twenty five boys had dropped out of school in the three preceding years without finishing their course. They were all smokers and not one of them had good marks Their average grade in all studies was only 60 percent or six points below the passing mark.

Here is what the principal of that high school concluded about smoking by the boys:

1. The boy who has a hard time to keep up with his class anyway, if he takes to smoking fails in his work and drops out of school. He smokes away whatever chance he had.

(2). The boy who makes a practice of smoking is seldom a success in high school sports or athletics.

(3). The really ambitious boy knows better than to spoil his scholarship and athletic chances by smoking.

Smoking not only reduces scholastic ability but it reduces athletic honors. Does Charles Paddock, the world's fastest sprinter, dare to smoke? Paddock has run the hundred yards in nine and three fifth seconds, perhaps, a dozen times, besides settling many other world's records. Do you think that Paddock could have established that long string of world's records if he had been poisoning his system with tobacco or alcohol, or carrying any other questionable habits at that time?

Ask William Tilden, greatest of all tennis champions, if he would dare to smoke? Would he spend weeks in arduous training and then take a chance of missing the ball through the use of tobacco?

The next time a smoker tells you that tobacco does not hurt him, ask him if he honestly believes that Paavo Nurmi would have been able to accomplish his miraculous performances in setting new distance running records, week after week, last winter if he smoked tobacco? Did you ever see a heavy smoker try to run even two blocks? Ask Nurmi. He will tell you that he neither smokes nor drinks, and that he never has.

Even the most ordinary athlete will tell you that tobacco hurts your wind, which may mean not merely that it impairs your breathing capacity, which is taxed under the test conditions of distance running, but that it also impairs the power of your blood cells to rapidly pick up and carry oxygen in sufficient quantities to the lungs.

Coaches and winning athletes recognize that tobacco is harmful even before the "margin of safety" for training to win is exhausted.—National W. C. T. U.

"The Truth"

There is poetry in the soul of L. C. Wright, president of the Kalamazoo Real Estate Board. Despite his unceasing daily activities in the realty and investment field, he finds time to woo the muse. Practical things cannot wholly still the singer. Now and then he sings for the pleasure of the children; how and then in a more serious vein. His latest effort, "The Truth", is religious and discloses a belief unfaltering. The verses follow:

Truth is the force by which we rise
To meet the God of earth and skies,
His knowledge, love and power partake
All foolish ways and thoughts forsake.
Deep hidden things of Him we know
As in His light we live and grow,

Error has no constructive force
To help man on in upward course,
To make him ever nobler grow,
Away from things of earth below
Toward things of worth and high degree
That set his soul at liberty.

Tried as by fire a thing must be
To prove its perpetuity.
The more severely truth is tried
The more its strength is multiplied
Error, in crucial test, is found
Without foundation, false, unsound.

Deceptive error may the while
The simple mind of man beguile,
But when at length it runs its course,
Is found to be destructive force,
Man casts it down and turns to find
The truth that blesses all mankind.

Things builded up mankind to bless
The greater doubter must confess,
Are built by truth's eternal power
Which stands the test of trying hour;
Nor fails, through centuries of time,
To prove the worth of truth sublime.

The civilization we enjoy
Was built by man in God's employ.
Deep, deep in truth its base is set,
Man's every challenge it has met
And no religion, creed or race
Can move it from this solid base

Truth will forever elevate
And lift man up to high estate,
And never will man backward move
If truth and God he learn to love.
'Tis well, if we but learn in youth
That truth is God and God is truth.

In Christ was truth personified;
He who for man was crucified
God's central truth must ever be,
To do his words is to be free.
For every twice born man doth say
"I find in Christ the Truth, the Way."

Start Corn Borer Station At Monroe

Establishment of a special European Corn Borer experiment station in Monroe County this spring, with the M. S. C. and the bureau of entomology of the U. S. Department of Agriculture cooperating in the project, was announced here this week by R. S. Shaw, dean of agriculture at the college.

An entomologist from the bureau of entomology at Washington and a crops man from M. S. C. will be in residence permanently at the new station. A complete experimental program aimed at study and development of methods of controlling the dangerous crop pest will be undertaken. The corn borer has already spread over much of southeastern Michigan, offering a problem of immediate and vital importance for the agriculture of the state.

That the work of the new station will be purely experimental in nature is pointed out by authorities at the college. The State Department of Agriculture, at Lansing, is handling quarantine and other control measures for the corn borer. The Monroe sub-station will merely aim at developing information necessary in adequate control work.

The entomology and farm crops departments at M. S. C. will have direct supervision of the college end of the Monroe station work.

Noon programs sent out on week days from radio station WKAR, the M. S. C. have recently been expanded greatly. Weather forecasts have been broadcast from this station at 12 noon, Eastern Time, for the past year, but in recent weeks bulletins on state highway snow conditions and a 15 minute program of farm questions and answers have been added, Livestock market reports from Detroit and Buffalo markets are also to be added to the WKAR noon programs.

Conditions this year in regard to seed corn are said by Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the college crops department, to compare wiih those of the disasterous 1917 season. The same situation is said to exist throughout the corn belt and northern states.

Full information on testing seed corn is contained in bulletin number 289 of the Michigan Experiment Station, "Corn Growing in Michiganr." This bulletin may be secured free on request from Director R. S. Shaw, Michigan Experiment Station, East Lansing.

Citizens Military Training Camp

Again we are requested to announce by the Commanding General that Camp Custer training Camp will be open again for citizens training July 6th 1926 and continue to August 6th. The capacity is 1878 young men and it is presumed the quota will be more than filled long before the time comes to begin.

The General says that already 278 applications have been received. Col. Raymond Sheldon 85th Division Detroit will be in command this year and it goes without saying the Colonel will make it as pleasant as possible for everybody concerned this year. Many of the applicants have been to Camp Custer before or are chums in the Y. M. C. A. of the others.

We are informed that Congress failed to appropriate enough money to fully establish the larger camps and so it will be necessary to conduct several smaller camps this year, consequently Michigan will have two camps one at Custer and one at Fort Brady.

Any healthy youth between the ages of 17 and 24 years of good moral character is welcome to come to these camps and indulge in the splendid athletic training the discipline and rifle practice etc. The Boys' fare is paid to and from the camp on the railroad and every lad is advised to get his application in right now as the quota will be filled early as above stated. You can apply to any county Committeman near you or send your request to 85th Division Headquarters 204 New Telegraph Building Detroit Mich, or Commander Sixth Corps 1819 Pershing Road Illinois. For some strange reason the applications from Hillsdale county do not seem to come in as rapidly as on might hope for—but too many wait until it is too late to get in on this.

"The well painted house brings more"
CLEAN UP & PAINT-UP

Real estate men know that well kept property is more valuable—for sales, or rental, or a loan. They know also that a paint-needy house drags down the value of all other property in the neighborhood.

Francis Hopkinson

Helping a pretty girl to escape to England so that she may marry the man of her choice is a scheme not usually associated with such dignified worthies as the Signers of the Declaration of Independence the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of which will be observed by the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition in Philadelphia this year.

Yet Francis Hopkinson, of New Jersey, was one of three romantic youths who assisted the lovely Elizabeth Shewell to escape from the custody of her brother so that she might flee to England to wed Benjamin West, who later was to become famous as a portrait painter. His colleagues in the escapade were none other than Benjamin Franklin and William White, the latter destined to become the first Episcopalian bishop in America. Thus writes Robert Shackleton in "The Book of Philadelphia."

Hopkinson was the first student enrolled at the University of Pennsylvania and was graduated with the first class. He read law with Benjamin Chew and was admitted to the bar. He was a member of Congress in 1776, and became distinguished during the Revolution through his political and satirical writings.

In January, 1778, while the channel of the Delaware was nearly free or ice, a number of Whigs at Bordentown, N. J., sent torpedoes floating down the stream in the form of kegs filled with powder, and arranged a mechanical device causing them to explode when brought in contact with any other object afloat, as an offensive against British craft. One of them, touching a piece of ice in front of the city, exploded and created intense alarm. For twenty-four hours afterward not a thing was seen floating on the river without being fired at by musket or cannon. The event greatly amused the Americans and Hopkinson subsequently wrote his famous satirical poem, "The Battle of the Kegs."

Hopkinson lived in Bordentown a place made gay in early times by the festivities of Joseph Bonaparte who had been King of Spain and Naples, and of a long succession of titled men, generals and statesmen.

A social note appearing in the "Pennsylvania Chronicle and Universal Advertiser" of September 5, 1768, reads as follows: "On Thursday last, Francis Hopkinson Esq., was joined in the Velvet Bonds of Hymen to Miss Nancy Borden, of this place, a lady amiable both for her internal as well as external accomplishments."

Champions among student livestock judges in the short course division at M. S. C., as announced here recently, show that the young cattle experts have developed real efficiency in the judging ring. Winners in the various contests held at the end of the short course terms this month come from widely scattered sections of the state. First place in the total standings went to L. M. Carter, of Lake Odessa, with a score of 895 out of a possible 1,000. Others in order among the leaders were: A. E. Holtforth, Fenton; S. I. Hesche, Lowell; M. J. Rowe, Flushing; D. I. Chapman, South Rockwood; J. C. Vanderstar, Fibre; G. M. Cutler, Plainwell; W. D. Wolfgang, Ypsilanti; L. F. Reinhold, Saginaw; and H. N. Campbell, Kalamazoo.

The past few days our citizens have sustained dislocated necks more or less by gazing skyward at Henry Ford's planes which seem to have invaded our heretofore quiet atmosphere. There is a suspicion that these planes may be regular mail carriers between some southern cities and Detroit, and if so each day will find them passing over the village. Didn't know we were on a interstate mail route. Why not invite Henry to establish a landing place on top of the Town Hall and post our letters accordingly?

Is Envelope Printing A Part of The Government's Business?

Just now there is a big agitation on concerning the Government printiug contracts which include large quantities of envelopes for the public trade all stamped with your return card on the corner, and our representatives in Washington are especially urged by home printers to put a stop to this injurious practice. The small newspaper and job printing establishments throughout the land are the hardest hit by this government competition and no one is more to be thanked for up-building the country-at-large than the country offices. The main question involved is "Has the United States Government the right to engage in commercial printing as opposed to the private individual citizen?" The loss of business to small printers through this form of competition is much larger than a novice would suspect—since an envelope is a necessity everywhere for all business men and no one expects he ought to buy them for a price comparatively lower than that which allows at least a profit of 30 percent on the original time and stock schedule. Uncle Sam is doing this work and furnishing envelopes at a price considerably smaller than that. The sentiment in Congress at Washington is growing rapidly toward a crystalization in favor of abolishing Government envelope printing. Of course there is bitter opposition and always will be, but in the end Representatives will find it thoroughly decent and loyal to protect the private printer who has to pay his taxes to help support the public institutions, though it hardly seems proper he should pay the taxes on an institution which is designed to put him out of business.

We are constantly beseeched by big interests all over the country to furnish free publicity though cutely disguished articles written up as matters of history or local information. Most of these little speels find their way to the waste basket in this shop as we do not care to go on record as panderers of free publicity, when as a matter of fact we know that many of those firms who want to be advertised in this way are richer than a Jew and may have made most of their fortunes by begging. Recently we received a long free write-up of Ypsilanti and the Huron River as related to practical hydro-electric development fostered by the Henry Ford interests. We are a great admirer of Henry Ford but fail to see why we should advertise his already enormous business free of charge. We admit his articles are well written and furnish much of interest to the citizen of this state, but there is that element of publicity which we should be paid for. Once upon a time the Ford Motor Company of Detroit (the Mightiest in the world) decided to advertise its wares in the small country weeklies of Michigan. The service was bravely started and maintained for a short season—but suddenly the advertising department withdrew the whole thing, giving as an excuse the smaller publishers were not business-like in their rendering of bills, etc and as this Motor Company wanted its ads ran subject to certain schedules and everything conducted right they could not bother with small papers. We were somewhat surprised in view of the fact that this paper had always boomed Mr. Ford personally and in fact we make bold to declare that in all probability we have given the motor king five hundred dollars' worth of free publicity because we thought he was a good American who was using his influence for the betterment of mankind. and we are positive that a large number of other small papers have done the same thing. In view of this and other matters we shall return the nicely written essay on Ypsilanti history to the senders with our regrets. The kindly service we may have rendered to Mr. Ford because we thought he was a good citizen, we donate cheerfully but when it comes to furthering his investment enterprises we demur. It is hardly fair to us.

A Recent cynical definition of a university is that it is "a Stadium with a School of Business administration attached." During the recent football season there has all too frequently seemed to be a basis of half truth which this cynical sigh needed for its prosperity. In the midst of this athletic frenzy the action of Syracuse University in maintaining its scholastic standards to such an extent that many of its notable athletes were forced to bid a reluctant goodby to the campus, comes as a gleam of hope to those old fashioned folks who still regard a university as an educational institution. Steadily, persistantly, unswervingly during the last two or three years Syracuse has been raising its standards and has done so without favoritism. Its motto seems to have been "Hew to the flunk line, let the heads fall where they will." This action of Syracuse has received favorite editorial comment from all parts of the country. There has been considerable fear that in a few years the college curriculum at some institutions would look something like this: "Major subjects—Forward Passing, End Runs, Line Bucking and Drop Kicking. Minor subjects—Base Stealing, Hammer Throwing and the 220 yard Hurdles All students must elect one major and one minor." Any emphasis on mind in an age of muscle is something to be grateful for.

That's all right—You won't need any money when we go to Harbor Springs next June to attend the Regular Summer Outing of the Michigan Press Association. SUCCESS IN AMERICA AN OPEN HIGHWAY

How Four Boys of Humble Origin Have Become Chiefs of the Greatest Financial Organization in the World.

Broad highways of achievement are wide open to all in America no matter how humble their beginning, it is brought out by a writer in Forbes Magazine, telling of the successive elevation of poor boys to the chieftainship of the most powerful association of financial power in the world.

"Nowhere is opportunity so democratic as in caste-free America, nowhere is recognition for faithful service so little conditioned by inherited position and wealth," the article says. "The bounty of America in bestowing her rewards of great success upon those of modest origin is again notably manifest in the rise of Oscar Wells to the presidency of the American Bankers Association.

"The son of a tanner, John H. Puelicher, was elected to this eminence in 1922. Circumstances ended his public schooling in the seventh year and he went to work in a carpet store in Milwaukee. At sixteen he entered a bank as a clerk, rising step by step until he became president. Recognition of his abilities as a banker and civic service through public education in sound economic understanding brought him the highest reward from his profession.

"A former country school teacher, Walter W. Head, born in a farm hamlet in Western Illinois, was elected president of the association in 1923. He gave up teaching and a salary of $75 to enter banking at $40 a month in a small Missouri town. He subsequently became president of a bank in Omaha, the largest in Nebraska and a dozen neighboring states. The position he occupied in advancing agricultural welfare during the period of depression led to his being called the 'Granger President of the American Bankers Association.'

"From Irish immigrant lad to supreme head of banking in America epitomizes the career of William E. Knox, president of one of the largest savings banks of the country in New York. His business career began as an office boy in a publishing house, and he later entered the bank as a clerk. Experience with humble people in their problems of personal finance and his inculcation of economy in all matters attracted country-wide attention.

"Oscar Wells, who rises in 1925 as successor of these men, was born in an old weather-boarded log cabin house in the Missouri River bottoms of Platte County, Missouri. He became an orphan when three years of age, losing his parents in an epidemic that ravaged the countryside. He passed under the care of an uncle, head of a small country bank in Platte City, a town of a few hundred inhabitants, growing up on a farm and receiving his early education in a rural school. He later entered Bethany College, West Virginia, but at the end of his junior year he had to quit college and go to work in the bank."

His subsequent career was one of steady progress, first to higher positions among small country banks, then to larger city banks in Texas, where he rose to the top. In 1914 he was chosen first governor of the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank and served through the opening period of the establishment of that institution. He resigned to become president of a bank in Birmingham, Alabama, which has grown under his administration to be one of the largest and most successful institutions in the South.

HUGE GROWTH IN SCHOOL SAVINGS

New York.—School savings in the United States for the year 1924-1925 increased in aggregate bank balances by $5,500,000, with a growth of 620,000 in the total number of pupils participating, it is shown in reports made to the American Bankers Association, which declares that the returns encourage belief in the permanence of school savings as a part of the educational program in the public schools.

During the year the number of reporting school savings systems increased from 683 in 742 districts to 760 in 1,557 districts, the number of schools from 9,080 to 10,163, the number of pupils participating from 2,226,326 to 2,869,497, the deposits from $14,991,535.40 to $16,961,560.72 and the bank balances from $20,425,144.64 to $25,913,431.15, says W. E. Albig, in charge of the Association's savings activities.

Since 1920, the first year for which comprehensive statistics are available, the number of schools having school savings banking has increased 271.4 per cent, the enrollment in school savings districts 278.9 per cent, participants 520.2 per cent, deposits 504.1 per cent and bank balances 516.2 per cent.

"Can we run it?" he called, above the thunder of the white-water, muscles set in a crouch, nerves raw with suspense.

"Down, flat!"

With a fierce lunge of his blade, David swung the nose of the craft toward the beach as an Indian rose to his feet in the low scrub. In mockery of his victims the assassin laughed as he deliberately raised his rifle. But the Mannlicher with the lone shell spat first and the surprised Ojibway crumpled where he stood.

"Down!" cried David. A rifle exploded on the shore, and the men in the boat again flattened, as a bullet splintered the gunwale. Then, caught in the pull of the first pitch, the canoe slid sidewise, until straightened by the lunge of two paddles, and nosed down, out of range of the beach, into the white half-mile of the boiling Frying Pan.

The thought of two women who would wait for his coming—the mother at home and the girl far on the Walling—wait while two battered bodies lay stiff in the ice somewhere along the Jackfish, flashed through Steele's brain, then the battle was on.

As the boat shot down the first flume, the stark despair which had gripped Steele when they had been sucked into the head of the rapid, gave way to desperate hope. For it was clear, from the insistence of David on the poles being free in the boat, that he had foreseen the possibility of being driven into the Frying Pan. He believed the fight to get through worth making.

On leaped the canoe, like a runaway horse, ever seeking the black water channels, hanging momentarily on the lip of disaster, only to be lifted and swung off by the pole of the fighting bow-man; burying its nose in the spume of broken water, to rise, shake free, and plunge on into the white riot beyond.

Finally, as the rock walls of the gorge swept past in a gray blur to eyes which hunted the water trail ahead, David's right hand shot up and circled in the air, then regripped his paddle.

"Whirlpool!" gasped Steele, the hope which had grown with the passing moments, dying.

A matter of seconds and they would take the big chute ahead; beyond this, the suck of the whirling water. Once in the grip of the eddy, the canoe would up-end and go down—into the maw of the vortex.

From braced knees the bow-man, leaning far out-board, with bowed back, fought the nose of the boat inshore as it plunged and took the chute; then, as it shot with the current for the pool below, two madmen battled with their blades for the inches—inches which meant victory or—

With a leap the canoe hit the pool; wavered, caught in the lip of the eddy; but held by the lunging blades, sheered off, was free, and shot on; then, charging through a stretch of broken water, rode the "boilers" below the last pitch and out into the easy going of the open river.

With legs awash in the slop picked up in the rapids, panting, spent, the two men smiled into each other's drawn faces.

"We licked 'em both, Laflamme and the Frying Pan!" gasped Steele.

"Good job, dat!" grunted the Ojibway, proudly, between breaths. "Dey say we lie—w'en we tell dem—at Nepigon. Now we cum back—an' get de Windigo!"

"And Laflamme!"

"We get heem anyway—de Windigo, mebbe."

"Thought you said it couldn't be run?"

"Wal, I look her ovair one tam, and I t'ink eef you keep lef' side ov dat eddy, you can run eet."

"We beat it, but I thought it had us when we struck it. I heard but one shot from the shore when we started; do you suppose that there were only two there?"

"Onlee two, I t'ink. Dey wait for us to come een. W'en I hit dat one, de odder get scare. He not know 'bout dat shell. Dat ees w'y he miss."

"That was good shooting, David! You fired so quickly, you couldn't have seen the sights—and our only shell."

"Wal, we drop down piece, get de water out, and patch her up. I got two bad leaks under me."

"Suppose that Indian follows down the gorge, he'll get a pot shot at us if we go ashore here."

David laughed loudly. "W'en he see us hald for de Fryin' Pan, he say: 'Bo-jo! Dere go two dead men!' He weel not follow."

CHAPTER XI

For a week the two voyageurs had traveled on half rations eked out with an occasional pike or dore, which had been lured with much patience from their winter lethargy, but each morning as they ruefully surveyed the fading food supply, Steele had reiterated: "You can't starve two men who've run the Frying Pan!"

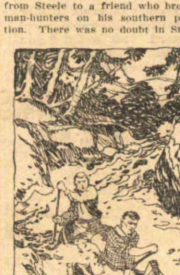
Then followed silent hours of paddling in which the thoughts of David centered largely on the future consumption of savory moose steaks at Nepigon House, while for Steele, heart hunger and the necessity for an early solution of the problem at Walling River had served as anodyne to his craving for food.

Another week and Steele was hurrying east on the Canadian Pacific. Arriving in New York and reporting at the museum, he readily obtained permission to follow up this most amazing example of the abnormal in the habits of Canadian mammals, inextricably involved with Indian superstition in so baffling a manner as to defy any ordinary methods of solution.

On the way west, Steele made frequent trips to the baggage car to talk to a long-eared, wrinkle-faced hound.

"If I had had you, old boy, last September, up on Big Feather lake," he often repeated regretfully, rubbing the ears of the great black and tan beast, "there would be one less Windigo in the Walling River country. I don't know what you can do on the snow. You may freeze in that country, with your short hair, but you're surely going to have a chance to help us out when we lose a trail. The huskies haven't got your nose, and won't hold to a trail as you will. And when that fog-horn bay of yours booms out over the hills, there's going to be a general scramble for cover among the beasts and devils that hear it."

The bloodhound, trained in the Tennessee hills, had arrived in New York in response to an urgent telegram from Steele to a friend who bred the man-hunters on his southern plantation. There was no doubt in Steele's mind that the riddle of the Windigo would have been solved in the autumn, had he had a bloodhound at Walling River. But the ability of the southern-bred dog to hold a trail on the strange medium of snow or ice was a matter outside the experience of those he had consulted. However, as there would be no crust until March, daylight tracking would be easy in the new snow. It was for night work when the absence of shadows obliterates a snow trail, and when a trail followed wind-swept ice, that Steele had gambled on the sensitive nose of the bloodhound to aid them.



"Whirlpool!" Gasped Steele, the Hope Which Had Grown With the Passing Moments Dying.

In his wallet he carried a sealed letter of instruction from the Montreal headquarters of the Revillon Freres, addressed to Lascelles at Fort Albany, supplementing orders to be sent with the Christmas mail packet by the Abbitibi route. But, as he was informed, "business was business," and the payment to the company of the value of the fur lost by St. Onge would not justify the management, against the advice of their inspector at Albany, in keeping the post open, as it had never done well.

At Ottawa, Steele had been assured that a police canoe would be despatched to Ogoke in the early spring, but that all available men would be on duty elsewhere during the winter on more pressing matters.

So, as his train carried him west through the white wilderness to Nepigon station, where David was to meet him with the best dog-team obtainable, the problem he faced continued unchanged by his trip east. It still remained for Michel, David and himself unaided, to run down the beast or beasts which had spread terror through the valley of the Walling, and to hold the Indians on their traplines. There was yet the mysterious tragedy at the Devil's Mile to be solved before the taboo would be lifted from the lower river.

At Nepigon station a five-dog sled, driven by a half-breed, waited in the snow for the passenger with the bloodhound, and only the swift use of David's long, caribou-hide whip saved the dazed beast from speedy annihilation by the team of half-wild huskies.

"Hello, David!" cried Steele, keeping his dog at a distance from the white fangs which threatened him. "Are the trails open?"

"De Jackfish bin close onlee few day. You cum back queek, boss," answered the Ojibway, a wide grin furrowing his face.

"We've got plenty of planning to do at Nepigon house before we start. Guess how many shells I've got for your Mannlicher."

"Wal, I need one for fr'en' ov yours, an' 'noder for bear dat seeng lak de cat—two ees all, I t'ink."

Steele laughed. "Oh, I've got a few more than that for you. You may need moose, or meet someone at the Frying Pan some time, so I've brought you three hundred. How's the family? Does your wife object to your going?"

"She say she t'ink I got girl down at Walling Riviere."

Three days of sledding over a good trail, for the snow was not deep, brought the team to Nepigon House at the head of the great Nepigon lake which was partly iced over. There, while the bloodhound, wearing a blanket, became somewhat more acclimated to the cold, and the huskies were forcibly taught to respect him as a permanent member of the party, David and Steele made their plans for a campaign on the snow.

Each white mile they put behind them, each camp they made at night, meant to the impatient Steele, one mile, one day, nearer the girl who needed them. But, as he broke trail ahead of the team, when they cut back from the shore to circle rapids or quick-water, or rode in the easy going of the river ice, the task he had set for himself and his two friends appeared more and more difficult of accomplishment. Suppose the Windigo were not again to appear in the valley; or, they might not again cross its trail? What then? The harm had been done, and the Indians would continue to desert the Walling as the rumors spread.

In that case, it was a lost cause—hopeless. Only in the event of the early reappearance of the beast at the post when they could speedily take up the trail and stay on it until they came up with the owner of the voice, could a swift solution of the mystery be possible. The future looked gray to Steele.

However there was one ray of light in the gloom of his fear of failure. Michel had definite suspicions, of some nature or other, which he had promised to share on Steele's return to Walling River. And as Steele and David nightly sat under their shed tent before a fire in the heart of a spruce thicket, and talked over after-supper pipes, the optimism of David was so marked that the American knew that the clue which had, for some reason, been kept from him deeply impressed the Indian.

At last, through the early dusk which shut down on the valley one November afternoon, gleamed the yellow lights of Walling River.

The pulse of Steele speeded as he made out the blurred shape of the house which Denise St. Onge called home. The morning he went away she had come to him with mist in her eyes. Would they shine again, he wondered, with that new light, now that he had come back to fight for her, or would she freeze into that other self—hold him at a distance because of her quixotic bargain with Lascelles?

Steele opened the door of the trade-house, followed by David. At their entrance, St. Onge turned in his chair behind the slab counter where he sat in conversation with his head man.

"Good evening, gentlemen!" The voice of Steele rang in the silent room.

With eyes wide with amazement and surprise, St. Onge slowly rose to his feet, while the lean face of the Iroquois thrust forward, tense, apprehensive, as if he feared a trick of vision.

"Bo'-jo', Michel! W'at you t'ink you see, de Windigo?" And David advanced with outstretched hand.

"We have returned as we promised, monsieur!" added Steele, approaching the counter behind which the startled men stood staring at the hooded apparitions.

Then, with a yell and a bound, Michel cleared the counter and was hugging the blocky Ojibway.

Growth of Law Library

A law library which would have been complete, with all of the volumes of American decisions and all of the volumes of American statutes, has recently been calculated to have contained one hundred years ago about 180 volumes of decisions and 60 volumes of statutes, says the Nation's Business magazine. Today, it is said, a library which would be complete in the same sense would contain 18,500 volumes of decisions and 5,500 volumes of statutes. One hundred years in the future, if the increase during the last century is maintained, such a library would have to contain 1,850,000 volumes of decisions and 550,000 volumes of statutes.

Electricity the Cause of Auroral Displays

Aurora Borealis, Northern Lights or Streamers, Aurora Polaris and Australis, and Polar Light are the different names given to an electrical meteor, appearing most frequently in high latitudes in the form of luminous clouds, arches and rays, the latter sometimes meeting at a point near the zenith, forming what is called a "boreal crown." The generally accepted theory is that the aurora is due to the ascent of positive electricity from the intertropical water surfaces, which flow toward the poles. In the polar regions it descends toward the earth and comes in contact with the terrestrial negative electricity, which results in luminous discharges of great brilliancy. Intimate relations exist between sun spots, magnetic storms and auroras, the appearance of a large spot on the solar disk being almost invariably accompanied by a magnetic storm in all parts of the globe. During magnetic storms auroral displays usually take place, but not all auroras are coincident with magnetic disturbances.

Rev. Scott will deliver a stereoptican lecture next Sunday evening at the church at 7 o'clock standard time. Mr. Scott's subject will be "South America, a land of opportunity," about 70 slides will be used.

The heathen Japanese are talking about placing a boycott on many things which come to them from christian America. Thoughtful Japs say that American moving pictures and the American "Light Fantastic" are having a bad effect on their people so perhaps their government may shortly put the lid down with a vengeance. The Japanese never use any profanity because there are no swear words in their language and in addition, the Orientals never used whisky until they came into touch with this country. First thing we know those Japanese will be sending missionaries over here to straighten us up.

The High school will present a program at the church Friday evening of this week, the proceeds to be used for the benefit of the graduating class. Four plays "Getting Rid of Father", "Just Like a Woman", "The Darkey Wood Dealer" and "Wanted—a Husband." will be put on with the following taking part: Donald Frantz, Jane Randolph Geraldine Little, Norman Burr, Lawrence Walworth, Clayton McGregor, Robert McGregor, Lola Bishop, Edgar Richards, Howard Ransom, Nettie and Lettie Sawdey. Music will be furnished by the orchestra while readings will be given by Mrs. Howard Kies and May Anson. Ice cream will also be sold.

Can The Dead Be Re-United

Hugo Guernsbeck, editor of "Science and Invention" has this to say regarding the Hereafter: He says in part:

"As far as we can ascertain the human race has been on this planet 500,000 years and that takes us back to the ape-man of pre-historic times, the most perfect specimen being the ape-man of Java. We don't need to go back so far. We are quite positive there were human beings on this earth 250.000 years ago and they were imbued with a fair degree of intelligence and possessed what we to-day are pleased to term a "soul" which it is believed the "ape" does not possess.

Life insurance companies have figured that the difference between the "expectancies" of man and woman averages a little more than two and a half years. Let us quote the average case: Tom Jones, a man of very religious nature, believing in the soul and the Hereafter, dies today. His spirit according to his belief, will therefore pass to the Great Beyond. In all probability, his beloved wife, whom he sincerely hopes and prays to meet Beyond, will follow him in about two years and a half. The problem then becomes "What are the chances that she will meet him in the Hereafter and again be united with him?"

If we assume that Tom Jones after he passes into the Great Beyond, retains his perceptive and reasoning powers, and can remove himself to any point on this Globe, the discussion must stop right here, because the probability then would be that he near the locality where his wife lived but recently, and the minute she died and passed into the Hereafter, he would meet her instantly That of course would end the problem to the satisfaction of everyone.

Some ecclesiastical writers believe that the soul has some shape and for that reason must assume some dimensions. Whether these dimensions are absolutely fixed or not need not enter into the discussion at all; but with ten trillion souls abounding above the planet it must be assumed that there would be practically no standing room—if we may use an irreverent term—for any of the souls."

This week we publish the first of a series of Acme Paint ads for the J. M Williams store in this village. Now is the time to begin to think of re-painting and re-papering. Your interior wood-work or your house clapboards may need it badly. The old and reliable line of Acme Detroit manufacture has been with us for thirty years and every year establishes it more firmly as par excellence.

Its A Job That Pays Good

We often wonder why men mostly lawyers will fight so hard to get elected as Representatives to Lansing, but when we see the inside of the cup we cease to marvel for it is the same old thing in the same old way, and you can bet your bottom dollar they'll fight because it means something to be a representative and draw your salary. The fifth special session of the Legislature under Groesbeck closed recently and after eighteen days of dilly-dalling in which about one solid days work was accomplished the Atwood Trunk Line measure was defected and and not much else is recorded.

More anon, but what we wanted to speak of particularly was the salary drawn by these representatives which you and I and all of us have to pay, Every Mother's son of them drew $100.00 out of us plus their mileage on the road, no matter how far they came, they had a good time (so tis recorded) anyhow and mostly all went home satisfied. It is realated that the Master-at-Arms had to pull a couple of members out of bed and force them to come into the session which is too bad as these chaps suffer constantly for sleep, and drinks and smokes—so that taken all in all the legislator's job is far from satisfactory, so 'tis claimed.

$110,000 a day for taxes

New York Central Lines taxes in 1925 absorbed one-fourth of the net operating revenue of the system.

To put it in another way, the earnings from 3,000 miles of the system were entirely devoted to the payment of taxes.

In the past six years the New York Central Lines, along with other carriers, have effected marked economies in operation, which have enabled them to pay high wages, give better service, strengthen their credit, and make large investments in improvements.

But taxes have continued to rise year after year. Tax economies can result only from governmental economies.

"There's a Week's Work of Fencing—Done in a Day"

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Wets and Drys to Air Their Views on Prohibition in Senate.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

WHAT is expected to be the most voluminous discussion on a domestic issue since the free silver talkfest, will be started in the United States senate on Monday, April 5. The topic is to be modification of the prohibition law and the eighteenth amendment, and debate is to continue for twelve days.

Consequently, the first move in the struggle for and against reopening the prohibition question for new congressional legislation has been won by the wets. This victory is in the form of a compromise agreed upon in order to allow the wets in the senate and their followers throughout the land to have public hearings on bills to modify the prohibition act and to amend the eighteenth amendment in return for their tacit promise not to delay other matters in the senate by means of daily speeches against prohibition.

Under the compromise, they are now to make their speeches and summon their witnesses before the senate judiciary subcommittee, which will sit for twelve days in a spacious committee room of the senate office building and publicly hear testimony on the benefits and the perils of prohibition as the witnesses may declare they have found them.

When this bombardment is concluded the subcommittee will turn over the bales of testimony to the judiciary committee for its guidance in recommending or not recommending to the senate the passage of one or more of the five modification bills now before it. The wets are to be heard first and will be allowed six days; then the drys for six days. From all parts of the United States, and Canada even, witnesses will be brought.

Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel for the Anti-Saloon league, will have charge of operations for the drys. The field marshals and floor managers of the wets are to be Senators Edge (Rep., N. J.), Edwards (Dem., N. J.,) and Bruce (Dem., Md.) with Senator Reed (Dem., Mo.) directing impromptu operations which are expected to provide the sensations of the campaign.

This official opening of the subject will bring the first public hearings ever granted by congress on proposals to modify the Volstead act since the eighteenth amendment was ratified in 1919. The senatorial wets call it a victory. "What we want, and all we want at this time," Senator Edge said, "is to get our evidence on the evils and scandals of prohibition before the country under authentic auspices. And we don't think this is an unfair wish. Sentiment is changing. Failure of the prohibition law is obvious and disgraceful. We welcome this chance merely to be heard."

On the other hand, Senator Walsh (Dem., Mont.) denounced the proposition as "mere wet press agentry," and said he had no sympathy with it. When the subcommittee's recommendation came before the judiciary committee Senator Walsh was the only one against it among the eleven senators voting.

The five bills on which testimony is to be heard are one by Senator Bruce, to permit manufacture, sale and distribution of hard liquor by the government, and local option in the matter of admitting such goods into a designated area; one, by Senator Edwards, to modify the Volstead act to permit 4 per cent beer, and three by Senator Edge to legalize 2.75 per cent beer, to permit beverages of "any alcoholic content not intoxicating in fact," and to remove restrictions now placed on the prescription of whisky for medicinal purposes.

The twelve days granted is not enough for the prohibition hearings, according to Senator Edwards, who announced in the senate that he would introduce a resolution calling for a full, complete and comprehensive investigation of all phases of the subject by a joint congressional committee.

In Pennsylvania the contest over the nomination of the Republican candidate for United States senator is viewed as a clear-cut issue between the friends and foes of prohibition. On one side the advocates of such amendment of the Volstead law as would permit light wines and beer, are backing Congressman Vare of Philadelphia. On the other side are the absolute drys who just now are torn between two rival dry candidates for the nomination, Senator George Wharton Pepper and Gov. Gifford Pinchot.

In Wisconsin, too, the prohibition question enters into the senate race. Frank J. Kelly, formerly in charge of liquor case prosecutions in Washington, D. C., will be a candidate for Republican nomination this fall on a light wines and beer platform. Kelly, quoted as expressing the belief that enforcement of prohibition is impossible, will seek the seat now held by Irvine L. Lenroot. He will be a candidate of the Anti-Tax League of America, which is described as having as its central idea the raising of sufficient revenue from wines and beer to abolish the federal and state income taxes.

WINSTON CHURCHILL, chancellor of the exchequer, told the house of commons that Great Britain had obligated herself to pay to the United States nearly $500,000 a day for three generations through the debt funding agreement. France, while paying no one her obligations, is receiving most of the reparations being paid by Germany, the chancellor said, yet, he continued, the United States is receiving from Europe an amount equalling Germany's total payments.

At conferences on international debts there has always been a marked difference of the view between Great Britain and the United States, Mr. Churchill declared. Great Britain had never taken the position that debts contracted in a common cause ought to be considered on the same basis as ordinary commercial debts. The government always was willing, he asserted, to obliterate altogether the debts owing to the allies, provided Great Britain was treated in a similar manner by her creditors.

The day is coming, he said, "when France and Italy have funded their debts both to Great Britain and the United States, as well as the smaller powers, when America will be receiving 60 per cent of the total reparations from Germany. It seems an extraordinary situation, the pressure for debt extraction will draw the reparations through all channels from war-stricken Europe in an unbroken stream across the Atlantic to the wealthy, prosperous great republic. I believe these facts will not pass the minds of responsible persons, either in the United States or Europe."

Philip Snowden, chancellor of the exchequer under the Socialist cabinet, speaking before the same body, said France's financial record for the last few years was one of the most discreditable in the history of international finance. France estimated its war damage just under fifteen billions of dollars. At an average cost it has estimated that the peasants' houses destroyed amounted to $11,300. It estimated the damage to the coal mines at $50,000,000, which, he said, was more than the total capital value of the mines.

THE Gooding long and short haul bill was defeated in the senate by a vote of 33 to 46. Eighteen Republicans and fifteen Democrats voted for the bill, while against the bill were thirty Republicans, fifteen Democrats and one Farmer-Labor member. By this action the senate refused to deprive the Interstate Commerce commission of discretionary power to authorize railroads to make rates to the Pacific coast from the Middle West to enable them to meet water competition through the Panama canal.

MOTOR speed limits of fifteen miles an hour in business districts, except where traffic is controlled, twenty miles an hour in residence districts, and thirty-five miles an hour "under all other conditions," was the recommendation made by Secretary Hoover to the "save your life conference" in Washington which was called to make life and limb safe in American streets and highways. Despite efforts of certain of the 1,000 delegates from forty-six states to have the model motor traffic code drafted so as to permit increased speeds, the advocates of slower rates won. All such considerations as transportation, road capacity, etc., were subordinated to "safety first," which won by the votes of three-fourths of the delegates.

Nathan W. MacChesney of Chicago advocated lower speed limits and pointed out that as speed is increased over any given highway the number of cars which that highway will accommodate is automatically reduced, because the space intervals between cars must be made greater.

"At 23 miles an hour," Mr. MacChesney said, "2,600 cars could pass a given point on a road; at 26 miles 2,570 cars; at 31 miles, 2,500 cars; at 34 miles, 2,400 cars, and at 40 miles only 2,080. But curiously enough when you decrease speed to 20 miles, you again moved 2,570 cars, as for 26 miles and at 14 miles only 2,400 cars, as at 34 miles. Our studies show that at 22 miles you got about the maximum capacity of the road."

THE United States will be represented at the preliminary conference on disarmament to be held under the auspices of the League of Nations in Geneva, beginning May 17, by Hugh S. Gibson, minister to Switzerland, now here on a visit. At present it is not thought likely, however, that this country will be represented at the meeting of league members to be held in Geneva next September.

SECRETARY OF NAVY WILBUR has announced that Col. Alexander S. Williams, commanding the Fourth regiment of Marines at San Diego, Cal., must face a court-martial on a charge of intoxication at a party in a hotel in that city. Mr. Wilbur declined to make any comment on the defense of Colonel Williams against the charges filed by Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, successor to Colonel Williams as commandant of the Marine base, on the ground that the accused officer has right to his own defense and therefore did not feel warranted in making public the written statement which the colonel submitted.

A SUBCOMMITTEE report adverse to the election claims of Senator Brookhart (Rep., Iowa) was approved by the full committee on privileges and elections of the senate. The vote was ten to one, with two members not recorded. Under the subcommittee's report, as accepted by a majority of the full committee, Daniel F. Steck, the Democratic nominee in the 1924 election, is held to have been elected over Senator Brookhart by a plurality of 1,420 votes. The report has been submitted to the house and it is expected, at this writing, that action on the contest will be taken in the near future. Present indications are that Steck will be seated, which will probably mean that Senator Brookhart will file a petition for the Republican senatorial nomination against Senator Cummins (Rep., Iowa) in the Iowa primaries in June.

UNITED STATES Ambassador Myron T. Herrick is en route to Morocco to take a look at the French war against Abd-el Krim. Preparations are being made to receive him at Rabat, then to take him to Fez, which is the base of the French offensive operations for spring. The high command expects to take the ambassador touring and possibly give him a peep at the battle against the Riffs, with the French aviators bombing the natives and the tanks, armored cars, machine guns, field artillery, and all modern implements of warfare combining against the Mauser rifles of the Moors.

PERU has accepted the tender of the good offices of the United States for a nonplebiscitary settlement of the Tacna-Arica question. Every effort has been put forth by officials here and at Santiago and Lima to bring about an agreement for a settlement of the question by another method than the plebiscitary one. Chile accepted an earlier tender made through Ambassador Collier at Santiago.

IT IS expected that the March receipts of income taxes will greatly exceed Treasury department estimates. If the estimate of $450,000,000 matures, receipts for the current fiscal year certainly will go well above $1,800,000,000 from this source.

Council of Churches Tells of Lynchings

Washington. — Seventeen persons were lynched in the United States during 1925, an increase of one over the record for 1924, the Federal Council of Churches set forth in its annual report on the subject.

The goal of achieving a lynchless land in 1926 could not be reached because a lynching had occurred as early as January, the report stated.

"During the last year five states which had previously been carried on the honor roll, namely, Arkansas, Ohio, Virginia, Alabama and Utah, lost their places because of mob murder within their borders," the committee declared.

"Four states, Illinois, Kentucky, South Carolina and Tennessee, which had been on the roll in former years, were restored because their borders were free of lynching in 1925."

The council's roll of honor follows: States that have never had a record of a lynching: Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont. Additional states that have no record of a lynching since 1886: Connecticut, Maine and New Jersey. Additional states that have no record of a lynching during the last twenty years: Delaware, Michigan and Wisconsin.

Additional states which have no record of a lynching during the last ten years: Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania and South Dakota.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Owosso—Rep. William P. Strauch, of Vernon, has announced his candidacy for a fourth term in the state legislature. He says that if he is returned to the house, he will introduce a bill providing that all highway expense be borne by a gas tax and that automobile licenses be issued at a nominal cost for the life of the car.

Grand Rapids—Mandamus proceedings brought by Sheriff William L. Smith to compel County Clerk Edward L. Wagner to receive his petitions for a place on the ballot as a candidate for a third term will be argued before the State Supreme Court April 5 or 6, according to Peter A. Hartesvelt, assistant prosecuting attorney, who will represent the county clerk.

Escanaba—Protesting that the establishment of "blue laws" in the District of Columbia would "set up a bad precedent for the rest of the nation which will lead to religious bigotry and intolerance," citizens of Escanaba and Delta county have voiced their opposition to such legislation to congress through resolutions presented by Senator Ferris, Democrat, of Michigan.

Lansing—Improvements in many of the state parks were authorized by the State Administrative Board. A tentative budget of $129,000 was presented by the State Conservation Commission and accepted by the board. The board's authorization calls for the expenditure of $15,000 for improvements in the Muskegon State Park; $15,000 at Grand Haven, $25,000 at St. Clair, and similar amounts at 18 other parks.

Petoskey—On recommendation of the Emmett County Bar Association, Circuit Judge Frank Shepherd has appointed Albert T. Washburn prosecuting attorney for Emmett County, effective April 1, succeeding Wade B. Smith, who recently resigned due to poor health. Washburn, teller for two years at the First State Bank, was admitted to the bar in September, 1925, having been graduated from the Detroit College of Law in June, 1924.

Mt. Clemens—Frederick Dean, a student at the Dickinson school here, has been judged by Dr. R. W. Johnson, of Detroit, "the perfect example of a child with perfect teeth." The decision of the Detroit dentist was made at the dental clinic sponsored by the Professional and Business Woman's Club of this city. It was said at the clinic that if dentists could reach children of school age a great amount of suffering in later life could be prevented.

Menominee — Twenty-seven boys and girls, ranging in age from 14 to 21 years, most of them students of the Marinette (Wis.) Junior high school, have been arrested in connection with delinquencies under investigation by Marinette authorities. Other boys and girls, the investigators have learned, are involved in the "parties" in which liquor was indicated as a factor in the delinquencies. Many of the children and youths are from prominent families.

Port Huron—Thirty-one miles of new road for St. Clair county is on the building program for 1926. Nine miles of this new construction work will be concrete to be laid by the State and will include two miles on M-27 from Bunce Creek to Huron boulevard in Marysville, three miles from the southern city limits of St. Clair to Recor's Point, another mile extending from the north city limits of Marine City to the gravel gap and three miles from Pearl Beach to Perch Point.

Lansing—Despite numerous rebuffs received in the past on like applications, railroads in Michigan continue to file applications and hold hearings before the Michigan Public Utilities Commission for discontinuance of station agent service at many of the small towns in the state. Lack of adequate revenue is given as the reason for such applications, the plan of the railroads being to demand pre-payments on all freight shipped to such towns and have passengers pay on the trains.

Sault Ste. Marie—The first step for the opening of the navigation season on St. Marys river was taken recently when workmen at the locks began preparing the Sabin lock for filling. Putting the lock into operation this early is for the purpose of testing the emergency dam above the lock. The ice is thick above and below the locks and shows no signs of breaking. Walking is still the favorite method of communication between the Soos and a team of horses occasionally crosses the channel.

Ferndale—Planning a uniform lighting system from Ferndale to Pontiac, Village Manager Carl H. Peterson, President Robert E. Lewis and Commissioner Ray W. Donahue, of Ferndale, will go to Cleveland to select a suitable type of lighting post for wider Woodward avenue. L. V. Belknap, Oakland county engineer, will accompany the three to verify the selection so the same design will be adopted for the highway. The commission recently sold a $50,000 bond issue to Joel Stockard & Co., of Detroit.

Lansing—Continuing its anti-stream pollution program, the state recently gave the representatives of more than 40 gas manufacturing plants 60 days to present a plan for disposing of their waste legally. Conferences have been held thus far covering all the municipalities in lower Michigan and many branches of industry. They will be continued until the industries have been covered, when the two state departments will shift their attention to the Upper Peninsula with a similar series of hearings.

WOMEN FIGHT POWERFUL FOE
Struggle Against Ill Health
Find a Faithful Ally in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MRS. ADOLPH HANSEN
HOLMQUIST, SOUTH DAKOTA

Holmquist, South Dakota.—"I can not begin to tell you how much good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was sick for about four years. I could not sleep, and I was always worrying, so one day we saw your advertisement in a paper, and I made up my mind to try the Vegetable Compound. I bought one bottle and did not see any change, so I got another bottle. At the second bottle I began to feel better and I have used the Vegetable Compound ever since, whenever I feel badly. I recommend it and I will answer any letters asking about it."—Mrs. Adolph Hansen, Holmquist, South Dakota.

Could Work Only Two Hours
Encanto, Calif.—"I bless the day I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was so weak and tired all the time I could not work more than two hours each day, then had to go to bed for the rest of the day. I read so much about the Vegetable Compound and I was so weak that I decided to try it. I now do my own housework—washing, scrubbing, and ironing—and then help my husband with his garden. I do not have that worn-out feeling now. I advise every woman to give your wonderful medicine a trial, and I will answer any letters I receive from women asking about it."—Mrs. Stella Lay, 700 Jamacha Road, Encanto, Calif.

A woman who is fighting for her health and her family's happiness is a valiant soldier. She wages her battle in her own kitchen. She has no thrilling bugles to cheer her on, no waving banners.

If you are fighting this battle, let Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound be your ally, too.

The real cause of bad breath

"You cannot 'cover up' unpleasant breath for any length of time. The only way to rid yourself permanently of it is by removing the cause.

"Sometimes poor teeth are responsible. But the commonest cause of a coated tongue and offensive breath is constipation. You may not realize that your intestines are slow in eliminating waste matter, or that your breath is objectionable. But others will notice it.

"Get rid of constipation, and your breath will become fresh and sweet. Even more important, you will notice an immediate improvement in your health and spirits."

Nujol relieves constipation in Nature's own way

Constipation is dangerous for anybody. Nujol is safe for everybody. It does not affect the stomach and is not absorbed by the body. Medical authorities approve Nujol because it is so safe, so gentle, and so natural in its action.

Nujol simply makes up for a deficiency—temporary or chronic—in the supply of natural lubricant in the intestines. It softens the waste matter and thus permits thorough and regular elimination without overtaxing the intestinal muscles.

Nujol can be taken for any length of time without ill effects. To insure internal cleanliness, it should be taken regularly in accordance with the directions on each bottle. Unlike laxatives, it does not form a habit and can be discontinued at any time.

Ask your druggist for Nujol today. Remove the cause of bad breath and begin to enjoy the perfect health that is possible only when elimination is normal and regular.

Hillsdale County Soils Diagnosed

Farmers of Hillsdale county will be given an opportunity to have their soil troubles diagnosed through the operation of the traveling soils laboratory over the New York Central Lines, April 5 and 6. The laboratory is in charge of soil experts from the M. S. C. In addition to the laboratory car, a lecture car will be attached and lectures will be given and moving pictures shown.

This train, operating through southern and southwestern Michigan last year, reached nearly 5,000 farmers in 26 stops and tested 2,000 samples of soil and marl. Most of the soil needed lime and the effect of the train can be seen by the fact that the amount of limestone used nearly doubled last year over the year preceding.

The train will be at Jonesville Monday night April 5 at 7:30. On April 6, the train will be at Hillsdale at 9 o'clock in the morning and at Montgomery at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. It will be at Hudson on Wednesday morning April 7 at 9 o'clock.

Bring in your soil. After the diagnosis has been made a prescription will be written offering recommendations on the use of lime, fertilizers and organic matter. You cannot afford to miss this opportunity of finding out more about your soil.

Remember Your Mother On Mothers' Day

Every officer and enlisted man in the regular army on duty in the Sixth Corps Area, composed of the states of Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin, has been directed to write to his mother on Mothers' Day, May 9, 1926, by Major General William S. Graves, corps area commander.

This requests comes direct from Secretary of War Davis and has been sent to every corps area commander in the United States. The request to all officers and enlisted men says:

"You are directed to bring to the attention of every officer and enlisted man in your command, the desire of the secretary of war that each officer and enlisted man write a letter to his home on Mothers' Day, May 9, 1926, as an expression of the love and reverence we owe to the mothers of our country.

Too Much Publicity

Students at Ann Arbor have the best interests of the University at heart and for some time past they have been obliged to put up with bitter and caustic criticisms from big papers throughout the state on account of the excessive liquor consumption by the student body and more or less drunken scrapes put up by this and that one from the school who might go to Detroit or Ypsilanti the two principal cities in close proximity to Ann Arbor, and there tank up on bad booze or home made "hooch" getting badly grogged and committing crimes which disgrace their college. Students sc claims the Mt. Clemens Monitor, are roasted out of all proportion to the offense committed. Of course such news being published and reaching the ears of the parents of students at home creates mighty bad opinions by "Dad" and "Ma" which the son wishes to contradict. It is bad in this way, and there are few University pupils who really like Pa and Ma to know just how they are behaving. Such is always the case with these rakes.

But throwing out all other argument the one thing remains—there is probably as much liquor handled and consumed by University students today as in the time of the flood, when any saloon in Ann Arbor would ladle out the poison to the boys from the Campus. Not censoring the wrong doers we wish to say that in an institution of approximately 10,000 young men it would be extremely funny if some of these dudes were not slightly indecent. In fact it could not be otherwise than a fact that a hundred or even more should be crooks—that is educated rascals who usually are the offspring of the idle rich—though not always. We say sons of the rich because they are usually the only ones who feel they can afford to dissipate. The average poor young lawyer or doctor who attends Michigan's University generally borrows money from some friend, or perhaps his parents have made a big sacrifice to keep him there, and we say with pride that few of such as these ever go wrong; but the boys with pockets full of money who come to school simply because there is nothing for them to do at home or because Dad has decided his hopeful is absolutely a dead cell in business, are the opposite calibre. Time apparently hangs heavy on their hands and they seek diversions which lead to ruinous practices.

The Mt Clemens Monitor goes on to say in summing up, "If the great papers of Michigan would pay as much attention to the ideals and good works of the University as they do to the slips of the boys the Mothers and Fathers would not have serious cause for worry."

Well, Brother, this is good too, but as a matter of fact as families are reared at this time, very few fathers or Mothers ever would know what their sons were up to if they didn't read it in the paper, and a little free publicity sometimes is worth a ton of correction.

Do not condemn the state papers so lustily if you please since nine-tenths of these liquor scrapes and girl scrapes are not really played up as terrific as the actual facts would warrant. The scandals of some of the chaps who attend our State College are not fit to print, but since this element comprises only one one-hundredth of the student body it is obvious the great majority are respectable hard-working scholars.

These sons of rich Fathers and Mothers have been pampered and fully supplied with all the luxuries of life even to the hellish high powered racing autos which will ruin the best of them, and the only thing we can do is to hire a corps of instructors whom we know are par-excellence and trust the good Lord for results.

"Old Ironsides" Revived

That noble poem written by Oliver Wendell Holmes so long ago concerning the good frigate, "Constitution" which had then lain at the wharf so many years rotting piece-meal, will ring on through the ages. If Dr. Holmes had never written another line during his entire life. I believe this would have made him famous. Picking up a western publication on our desk we note that the new masts to fit out the old frigate came from Bainbridge Island in the State of Washington as a gift from the West Coast Lumberman's Association. Our informant does not say how big these masts are but we'll wager they crowd one hundred feet high and as straight as a gun barrel. Such big timber as grows on our western coast only would be fit for the work and the sequal of this article is that it is noble to think of and will be much nobler to see at the Philadelphia Sequicentennial this summer where "Old Ironsides" will be anchored in the river as a shrine for every true American to visit. The work of the fraternities in fitting out the Constitution has been ably supported by thousands of school children throughout the length and breadth of this land whose breasts are palpitating with true patriotism, instilled into them by careful teaching. This is as it should be, and every little frame school house in the country districts knows the scheme and pays homage to the ancient heirloom. Go where you will in southern Michigan and you cannot find a school no matter how insignificant which does not proudly display its picture of "Old Ironsides" Oliver Wendell Holmes has long since been called to his Fathers and his earthly brain has smouldered to dust but his poem lives forever.

Michigan Territory As It Was In 1830

We have recently come into possession of a bunch of letters written by a lady living near Adrian in the "Oak Openings" away back in 1833 to a friend in Philadelphia, and from time to time we shall give the most interesting account of Michigan Territory as it was then, in our columns. This lady whose name was Elizabeth Margaret Chandler came here with her brother in 1830 and settled near Tecumseh.

Just for comparison we are giving the prices of produce at that time as quoted by the correspondence: Wheat was 75c per bushel corn 40c per bushel and oats 30 cents per bushel; hogs were bringing 5c, potatoes 50c per bushel, hay six dollars per ton; Horses were little used and worth forty to eighty dollars; oxen thirty five to sixty dollars per pair, cows twelve to sixteen dollars. The produce buyers were profiteers right, and only paid 50 cents per bushel for wheat which they shipped by boat or wagon to Detroit and re-sold at a good profit. At that time a few bears and wolves were running about the woods but they always cut for the tall timber when a man appeared—quite contrary to many yarns circulated. Deer were occasionally seen and bagged while wild ducks and geese were found by the thousands in lakes and streams. Miss Chandler wrote back to Philadelphia that she and her brother were in possession of a fine farm and were more than satisfied with the raw conditions of the day which would have caused a modern Miss to faint away. Incidentally we might mention the girls at that time never wore knickers, short dresses or white stockings for show purposes, at least it was a criminal offense for a young lady to show over one inch of her stocking above the shoe tops (if she had shoes) and many did not in the summer.

It is not known that the young ladies ever put on a bathing suit to plunge into the old swimming hole and if they did plunge at all it was in full dress. Miss Chandler speaks of the Indians very sparingly, saying she had seen only four at the time and they had no communication with any of the aborigines.

Their dwelling was a log house 20 x 26 feet and 8 feet high as the first story, while the second story was only four logs above the ceiling and served for a carpenter shop in which the brother spent stormy days making furniture and utensils for household use. The logs were the biggest and straightest whitewoods hewed absolutely square by an expert axeman and fitted together in such a way as to make uniformly smooth walls, the doors were of walnut and made heavy. Partitions and chamber floors were built of planed boards nicely grooved and matched together, so that it will be seen these folks were really getting better habitations than a large number of other pioneers. The interior of such houses could be and often was plastered complete as to-day, while the windows had plenty of small glass panes.

'Everybody Loses When Timber Burns"

The Michigan Press Association through its member papers and by means of animated picture signs is fostering and extensive campaign to aid the state in educating citizens and tourists to the importance of watchful care in avoiding forest fires.

Devasting forest fires not only affect the owners of timber but indirectly every business interest and property owner in the state.

Specially prepared advertisments, placed in all papers which are members of the Michigan Press Association, will reach the people in every locality of the state and forcibly impress upon them the serious results of forest fires.

The Scene-In-Action Corporation will place in hotel lobbies—particularly along tourist routes schools and other places where people congregate, a scene depicting a ravaging forest fire. In this "Scene In Action" picture the flickering of the flames flare and sink as though actually fanned by the breeze, lighting on the surrounding landscape with vivid, colorful flashes. The smoke rolls upward exactly as it would do in nature, now whirling in mad spirals, now floating serenely. Only the heat and crackle of flames are wanting to make the illusion perfect.

This part of the campaign will reach the resort tourists, many of whom are visiting the state for the first time, little realizing that a careless toss of a lighted match or an unquenched camp-fire may start a conflagration of inestimable loss.

This picture confronting them in every hotel lobby along their route cannot but make a strong and lasting impression upon them. Only the vandal deliberately destroys property.

Farm Bureau Free Banquet April 3

Next Saturday, April 3rd, there will be a Farm Bureau Free Banquet at Pinkham & Wright's Hall at 12 o'clock, sharp. Mr. Lucius Wilson of the General Organization Company, Chicago, and Mrs. Edith Wager, chairman of Home and Community Work of the Michigan State Farm Bureau will be speakers for the occasion.

Mr. Wilson is a person who has actual experience in orgauization work for many years and can give a very intelligent talk along these lines. Mr. Wilson gave a talk at the Farm Bureau Banquet at Lansing February 4th, and many from Hillsdale County who heard him say his talk could not be surpassed

Mrs. Edith Wager has been on the State Farm Board of Directors for several years, and has charge of the Home and Community work of the ladies' side of the Farm Bureau work all over the State of Michigan, and you will find she is a very good speaker. Her talk will be appreciated by both ladies and gentlemen. It will be worth your time to be present and hear these two speakers.

There will also be musical numbers by Boy's and Girl's Clubs. At 10:00 a. m., sharp, the regular business for the Farm Bureau annual meeting will be transacted.

Able Pasdeloup states that France is dying from alcoholism and that 61 percent of her crimes are committed on Sunday and Monday. Sunday idleness affords an opportunity for self-abandonment and gratification of the appetites, and the consequent increase of crime is prolific—far out of proportion to that of the week days when the citizens are busily engaged at useful and profitable avocations. Enforced idleness on Sunday does not strengthen the moral fiber of any nation, but is a symbol of decay and deterioration of morals. A Christian will keep the day of his choice holy without force of civil law; and a godless, wicked person is better off busy than idle on any day, whether it be secular or holy time. Compulsory Sunday idleness is a curse to any nation, just as idleness was the curse of Sodom. Enforced inactivity is destructive to real Christianity.,—Liberty.

Backing His Convictions

A lawyer in New York City wrote his brother who is head of a New York state country bank, in regard to the use of government printed envelopes by the bank. He said:

"I know their convenience and doubtless they are cheaper, but in these days when the various classes of industry and business realize the necessity of fighting against the further encroachment of the government and state into business it is rather inconsistent for a bank, or any other business, to encourage government competition with its own citizens. So far as the envelopes are concerned, the government is in the business tax free; and if it can manafacture, sell and distribute envelopes in competition with private enterprise, which must pay the taxes to maintain government, there is no good reason why it should not invade other fields of business. Each industrial function taken over in the name of the government adds an increased tax burden on the private citizen and property owner. I think when the present supply of government envelopes is exhausted, we should purchase our envelopes from a private printer who pays taxes to maintain our government, even if it makes us lick our own stamps and causes us to pay a little more for the printing. Think it over"

TAKING BLUE OUT OF WASH DAY

Electricity Makes Possible Many Labor Saving Devices on Farms

Short cuts in farm housekeeping are being encouraged by rapid developments in rural electric contracts.

Taking the "blue out of wash day," the heat out of ironing day and the dust out of cleaning day by the use of labor saving devices is fast becoming possible for the farm housewife. According to F. W. Duffee, agricultural engineer at the University of Wisconsin, the day is dawning when the new rural electric service will help to make the use of such conveniences economically possible.

A small electric utility motor in the farm kitchen can be made to operate several appliances, such as an ice cream freezer, meat grinder, some types of bread mixers or egg and cake beaters. Several other household appliances can be adapted to motor operation.

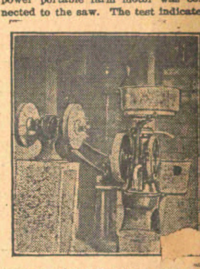
Tests by General Elect
Engineers Reveal Interestin
Benefits From Electricity.

In order to obtain data in regar the flexibility of motors in respec their adaptability for operating fa tools already in use on the farm a now driven by tractors or small g engines, General Electric engineers Schenectady, in conjunction with re resentatives of the Adirondack Ligh and Power Company, made arrange ments last year with several farmer near Schenectady, in New York state to drive various farm machines with motors. Following is a brief summary of what was done last summer and fall.

The first test on grinding feed was made on the farm of Godfrey Leneker, near Ft. Plain, N. Y. A five horse power portable farm motor was belted to a Stover mill used for grinding oats. This test, and another conducted later, demonstrated that the portable motor is ideal for feed grinding, which is usually an intermittent operation on the farm, only a few minutes being required to connect the drive.

At the George Nellis farm, St. Johnsville, N. Y., tests were made of hoisting hay, using a three horsepower motor employed on the farm for driving the vacuum pump of the milking machine. This motor was bolted through a jack shaft to a Farrell hoist. With the motor drive a two horse load of hay weighing one and one-half tons was unloaded in six minutes, and there was the added advantage that all operations were controlled by the man on the load.

On a farm near Charlton, N. Y., where wood, a saw and electric service were all available, the five horsepower portable farm motor was connected to the saw. The test indicated that to give the best results a circular saw should have a small flywheel to assist when the saw is cutting sticks of very hard wood and tough knots.



A ¼ HP Motor Running Cream Separator and Tool Grinder.

At the Sarnowski Dairy Farm, about two miles from Schenectady, a fifteen horsepower portable farm motor was used for driving a threshing machine for threshing oats. The motor proved to be superior to the gasoline tractor which was usually employed for this drive, in that the speed did not fall off when the bundles of oats were first thrown into the machine. The machine could, therefore, be fed faster, and because of the steadier speed the blower carried away the straw to the stack and did not clog, whereas clogging sometimes occurs with gasoline engine drive when the speed falls off. The constant speed also increased the number of bushels that could be threshed per day at a ratio of about 1,400 bushels per ten hour day, motor drive, to 800 bushels per ten hour day, gasoline engine drive.

The fifteen horsepower portable farm motor was used at the same farm for filling the silo and was connected to a Blizzard ensilage cutter. In ensilage cutting the superiority of motor drive was further proved by the fact that speed was kept up to normal when heavy overloads, caused by the bundles of corn when they first entered the machine, came on, and freedom from clogging in the pipe through which the ensilage was delivered to the silo.

In moving the fifteen horsepower portable motor from the threshing machine to the ensilage cutter over the uneven barnyard roadway considerable oil was spilled out of the compensator, and for this reason an automatic compensator, which requires no oil, was substituted.

During the year a number of five horsepower portable farm motors have been built and changes designed to improve the outfit have been made. The principal change was the substitution of a chain drive from the motor to the pulley shaft for the belt and belt tightener attachment on the motor, thus eliminating the latter. This effected a saving in [illegible] The ease with which [illegible] may be moved from one loc[illegible] and its adaptability [illegible] many farm machines [illegible] for only a short time [illegible] make it a most usef[illegible] to the farmer.

Another "Impossible Task"

Women are the backbone of the nation because to them no good thing is impossible of attainment. The may be difficult and long, but success is the only vision they ever behold in the distance.

Their fifty years' struggle for the Eighteenth Amendment is the most striking example of this pure visioned practical idealism. Dish water and bottles thrown from windows never silenced the prayers and hymns of the valiant temperance crusaders.

Today, the White Ribbon workers for law enforcement will not be silenced by the slurs, lies and intrigues of a group which knows no law but self, and seeks to bring back the liquor traffic because of greed and a desire for personal gain.

White Ribboners for half a century have specialized in doing the impossible. They have, like Alice in Wonderland, not only thought three impossible things before breakfast but before every other meal and lulled themselves to sleep thinking still more impossible things for the human good. And what is still more to the point, they have awakened in the morning to go out into the world to make those seeming impossibilities, practical realities.

Since 1874 the White Ribbon army has steadily advanced, carrying its banner—"For God and Home and Every Land"—from ocean to ocean. There is no corner of America where its courageous voice has not been heard. Is this army less powerful today than fifty years ago? Is it going to stand by and let the forces of evil wrest away the victory? A thousand times "No!" But success means another "impossible" task. The women of the W. C. T. U. have done so many things that other good people aspired to do but believed could not be done. Where others have "wishes," they have accomplished.

41,000 new women joined the W. C. T. U. ranks last year.

100,000—at the very least—will have to join this year if we are to fulfill the task we have set ourselves.

After the first shock of considering this task, you will begin to think and plan. You will recall the lonely woman in the community who would welcome an invitation to join; the aimless women whose lives would be enriched by the association; the mother-hearted women who perhaps are just waiting for the chance to help, and after a while, your share in gaining the 100,000 members will not seem at all impossible.

A possible thing can be done by anyone. It takes a W. C. T. U. woman to do the impossible.—National W. C. T. U. Publishing

Seek To Develop State Landscapes

Greater appreciation of the natural beauties of Michigan's landscape, and a resultant effort to conserve and develop these advantages, will be the aim of a great educational program just being launched by the M. S. C. in cooperation with various other organizations of the state.

Preliminary plans were made at a conference held at the college last week, on call of Professor C. P. Halligan, head of the M. S. C. landscape architecture department Development bureaus, state departments, women's clubs, school authorities, and other groups were represented at this gathering.

"Michigan is inherently rich in her landscape beauty", said Professor Halligan in opening the conference. "This important resource has not, however, been fully appreciated nor conserved. When we consider the value of landscape beauty, not only as a source of satisfaction and enjoyment for residents of the state but also as a vital element in connection with the tourist and resort industry of the state, we cannot fail to realize that conservation steps must be taken.

The tourist and resort business ranks as Michigan's third largest economic interest. It is an industry which touches directly or indirectly a large percentage of our population, and there are many different organizations in the state which are expected to join the present movement to secure greater conservation effort along th[illegible]e.

Various educational campaigns, including work with the schools, with women's clubs, through the development bureaus and state departments, and including a radio series this spring over the M. S. C. radio station, WKAR, will be start at once, it is said.

Special Train To Test Soil Samples

An interesting soil fertility train sponsored by the soils department of the M. S. C. and by county extension services, will run through many counties of southern Michigan during April. Greatest interest in soil fertility maintenance will be the chief aim of the train.

An opportunity will be given farmers all along the route of the "special" to have samples of their soil tested, and to consult with specialists on various soil problems Rules for selecting soils samples to be brought to the train have been issued by the college soils men. These rules point out the need of taking samples from the different sections which show soil variation on the farm. They tell how to take sub-soil samples, and emphasize the need of being careful not to "mix" samples from the different variations and the value of clean containers for the samples.

Detailed itinerary for the stops the soils train will make in the different counties it is to cover shows that thousands of farmers will have the chance to take their soils troubles to the novel clinic.

Experiments at the Michigan Experiment station and experience of farmers over the state has shown that the planting of unadapted alfalfa fails, according to Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the M. S. C. crops department. The tests have shown Hardigan, Grimm, Cossack and Ontario Variegated to be winter hardy in Michigan and well adapted. A few common strains also give fair yields under favorable conditions. Arizona Common, Hairy Peruvian and other southwestern strains, and the strains imported from Argentina, South America and South Africa are mentioned as entirely unsatifactory for Michigan conditions because of their lack of winter hardiness and inability to yield.

Automobile Shieks

With the advent of warm weather and good roads comes once more the automobile shieks and would be mashers. Everybody knows them—the heart crushers who nightly prowl up and down the leading streets inviting girls who do not know them to go riding.

Most of us are wont to look at this matter quite calmly; perhaps we "smile" at the autos that ply up and down the streets of our towns seeking like wolves girls foolish enough to imagine they can take care of themselves, girls perhaps daughters of neglectful parents. But when the final catastrophe arrives and the story is told in the papers we froth and demand prompt dealing with the criminals.

But those shieks and mashers are quite as criminal in intent before as after the act. Just why they should be permitted to roam like beasts of prey unchallenged is one of the non-understandable matters of alleged social protection. In the smaller cities and towns practically everyone of them is known to the police and also is known to the street-wise by face and by repute. They flourish because they are permitted and condoned. It is idle to say that they cannot be curbed or chased out of town or put in jail for "disorderly conduct" covers a wide range and leaves much to the authorities.

The Coolidges Are Good Mixers

Gradually by degrees we are getting acquainted with the personality of the Coolidge family and as we progress we Pooh! and Oh! and Ah! it continually for we have at last discovered they are not milk sops. Somebody has insinuated that the pampered sons of the rich and higher-ups were likely to be sissies which is not the case with the Coolidge boys you bet.

From the Citizens Military Training Camp comes the news that the dead son of President Coolidge, Calvin Jr., was a corporal in the military organization training at an eastern camp before his death and it is said he romped with the boys and was as husky as the best.

Both the President and Vice president heartily endorse the military training camps believing that they put pep and manhood into the young men. The best story which we have have had comes from the College where John Coolidge is a student now. It says that boxing bouts of none too gentle acumen are constantly being pulled off among the young fellows and John is most generally in the midst of it. He recently engaged with a professional scrapper who had trained for the championship and was badly used, so much so that he obtained a bloody beak and we presume a black eye. He simply laughed the whole matter off as a good joke and does not seem to believe that anybody has got to kowtow to the president's son. He is quoted as saying that he is not fitted for heavy boxing as his arms are not right. Well, its a good specimen of our thoroughly Democratic government any how and it would not be very much wondered at if the President's son should some day go into the ring as a professional. His father is certainly the most Democratic big man in Washington as far as styles are concerned and Ma Coolidge wears made over dresses (unless the papers lie) at receptions which speaks volumes for her good common sense although she is the target for withering criticism from some of the brainless newspaper women of the capitol. What these hussies can find to criticise in the first lady of the land we do not know but they are at it. Her husband indulges in a cigarette now and then, and the biggest joke that has so far been published says the W. C. T. U. ers or some other organization are electing a committee to call upon him and request for the good of example that he refrain from this damaging practice. Well, he is his own boss we presume and it is not a question of personal injury but a matter of precedent.

Young vigor to old folks

"Food lay like lead in my stomach. Pains, dizzy spells and "jumpy" nerves made life miserable. My wife persuaded me to try Tanlac. Now cured and recommend this wonderful medicine." E. Burton, 1006 Vaughan Ave., Ashland, Wis.

One of Tanlac's greatest blessings is the new life and vigor it brings to old folks. Every day men and women up in the seventies and eighties thank us for Tanlac's wondrous benefits.

Tanlac is a natural tonic, made from roots, barks and rare herbs. Harmless to man or child. It cleans the blood, stirs up the liver and puts digestive organs in working order.

If your body is weak and rundown, if you lack ambition, can't eat or sleep, you'll be delighted with Tanlac's results. Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation.

"By gar! You not drown een de Frying Pan, Daveed? We t'ot you dead men. By dam! I glad to see you, Daveed, and you, m'sieu, all right, bot' you two, beeg an' strong jes de same?" The delighted Michel repeatedly wrung the hands of his amused, but perplexed friends. Then St. Onge reached Steele.

"Mon Dieu! Mon Dieu! Monsieur Steele! Welcome to Wailing River," he exclaimed in a voice, strained—unnatural. "Doubly welcome, my dear Steele! We thought we looked at the dead when you entered that door—Michel and I. An Indian brought word that you were lost in the Jackfish rapids, last month. We were hopeless—and now we are overjoyed."

"Thank you, sir, I am glad to be back. We ran the rapids—it's a long tale, colonel."

St. Onge suddenly started, turning in bewilderment from Steele to Michel.

"What was that?"

David doubled with laughter at the surprise of the Iroquois. Again, to the bewilderment of the Frenchman and his head-man, the bloodhound, outside, raised a deep-throated protest at the cold and his empty stomach, which initiated a bedlam of howls from the huskies.

"Why, that's Windigo; he's hungry!" laughed Steele. "You'd better look after them, David, before the home dogs start to fight."

"That, a dog? It sounded more like a lion."

"I've brought a bloodhound to track the Windigo; also to give him a bit of his own medicine. His name is Pete, but David and I call him 'Windigo.' If we'd had him last fall, it might have been different. But Mademoiselle St. Onge? Is she well?" Steele hastened to ask.

The face of the older man sobered. "She has not been well," he said, pointedly, "since the news came from Ogoke."

"You mean?"

"The news of your drowning in the Frying Pan, monsieur."

Steele thrilled at the words. Then the realization of what it had meant to Denise St. Onge—this blow to her hopes—swiftly saddened him.

"I will go to her at once," said St. Onge. "The shock would be too great—and the joy," he added. "If you will follow shortly, you will find your old room, such as it is, ready."

In the living room of the factor's quarters Denise St. Onge waited for the man returned from the dead.

Entering, Steele went to her and took both her hands.

"I have come back, Denise St. Onge, as I promised," he said, as her dark eyes bravely met his, but the convulsive movement of her lips betrayed the imminence of tears.

"We are—so glad—so glad you are here!" But the strain was too great and she turned from him to hide her emotion.

"It is a happy night for Wailing River, monsieur," broke in St. Onge, as Steele turned to the factor to permit his daughter to regain her self-control.

"A happier one for me, colonel!" replied the man who yearned to take the girl, who had walked to the end of the room, in his arms and comfort her—promise her that all should be right in the end.

At supper St. Onge insisted on hearing of Steele's trip home.

"Before I begin, tell me if Laflamme has shown his hand?"

"No, we have heard nothing. One of his Indians on the way to Albany with a letter told Michel you had been drowned. That is all."

"When I met him," continued Steele, "he acted cold and suspicious, wanted to know my business, but warmed later, asking me to dine with him and the woman who passes as Rose Laflamme. He became so polite that I was under the impression that he believed my story. After dinner he was suddenly called to the trade-house. One of his men had started to bother David, who, of course, had his eyes open, which they evidently resented, and David broke some of his fingers. This worried me considerably; it meant leaving on the jump in the morning before there was trouble."

"And this Rose Laflamme, what is she like?" asked Denise.

Steele felt the blood in his face. In spite of the legitimate ends for which he had worked, the episode with Rose had left an unsavory taste.

"She is a striking-looking woman, with, I am confident, a strain of Indian blood. It was very evident that she and Laflamme were not on good terms—that she desired to leave Ogoke; in fact, she asked if we would take her to the railroad."

"She asked you, a stranger?" demanded Denise.

"You mean she is held there against her will?" broke in St. Onge.

"Absolutely! But Laflamme, from what she told me, fears she would tell what she knows—inform the authorities."

"What a situation for a woman!" deprecated Denise.

"Yes, she evidently hates him—hinted vaguely at many things, when Laflamme was absent at the trade-house. But the only information I succeeded in getting was that Pierre, the Indian, who came here in September, was sent down river partly to spread Windigo rumors."

"He talked with Tete-Boule, and left shortly after," nodded St. Onge.

"Oh, by the way, is Tete-Boule, the great sorcerer, still here?"

"Yes, although something happened when Michel came back. They had a long talk one night in Tete-Boule's shack. I heard the trouble from the beach and found Michel threatening to cut his throat."

"Why did you interfere?" laughed Steele.

"He's been useful as a hunter, and I'm so short-handed. But I am interested to hear how you left Ogoke, monsieur, and why you were so reckless as to attempt to run the Frying Pan."

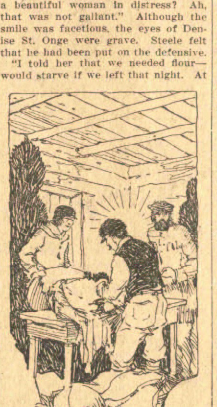
"When I returned to the shack where we had left our bags, I found David repacking some of the stuff. Laflamme had had our baggage searched."

"Did you accuse him of it?"

"I never had the opportunity. Rose Laflamme came to the shack and offered to tell all she knew about Laflamme's activities if I would take her that night to the railroad," Steele boldly answered, ignoring the inferences which might be drawn from the statement.

"And you refused, monsieur, to aid a beautiful woman in distress? Ah, that was not gallant." Although the smile was facetious, the eyes of Denise St. Onge were grave. Steele felt that he had been put on the defensive.

"I told her that we needed flour—would starve if we left that night. At that moment David knocked a man down outside, who proved to be Laflamme. What he had come for I do not know."



"Laflamme Had Had Our Luggage Searched."

"Was it not clear to you what he came for, monsieur? Learning she was not in the house, he went to the shack of the gallant American, to find it guarded by his faithful Indian?" The girl smiled disconcertingly. Steele was puzzled at her mood.

"Denise!" protested her father. "Will you permit Monsieur Steele to tell his story? You are not fair!"

Could it be possible that she did not believe him, Steele asked himself. But the seeming composure of Denise St. Onge disarmed him and he went on.

"David had choked Laflamme into unconsciousness, and of course we had to leave without our flour. We paddled all night, pushed up the Rouge and over to the Jackfish. We also discovered that they had taken all our rifle shells. I was sure we had distanced pursuit but at the Frying Pan two Indians who had traveled overland were waiting for us. Thinking we were helpless and would come ashore, they didn't fire on us until they saw we intended to run the rapids. Then one raised his rifle, but was shot by David, who had found a cartridge which Laflamme's men had overlooked."

St. Onge listened to Steele's story in amazement.

"He sent his men to kill you—keep you from getting out of the country?"

"He rightly saw that after what had happened he couldn't afford to have us leave the bush. You see, notwithstanding my two bags of Indian stuff, he suspected me of spying on his place—and probably chose the Frying Pan as a safe means of getting rid of us.

"He wouldn't anticipate our running them voluntarily, but evidently had ordered his Indians to capture and throw us in. Then, if our bodies or canoe were ever found, it would appear like a straight case of drowning. But David's shot stampeded the survivor into firing at us."

"And you went through that white water they say has never been run?"

"Yes, somehow we got through, with a foot of water in her and a few leaks where we scraped some sharp ones."

They had left the supper table and were in the living room, and as Steele finished he realized that Denise, who sat with eyes on the rug at her feet, had been listening. Was it the old depression, he wondered, or—

"And without shells for your guns, you traveled clear to the Nepigon on short rations?" broke in St. Onge.

"Worse than that. We got but few fish and before we reached Nepigon House, were down to one meal a day."

Denise looked up. "I am very tired, monsieur. You will pardon me? Good night!" And she left the room.

That day Steele had traveled forty miles to avoid camping another night on the snow before seeing Denise St. Onge. He was tired from the hard day on the river ice, and disturbed and mystified by the mood of the factor's daughter.

Once he knew beyond all peradventure that this harassed girl cared for him; bound though she was, once she unreservedly placed her future in his hands and rent the veil of her former reticence—her strange aloofness, then the fight for the fortunes of Wailing River would be a battle of joy; and at last, when they met, it seemed that his dream had come true—that he had won. But her air of incredulity, the irony of her comment on his story of that night at Ogoke, sent him to his bed mortified, troubled, stung with the injustice of her attitude. Was it jealousy? He had held Denise St. Onge on too high a plane for such a descent. Had she been merely facetious, or had she, without benefit of the doubt, drawn a sinister inference from the coming to the shack of Rose, and their surprise by Laflamme? But he had frankly told the full details, he argued. That, of itself, was proof enough of the singlemindedness of his actions at Ogoke. It seemed so foreign to his conception of the character of Denise St. Onge, that, when his tired body finally drew him into the oblivion of sleep, he had attributed her manner and her silence to the strain of overtaxed nerves.

CHAPTER XII

The following morning the council of war met in the shack of Michel where, as the Iroquois was unmarried, there would be no interruption.

"Now, Michel," said Steele, "I've kept my word and come back on the first snow and I've brought a hound that will help us if we have the luck to hear that Windigo again. I've also brought these."

The speaker stripped the lashings from a canvas-covered bundle, which David had carried in from the sled the night previous, to reveal to the curious eyes of Michel two massive engines of torture, their steel jaws bristling with teeth.

"By gar! Bear trap!" exclaimed the Iroquois, black eyes glittering.

"Beauties, aren't they? God help the brute they close on!"

Then Steele lifted six smaller but no less wicked-looking devices, designed to snap on and hold in vise-like grip the paw of the unwary prowler which stepped in them.

"These are the strongest wolf-traps made, and I doubt if any Windigo could get out of one, unless he gnawed his leg off."

"Now, Michel, before making any plans, I am ready to hear what you promised to tell me when I returned—what you told David and feared to have me know."

"Dat ees right, m'sieu. You keep de word an' cum back to fight wid us Leesten!"

Michel filled his pipe, lit it, and hastily opening the door, circled the cabin to assure himself of absolute privacy. Then he began.

"You t'ink de tam you meet ma'm'selle below at de rapids dat she was alone?"

"When David and I were packing up to the post?"

"Ah-hah! Wal, Michel was dere."

"What d'you mean?" asked Steele, puzzled. "You were taking care of her?"

"Yes."

"Did she know it?"

The Iroquois shook his head. "She not know."

"What were you afraid of, so near the post?"

"Beeg Antoine!"

Steele stared in amazement at the speaker. "Big Antoine! You mean Laflamme's man—the one with the scar on his face?"

The half-breed nodded.

Expected Gifts Listed

In China, a betrothal takes the form of a bridal contract, and a category of expected wedding presents is solemnly inserted in the contract that binds the engagement; but the Chinese would very much resent having this stipulation considered a "price." In Japan it is the custom for the bride to give gifts to the bridegroom's family—and there are many other interesting forms of intra-marital exchange of presents.

Gained Lasting Fame as a Builder of Roads

The first macadam road ever constructed was officially tested and approved in Scotland more than a century ago. The inventor was John Louden Macadam, a native of Ayr, Scotland, where he was born in 1756. Macadam went to New York in 1770, entered his uncle's counting house, and became a successful merchant.

In 1783 he returned to Scotland and purchased a handsome estate. In 1810 Macadam began his experiments in highway construction which have made his name immortal.

The great road builder was thoroughly Scotch in his methods, and as he wanted nothing flimsy, he investigated road building methods in a score of countries, traveling 30,000 miles.

His preliminary trials of "macadamizing" were so successful that in 1816 he was appointed surveyor to the Bristol Turnpike trust and remade the roads there cheaply and well. The house of commons investigated his system, and he was voted $50,000 and appointed surveyor general of metropolitan roads. He declined knighthood.—Chicago Journal.

Fast Travel by Dogs

In the dog derby, the great annual event in Alaska, the famous "musher" Ramsay, did 51 miles with his team of dogs in 5 hours 14 minutes, and this was only the first stage of a 400-mile race.

King on Strike

One often says "as happy as a king!" but the phrase is a contradiction and kings, like everyone else, are beset by many worries and grievances for which they seek redress, but, being kings, they have the more difficulty in doing so. Do you know that the king of Spain once went on a strike? His majesty handed his prime minister a sealed petition, with the request that it be granted unconditionally. When it was opened it was found to be in the king's own hand. He was often obliged, he stated, to work 12 hours or more a day; he therefore demanded for himself an eight-hour day and no work on Sundays and holidays.

A colored attorney was representing a fellow colored client before Judge Dan V. White in municipal court.

"You may advise your client as to his constitutional right of telling his story or keeping quiet," said the judge to the lawyer.

"Yes, sir. You can tell the judge the whole truth and nothing but the truth, or you can keep quiet," was the advice.—Indianapolis News.

Argument

I wonder if ever you change human beings with arguments alone. . . . For when you argue with a man . . . you are somehow trying to pull him down and make him less (and yourself more); but when you try to understand him, when you like him, how eager is he then to know the truth you have; and you add to him in some strange way, you make him more than he was before; and at the same time, and that is the sheer magic of it, you yourself become more.—David Grayson, in "Adventures in Understanding."

Substitute for the Sun

Dwellers in smoke shrouded cities and such as sleep by day and work by night can make up what they suffer from lack of sufficient sunshine by the use of electric sun baths according to an eminent British health authority. Prolonged periods of wet weather tend noticeably to increase the spread of sickness in large cities, and pulmonary diseases are prevalent where sunlight is lacking, as are many ailments peculiar to children. Electric sun baths, the British physician referred to declares, offer a satisfactory substitute for nature's own.

While driving on the Chicago turnpike west of the Morton farm Saturday evening. Chas Fouty met with a serious accident. Mr. Fouty turned out to pass around a truck and in so doing collided with another car. In order to avoid a smash up, Fouty swerved quickly to one side losing control of the machine which turned turtle. 3 times and landed in a field. Charley is suffering from a dislocated shoulder and a badly cut leg.

Rev. Scott's stereoptican lecture on "South America" was well attended Sunday evening. Mr. Scott made several striking statements being somewhat as follows "out of 5,000 students questioned in one school only four testified to a belief in God or Christianity", There is so much immorality and drunkenness among Roman Catholic priests that most of the people are disgusted with Christianity," "Most every body uses liquor in South America except the Protestant missionaries and sometimes children 10 years of age come to the Methodist schools intoxicated." "The Inca Indians of Peru had a civilization which is believed by many scientists to have been superior to the civilization possessed by any country today." Several lessons might be learned from the pastor's lecture, one being that the Roman Catholic church is dangerous, the second, that "Education without religion may be worse than no education at all", as President Coolidge has said and thirdly if the civilization possessed by the Inca Indians was superior to that possessed by any nation today does it not follow that Evolution may be Bunk and that World Progress is not real but apparent?

Obituary

One by one they are fording death's river.

Daniel W. Hoxie was born in Wheatland March 1st, 1848, was was married to Orpha Beecher June 29th, 1872 and died at his home at North Adams March 27th, 1926, in his 79th year, having spent his entire life, except since 1914, on the old farm home in Wheatland.

Deceased was an old and respected citizen. Socially he was ever held in high esteem as neighbor and friend, his main life enjoyment being family associations.

He had no religious affiliations, but always advocated his firm conviction of the Truth of the Bible teaching of Restitution for all mankind, through Christ's redemptive sacrifice and was satisfied with the comfort of this hope.

Left to mourn his going out are the wife and two daughters, Mrs. Gertrude Thompson of Wheatland and Mrs. Bernice McBain of Moscow, four grandchildren and three great grandchildren to whom he has left a legacy in his Book of Life, which will be to them a shining record and pleasant memories to each.

East Hoxie

Mrs. Etta Welker is entertaining company from Hillsdale for the week.

Hubert Iveson and lady friend of Jackson were guests at John Iveson's Saturday night and Sunday.

Hoxie school is having a week's vacation. Mrs. Randolph, the teacher is visiting her parents in Barry County.

Mrs. LaVerne Cox and daughter Geraldine and Mrs. John Iveson were Sunday callers at the Chas Cox home.

The Y. W. C. A. Basketry class of East Hoxie will meet Tuesday at the Alec Lee home. Miss Ensign expects to be present.

Ruth Steveson is at home for vacation from Kalamazoo Normal. Mrs. Will Steveson and daughter Ruth spent the week end in Jackson visiting friends.

The families of L. O. Spratt and J. G. Kiel have been having the lagrippe very severely this week. Mrs. J. G. Kiel is also suffering with cracked bones in her right wrist caused by falling on the ice. Dr. McFarland is attending them.

Several families in this vicinity attended the funeral of Daniel Hoxie Tuesday. We were surprised to hear of his death although realizing his poor health through the winter. Mr. Hoxie and family resided in this vicinity for a great number of year. We sympathize with the bereaved wife and daughters.

Marian Tanner and Gladys Hansen, Students at Hillsdale College have been spending the week as guests of Mrs. V. A. Hunt.

Mrs. Weeks and daughter Frances, are spending a few days at their home in this village.

A. Dietz and wife took over the Corner Store this week and are putting things in shape for business. C. J. Knapp will be the clerk as formerly, and patent medicines will be handled in addition to a full line of staple groceries, but no drugs. See their ad in this issue of the Advocate.

Charles Bacon of Pittsford who by the way is accused of playing "Jack, the Peeper" at Hillsdale last winter, has filed a damage suit for $25,000 for assault against Albert Bentz, Dean Stock and Louis Oliver of Hillsdale. Bacon claims he was roughly handled by the three men on January 20th and sustained injuries which are permanent.

Rural Lodge, I. O. O. F. entertained Anchor Lodge from Jackson on Wednesday evening who came over in two bus loads to the number of 58, notwithstanding the rough roads, and enjoyed a splendid time. Degrees were conferred upon two candidates by the visitors and supper was served to about one hundred. A social hour and smoker followed. The visiting lodge brought Leo Blake's orchestra which rendered splendid music.

Reports from Lansing indicate that road work in Michigan this season will not be flourishing as it did last year. Beyond what road work was determined upon last season, no more work will be done. This means that hundreds of communities in Michigan that have been clamoring to have highways graveled, will have to pass it up. It appears that the State exchequer is getting depleted. Both Groesbeck and Rogers are up against the proposition as no more funds will be appropriated.

The regular annual meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held Friday April 16, at the home of Mrs. Mary Westcott 2:00 p. m. Election of officers. Program as follows: Roll call Scripture Texts. Devotionals, Ethel Clement. Program Leader, Mrs. Mayme Pendell. "Why we should join the W. C. T. U.", Mrs. Laura Walworth. Potluck supper.

Property holders on M-14 are becoming rather indignant over the prospects of not having that highway paved this year. The grading work was completed last fall and has been practically impassable all winter. Many have been compelled to walk to town many times, driving either horses or autos being impossible. It would seem that a good strong petition with the signature of every taxpayer effected by the improvement would have some bearing with the state highway department at this time. It does not seem right that money collected for such work should be diverted to road work in other districts.—Addison Courier.

"There's a Week's Work of Fencing—Done in a Day"

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Worst March Blizzard in Years Leaves Damage in Its Trail.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

MARCH went out leaving in its trail one of the most severe March-end storms in years. Extending from beyond the Rocky mountains as far south as the Rio Grande and as far east as New England, the blizzard area included all regions except the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards.

Dispatches from all points over the Middle West told of loss of life and crippled transportation caused by the storm. Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana, and Missouri appeared to be the hardest hit. Rail and highway traffic was tied up at many points. At Kewanee, Ill., hundreds of automobiles were reported stalled in huge drifts. At Havana, Ill., a passenger train was held up by the heavy snowfall.

The situation in Wisconsin was no better. Eleven inches of snow were recorded in Milwaukee, with street car and bus transportation blocked. Points in Indiana reported one of the worst March storms in history. Fort Wayne and Indianapolis had transportation blocked. At Dubuque, Iowa, the snow measured 18 inches and 16 inches at Fort Madison. On the highways drifts of six feet were common.

Trains into Kansas City, Mo., were from 6 to 12 hours late, while in addition to the three Midland Valley trains stalled near Foraker, Okla., two Rock Island passenger trains were imbedded in drifts near Enid, Okla.

Other parts of the country, notably the Texas Panhandle, Louisiana, and Mississippi, also were affected. In southeastern Texas the storm reached tornado proportions, caused four deaths and property damage that is expected to exceed $1,000,000. Near Liberty, Texas, an 82-mile-an-hour gale destroyed 350 oil derricks.

ADVOCATES of the lakes-to-gulf waterway gained a strategic victory when the War department board of engineers, in its report on the improvement of the Illinois river, recommended the immediate construction of a nine-foot waterway with water diversion from Lake Michigan of 8,250 cubic feet per second.

DESPITE the recurrent declines in prices of stocks in Wall street, President Coolidge and his cabinet in surveying the situation throughout the country find conditions satisfactory.

The country is properous and business good, according to the reports made for the information of the President, and the prospect is that an even greater business expansion is at hand. There is little unemployment, and indications are that everyone who is willing to work at prevailing wages can get work. There is still a dull condition in the textile industry, but that, in the opinion of the President, is due to causes laid in post-war readjustments.

The President advises, however, an adherence to a conservative and cautious policy on the part of private enterprise and of the government itself. There should be no departure from the rules of economy and sound financing by either corporations or the government, he advises.

With income tax receipts larger even than anticipated, there is every indication that business will go on expanding. Probably the future revenue will prove so much larger than was expected that fears of a deficit in the next fiscal year will be dispelled. The President, however, has given grave consideration to the various items on the legislative program of the house on which his advice had been sought by Representative Tilson (Rep., Conn.) majority leader of that body. In reply he pointed out to Mr. Tilson that congress had reduced taxes more radically than the executive had thought safe at the time. The revenue, therefore, was reduced to such an extent that it would barely cover expenditures already authorized by law. Mr. Coolidge advised Mr. Tilson to proceed carefully on all proposals involving an increased expenditure. The bill to raise the retirement annuities of government employees involves such an increase, and while the President favors higher annuities, he is not sure that the government can afford to raise them as high as the bill asks.

Increase in the salaries of federal judges, on the other hand, is favored by the President, since this would not require a large increase in expenditures. The outlay of $50,000,000 for new public buildings and a like amount for waterway development is approved by the executive as additions on capital account, but the programs for increasing army and navy expenditures about $60,000,000 annually the President is inclined to view differently.

IF THERE is going to be any change in the prohibition policy, program or legislation, there must first be a change in the Constitution, according to Senator Borah (Rep., Idaho), in commenting on the referendum proposed by Senator Edge which asks the people to tell congress whether it "shall amend the national prohibition act, commonly called the Volstead act, so as to allow the manufacture, sale, transportation, and possession of beverages containing as great an amount of alcohol as is lawful under the Constitution."

Senator Borah declared that he saw no possible way to deal effectively with the liquor question so long as the Constitution prohibits the manufacture, sale or transportation of intoxicating liquors. Consequently, he believes that the first question in any referendum should deal with the amending of the Constitution.

DEFINITE steps toward more rigid enforcement of the liquor laws were taken when the house unanimously approved the Cramton bill placing the entire prohibition unit under civil service, and when Brigadier General Andrews, assistant secretary of the treasury in charge of prohibition enforcement, announced the creation of new divisions to check the flow of illicit beer and wine.

Thomas E. Stone, credited with engineering the roundup of the nationwide beer ring in Cleveland recently, was named by General Andrews to be superintendent of brewery control.

General Andrews also announced the appointment of H. Keith Weeks, his secretary, to be superintendent of wine control, to direct efforts to halt diversion of sacramental wine into bootleg channels.

The Cramton bill would require all present employees of the prohibition unit to qualify in competitive examinations for their places within six months. The scheme, originally suggested by the wets, was more recently taken up by the drys.

PERMISSION has been granted by the prohibition division of the bureau of internal revenue to two large breweries to manufacture a malt liquor containing 3.75 per cent alcohol by volume and 25 per cent malt solids, to be sold to the public through drug stores without prescriptions or dealer permits.

The permits were issued to Anheuser-Busch company of St. Louis and the Pabst company of Milwaukee on a six months' trial during which the breweries are required, to aid the prohibition division in the prevention of the sale of the malt liquor to the public for beverage purposes.

Director of Prohibition James E. Jones gave his consent to the new brew after chemists of the bureau of internal revenue had reported that the tonic could not be used as a beverage.

The senate confirmed the nomination of Thomas F. Woodlock of New York as a member of the Interstate Commerce commission by a vote of 52 to 25.

Confirmation came after a five-hour executive session, in which the attack against Mr. Woodlock was led by Senator Wheeler (Dem., Mont.), who charged that he was under the influence of Wall street.

UNANIMOUS agreement on measures contemplating the creation of an army air corps, under a second assistant secretary of war, and authorizing the undertaking of a five-year construction program as a result of which 2,200 new planes would be added to the equipment of the existing air service, was reported from an executive session of the house military affairs committee.

The bill, it is said, will embody many of the major recommendations of the Morrow aircraft board as well as suggestions made by the Lampert investigating committee, the Lassiter board and Secretary of War Davis in his confidential program.

OPPONENTS of the Italian debt settlement were heard in the senate. Senator Robinson (Dem., Ark.) minority leader, led the attack. He assailed the "capacity to pay" theory governing the settlements made by the American debt commission. He demanded that Italy before receiving concessions from the United States show her good faith with respect to a disarmament conference. Senator Reed (Dem., Mo.) asserted that the United States can collect a larger sum than proposed from Italy "if we had some good red blood in our statesmen."

Senator Borah (Rep., Idaho), chairman of the committee on foreign relations; Senator Howell (Rep., Neb.), Senator Shipstead (Farmer-Labor, Minn.), and other opponents of the Italian settlement also participated in the discussion.

Senator Robinson said the "capacity to pay" standard is false and unreliable.

EFFORTS to solve the Tacna-Arica boundary dispute by the plebiscitary commission set up by President Coolidge have been abandoned for the present in favor of direct negotiations between the United States and the governments of Peru and Chile. Both Peru and Chile, the State department announced, have accepted the offers of mediation made by the United States and correspondence is now going on between Secretary Kellogg and the two governments over the question of the best method to go about settling the controversy.

THE French government's weakness was revealed in the chamber of deputies on the request for emergency funds to sustain state functions during April. War Minister Paul Painleve's demand for 10,000,000 francs ($350,000) credits to carry on operations in Syria were reduced 1,000,000 francs on the motion of Socialist Deputy Baron. The vote was 268 to 265.

Premier Briand, who feared a similar attack on the appropriation for the war in Morocco, rushed to the rescue. He pleaded with the deputies not to hamper him at a moment when peace in Morocco was just over the horizon. He defended the much criticized French refusal to consider Abd-el Krim's peace offers, and then announced France was about to make a counter offer to the rebellious Riffians. These terms are already formulated, he declared.

Deputy Baron, who has just returned from a first-hand investigation of the Syrian rebellion, said he thought it would be a good idea to hand over the Syrian mandate to Premier Mussolini of Italy.

GREAT BRITAIN will not continue to support Spain in her fight for a permanent seat in the League of Nations council and will definitely oppose any enlargement of that body except through the addition of Germany when the League assembly meets again in September.

This change in the British attitude was announced by Sir Austen Chamberlain when he made a complete private expose of the recent British policy at Geneva regarding the League of Nations to a group of members of the house of commons representing both opposition and government supporters. He kept nothing back, he declared, and even read confidential telegrams exchanged by the powers.

Brazil will not be permitted to continue to veto Germany's application for admission to the council in September, he declared. The League assembly will meet and re-elect temporary council members before the question of Germany's admission again comes up and unless Brazil agrees in advance to withhold her veto, she will not be given a temporary seat in the next council. The place will be given to some other South American power.

The foreign secretary declared British policy has been altered to meet public opinion as clearly expressed, and his pledge to support Spain's aspirations, which was one of the causes of the difficulties at the last League meeting, has been formally withdrawn.

Sailors Rescued From Fast-Sinking Vessel

New York.—Adding a brilliant chapter to the long tale of thrilling rescues at sea during storms of the past winter, the British tanker Shirvan was en route for Falmouth, England, with 28 seamen saved from the British freighter, Laleham, which left Newport News, Va., March 25.

The Shirvan, racing to the side of the stricken freighter in a gale 400 miles off Halifax, beat the liner Mauretania, which also had swerved from its course at the first cry for help. The Mauretania resumed its course for New York after Capt. A. H. Rostron had relayed a brief dispatch of the rescue by the Shirvan.

Captain Rostron, who was in command of the Carpathia when she rescued the survivors of the Titanic in 1912, reported that the Laleham was nearly on beam ends with all its lifeboats carried away. His message gave no details of the rescue, except that the Laleham was sinking rapidly.

Reports that the American freighter Blair was in trouble were cleared up when operators here received a wireless from its captain saying the freighter has experienced no trouble and had not sent out any distress call. Naval communications received an S. O. S. signed "S. S. Blair," but nothing further was heard. The Blair's position was given by the captain as 1,302 miles southeast of Delaware capes, and was bound for Philadelphia and New York from Greek and Spanish ports.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mrs. Annie Kwinski of 526 1st Avenue, Milwaukee, Wis., writes that she became so weak and run-down that she was not able to do her housework. She saw the name Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the paper and said to her husband, "I will try that medicine and see if it will help me." She says she took six bottles and is feeling much better.

Mrs. Mattie Adams, who lives in Downing Street, Brewton, Ala., writes as follows: "A friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and since taking it I feel like a different woman."

With her children grown up, the middle-aged woman finds time to do the things she never had time to do before—read the new books, see the new plays, enjoy her grand-children, take an active part in church and civic affairs. Far from being pushed aside by the younger set, she finds a full, rich life of her own. That is, if her health is good.

Thousands of women past fifty, say they owe their vigor and health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and are recommending it to their friends and neighbors.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Traverse City—For the first time in history, mail was carried recently from Leland to North Manitou island by motor car, Tracy Grosvenor, the regular mail carrier, and Louis Moser, engineer at the island coast guard station, making the 14 mile trip in one hour and twenty-five minutes.

Lansing—Thirsty citizens of Michigan who are looking forward to the sale of the new medicinal beer sanctioned by Lincoln C. Andrews, who is in charge of federal prohibition enforcement, must abandon hope, for "if it's beer, they can't have it, and if it's not beer, they won't want it," as one official put it.

Lansing—Harold Waples, of Ironwood, has been appointed assistant attorney-general, it has been announced by Attorney-General Andrew B. Dougherty. He succeeds Homer Quay, recently resigned. The new assistant attorney-general, who will begin his duties immediately, was prosecuting attorney of Iron county for four years.

Alto—The local school building was destroyed by fire the morning of April 1st, with a loss estimated between $7,000 and $8,000. Lack of water handicapped the fire fighters. Only two or three pupils were in the school when the fire was discovered about 7:30, and they hastily got out of the building. None of the building's contents were saved.

Jackson—Fred R. Harris, city manager of Escanaba for the last four years and before that chief engineer of the Michigan Public Utilities Commission has been elected city manager of Jackson to succeed Harry A. Freeman, who was removed from office recently two weeks after his appointment. The vote of the city commission on appointing Mr. Harris was unanimous.

Grand Rapids—The Rotary Club, which is directing observance here of Boys' Week, May 1 to 8, has arranged with City Manager Fred H. Locke for boys to fill administrative offices in the city hall during a portion of one of the days of the week. Three years ago, during a week dedicated to the Boy Scouts, picked Scouts filled all city hall offices and conducted the affairs of the city for an hour.

Port Huron—Expert tests made by the chief chemist of the Imperial Oil company, Sarnia, of oil taken from the well of the St. Clair-Sanilac Prospecting company, which "came in" recently, show that it is of a high quality, it is declared. Officials of the company have estimated the daily production of the well to be 50 barrels. The company is one of several concerns prospecting for oil in this vicinity.

Detroit—"More teachers of the beaten anvil type, and less of the French pastry type," was offered as the panacea for the general indifference towards scholarship in high schools, by G. E. Ganiard, superintendent of Mt. Pleasant schools, at the final session of the department of superintendents and school board members of the Michigan State Teachers' association which met here recently.

Grand Rapids—An annual physical examination of every individual was urged by the secretaries' conference of the Michigan State Medical society, during its meeting here. If every person would submit to a yearly examination and if doctors would keep a card index of all their patients, many deaths would be averted, life would be prolonged for the average individual and "hit and miss' medical advice would disappear, they said.

Lansing — Michigan creameries were given 30 days in which to report plans for ridding Michigan streams of their pollution at a meeting held recently by representatives of creameries in Lansing. The creameries, like numerous other industries, were summoned to appear for a conference with representatives of the Attorney-General's office, the State Conservation Department and the Department of Health to decide upon methods of ending stream pollution.

Ann Arbor—That graduates of Michigan high schools make better records in college than those of any of the other 19 states in the North Central association, was the assertion made by Prof. C. O. Davis, of the Education school of the University of Michigan, in an address before members of the Michigan Schoolmasters' club. Nearly 2,500 members, school teachers and educators from the entire state, gathered here recently for a three-day session of the club.

Charlevoix — Postmaster G. W. Weaver, of this city, disheartened by the late spring, the parting of the United States weather bureau telephone cable between Charlevoix and St. James, and the breaking up of the ice in Lake Michigan, thus severing all communication with Beaver Island, is making every effort with the postoffice department at Washington to procure temporary airplane service to that point. Captin Weaver already has taken up the matter with the postmaster general and Congressman Scott.

Lansing—Application for a rehearing in the supreme court of the St. Clair flats case, recently decided against the state, will be filed soon. The application is being prepared by Sheridan Master, assistant attorney-general. As the case affects many Detroiters, who have leased lands in the flats, on which they have erected summer homes, a number quite pretentious dwellings, Masters said he will ask the court to decide whether the leases now in force should be revoked in case the decision should be reversed.

Man Like a Bicycle

Congratulated by a London Evening News man on reaching his eighty-first year, Lord Phillimore said his secret of long life, health and happiness lay in hard work, plenty of fresh air and domestic happiness. "As long as a bicycle keeps running," he said, "it stays upright. It is the same in human life. To live long one must keep active. Idleness is fatal."

A Gift To Egypt

John D. Rockefeller's proposed gift of ten million dollars for the purpose of founding a museum and research institute in Egypt, is a big step forward in the advancement of a learning of which we are now finding out the importance. Americans have played a big part in recent years in promoting the excavation work in Egypt and Asia, and a Rockefeller museum and research foundation will play a big part in correlating the work that is being done and organizing it upon a basis that would produce the best results for a given amount of effort.

The establishment of a museum will also aid Egypt in keeping the important relics found. In the past Egypt has been robbed of a vast amount of loot from the tomb of her great rulers; she should in the future be enriched and not impoverished by the research. The Rockefeller museum should be a bulwark against further rifling of the tombs for the enrichment of foreign museums. Greece has never forgiven Lord Elgin for stealing the famous marbles from the parthenon, and today the vestiges of the glory that was once Greece's must be seen in museums scattered about the world. It is to be hoped that with the establishment of a museum at Cairo or Alexandria this will not happen in Egypt.

Citizens Training Camp Popular

Colonel Raymond Sheldon commander of the Military training camp at Custer reports that up to date 601 students have registered for summer training which he thinks is about one-third of the usual quota. This number of young men sending applications so early augurs exceedingly well for the Camp, and the Colonel is very hopeful indeed. It is claimed that a number of big manufacturing establishments in Michigan are this season going to permit their help to attend the camp and draw full wages the meanwhile.

Any young man of good character and physically sound between the ages of 17 and 24 years is eligible to attend one of the training camps in Michigan, and have all his expenses paid by the government. Camp Custer will open on July 8 and close August 6, while the camp at Fort Brady will be conducted during August.

Applications can be had from any member of the committee organized in every county in Michigan, or by applying to the 85th., Division Headquarters, 204 New Telegraph Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

"The well painted house brings more"
CLEAN UP AND PAINT-UP

Real estate men know that well kept property is more valuable—for sales, or rental, or a loan. They know also that a paint-needy house drags down the value of all other property in the neighborhood.

The Secret Of Success

A certain fellow who answered advertisements in cheap story papers has had some interesting experiences. He learned that by sending one dollar to a Yankee he could get a cure for drunkenness. And he did. It was to "take the pledge and keep it."

Then he sent fifty two-cent stamps to find out how to raise turnips successfully. He found out "Just take hold of the tops and pull."

Being young, he wished to marry and sent thirty-four one cent stamps to a Chicago firm for information as to how to make an impression. When the answer came it read, "Sit down on a pan of dough." It was a little rough, but he was a patient man, and thought he would yet succeed.

Next advertisement he answered read, "How to double your money in six months." He was told to convert his money into bills fold them, and he would see his money doubled.

Next he sent for twelve useful household articles, and he got a package of needles.

He was slow to learn, so he sent one dollar to find out "how to get rich." "Work hard and never spend a cent," and that stopped him.

But his brother wrote to find how to find how to write without pen or ink. He was told to use a lead pencil.

It is needless to remark that the secret of success is not in trying to get something for nothing. Such endeavors usually end in failure.

Who Foots The Bill

Just now the nation seems more concerned about the criminal after he has been safely stowed away in prison to answer for his crimes, than it was in the old days in demanding that the criminal be punfor his crimes.

How to mete out satisfactory and sufficient punishment without punishing society also, is a problem facing penologists to-day. We have a different method of treating prison inmates now than we did up to a few years ago.

The old-time wardens believed in making prisons a place for punishment, rather than a spot where the prisoner could spend his time in idleness, resting up until the day came when he would be released to once more prey upon his fellowmen. Many ideas for his treatment after the cell doors closed on him have been advanced, It is a mistake to treat the confirmed criminal as if he were on a holiday, yet the fact that he is a human being must not be lost sight of, for the brutal methods of former days are as outlawed as the saloon. Humanity in recent years has stepped in and forbidden many of the old forms of punishment that existed in our penal institutions when the smallest infraction of the rules was punished by whipping or the dark dungeon. While these stringent punishments were no doubt overdone at times, since their severity often depended upon the judgment of the wardens, yet we sometimes feel that a little more of the whipping post for petty crimes would be very beneficial.

As an example of the laxity of discipline might be mentioned the treatment of prisoners on the road gangs in this county. They are practically under no restrictions after the day's work is done, and if they desire to jump into an automobile and go to a country dance several miles, nobody interferes, and gasoline even is furnished. No punishment to that, sure!

Sows At Farrowing Time

A sow at farrowing time is much like an opera star—she is likely to be tempermental. As the expected birthday nears, the sow may become fretful and that is the time when she should be given the greatest care and attention. This is one of the points stressed in the Radio Farm School by Prof. John Evvard of the Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station. Sometimes one has a fretful sow that is much disturbed by being close to others as the happy event approaches and in that case it is well to transfer her to an individual hog house where she may be "by her own sweet lonesome" and have most everything her own way. It is also a good idea to get her into farrowing quarters a few days before the expected hour. A couple of weeks in close quarters is bad business; two to five days is approximately the ideal. "It is a good idea to be on hand when the fun starts, and lend whatever assistance is necessary. If a sow is quartered in a cold place so that the pigs are likely to become chilled, the pigs should be removed, one by one, as they appear, and dried off perhaps with an old gunny sack After all are born they are returned for frequent nursings, say two or four hours between feedings, until such time as the sow and family can make a go of it.

A Letter To His Satanic Majesty

Perhaps many of our readers are familiar with the keenly edited little sheet published at Moravian Falls, North Carolina, in the interests of Good Americanism and against His Royal Nibs, the Pope of Rome. Below is an extract from a recent issue of the Yellow Jacket and while we do not deal regularly in this class of braggadocio, yet we see some things particularly cute and worthy of mention:

"A LETTER TO THE DEVIL

Moravian Falls, N. C. Dec. 25, 25
His Satanic Majesty, the Devil"
Tophet, Purgatory Co.
Your Infernal Highness:

It has been some time since we wrote you, not being in particular need of any advice from you, as your agent, the Pope is running your affairs pretty smoothly on this earth. You certainly have made things hum. We give you the prize pup for that. You have got our old-fashioned mothers crimping their hair, dancing the Charlestown, puffing coffin tacks and painting the wrinkles from their cheeks until it would require a Senatorial Investigation to tell the difference between an Octogenarian dame and a Ziegfield Folly. You've got our girls bobbing hair on their heads and skirts on their legs until the men are neglecting their work to stare and who can blame 'em? You've got our future mothers checking their corsets—when they wear 'em at the entrance of the dance hall and whimpering to their drunken dude escorts that the sky is the limit. You've got our young men making bootleg poison and then making fortunes selling it, and tax-payers digging down to support high salaried officials to wink their eyes and take the rake-off when the stuff is sold. You've turned the Lord's gifts to men—the automobile, the motion pictures and the radio, over to your appointed agents, and when our wives and daughters are not out burning benzine on a joy-ride they are rushing home to take off more clothes and listen to an imported jazz. You've turned music into madness, mirth into mockery, home into a hop-house, the church into a carnival, society into a spree, education into evolution, law into license, scholarship into sneers, refinement into ribaldry, rest into ruin, devotion into diversion, gratitude into greed, mercy into murder, religion into revolution, government into graft, Christianity into conquest, propriety into passion liberty into looseness, love into licentiousness, and marriage into a mere masquerade of matters unmentionable in the family newspaper. You've put devils into the pulpits to preach that Christ was a mere man. You succeeded in turning the nursery of citizenship the world's home, into breeding places for soldiers to fight other mother's sons in a world war that did nobody any good, achieving nothing but a harvest of Hate, and sunk civilization into debts and diseases out of which it will not emerge within another century.

And now, Mr. Satan Devil, if you keep up your program until you have everybody believing that man is merely an overgrown ape and life only what you can grab out of it, you will soon be Master of the country in official recognition, as you seem to be in fact.

Yours disrespectfully,
The Yellow Jacket."

A Minute A Day Makes Milking Pay

One more minute per cow per day spent in weighing out the feed consumed and milk produced by each animal, would show the dairy man which of his cows are really working for him and which are loafing on the job, according to the Larrowe Institute of Animal Economics. Thirty one seconds per milking is all the time the farmer needs to keep tab on the performance of each of the cows in his herd.

"The majority of dairymen who do not keep records of the feed consumption or milk production of the cows, are working under the delusion that the keeping of such records would take up more time than they could well afford to spare", according to the Institute. "They are wrong. Actual timing under practical conditions conducted by the Institute, shows that it takes only eleven seconds more per cow for each of two feedings to weigh out the exact feed, than it takes where the feed is not weighed. To weigh and record the milk from each cow was found to take only twenty seconds more per milking than it takes to just dump the milk over the cooler, or forty seconds for the two milkings. In all, no more than sixty-two seconds, or about a minute, is required to have a complete record of each cow's feed consumption and milk production. If that extra minute devoted to keeping records for say twenty cows, should reveal that one of them was a typical waster incapable of producing milk in profitable quantities—the dairyman would not only be saved the countless hours devoted to its feeding and care, but he would find that he was better off at the end of the year with the remaining nineteen cows than he was with the original twenty.

"Roughly speaking, there are only three distinct types of cows. The Susies, who are good lookers, but simply haven't the capacity when it comes to the milk pail. All feeds they get above the amount required to produce their limited quantities of milk and keep them in condition, are wasted. The Betties are the thin, emaciated creatures who look as though they were ready to lie down and quit, but which have an inherited ability to produce milk that will often lead them to take it right off their own backs. Generally these are sadly underfed, so that they are using only a portion of their capacity. Then there are the Dollies—the army of waster cows that simply can't produce milk profitably. They eat and eat and their owners have neither beef nor milk to show for it. They are overdue at the butcher's. Such cows are in every herd where the dairyman does not feed in accordance with milk capacity and production. Keeping feed and milk records will show the dairyman how to profit from the Susies cash in fully on the Betties, and how to avoid losses on the Dollies.

TAKING BLUE OUT OF WASH DAY

Electricity Makes Possible Many Labor Saving Devices on Farms

Short cuts in farm housekeeping are being encouraged by rapid developments in rural electric contracts.

Taking the "blue out of wash day," the heat out of ironing day and the dust out of cleaning day by the use of labor saving devices is fast becoming possible for the farm housewife. According to F. W. Duffee, agricultural engineer at the University of Wisconsin, the day is dawning when the new rural electric service will help to make the use of such conveniences economically possible.

A small electric utility motor in the farm kitchen can be made to operate several appliances, such as an ice cream freezer, meat grinder, some types of bread mixers or egg and cake beaters. Several other household appliances can be adapted to motor operation.

ELECTRICITY BEST FRIEND OF FARMER

One of the important uses to which electricity is being put on the farms is irrigation. According to engineers of the General Electric Company, electrical pumping is superior to other methods because:

The water is under complete control of the land owner.

The irrigator is not dependent on his neighbors.

The water is flowing in an instant, day or night.

The machinery has no complicated parts to keep in repair

There are no boilers to explode.

There is no gasoline tank to catch on fire.

It is cheaper to install.

It costs less to operate.

The cost of electricity is growing less every year.

It is easily and quickly started.

It is on the job day and night.

It brings power to the barn for doing the chores.

It brings light for sudden emergencies.

It brings a lower insurance rate on barn and house.

It brings a cool breeze for the hot summer day.

It brings a gentle warmth for chilly spring or autumn days.

It brings a soft, pleasing light for the long winter evenings.

It makes the Sabbath a day of rest for the housewife.

It brings the possibilities of dainty dishes for the invalid.

It brings more profit, comfort and pure joy of living to the farm than any one element of life.

FARM RADIO NIGHT

WGY, General Electric Station, Has Weekly Agricultural Program.

Every Monday night at 7 o'clock WGY, the Schenectady, N. Y., station of the General Electric Company, broadcasts a special agricultural program. National authorities on agricultural matters are brought to the microphone and present informative material which may result in increased revenue from the soil and from stock. Leaders in the National and State Grange, professors in agricultural colleges, officials in the national and state departments of agriculture, are all taking advantage of talking directly to the men who are most interested in, and will be most benefited by the information they have to offer.

O. M. Kile, agricultural economist and writer, weekly provides WGY with a letter which generally outlines Washington matters of interest to the farmer. The well-known farming magazine, the American Agriculturist, presents a weekly budget of farm news. One of the most important features is a weekly farm and market review prepared by the New York State Department of Farms and Markets. With the season for spring planting approaching these agricultural periods are of particular interest to the farmer, not only from the immediate benefit he gets from the information offered but from the new sources of information which are opened up for him by the various speakers.

In addition to these weekly Monday evening talks for the men of the farm, WGY offers twice a week, Monday and Thursday afternoons, home economics talks for women by members of the faculty of New York State College of Home Economics.

VALUE OF GOOD LIGHT

Electricity Far Superior and More Healthy Than the Oil Lamp.

Good lighting in the farm home and in and around the farm buildings probably contributes more to the comfort and happiness of all members of the family than any other single convenience. Every member of the family uses this convenience more hours each day, and more days in the year, than any other one thing—even including the automobile.

The value of sufficiently bright lighting, properly located and protected, and instantly available by tipping a switch can hardly be over-estimated.

Oil lamps burn the oxygen out of the air, making it unfit to breathe, and thus often cause ill health. The comparatively poor light they give discourages reading and study and if used extensively may impair the eyesight. With them there is the ever present danger of fire. Electric lighting is odorless, consumes no oxygen and gives the most flexible kind of artificial illumination with the least danger of fire.

ELECTRIC MILKERS PROFITABLE

The University of Illinois has made investigations, one of which includes cost records from sixty-six Illinois farms over a period of six years. The average annual expense of keeping a cow was found to be $18.64 when the cow was machine milked and $22.44 when hand milked. Labor was figured at 17½ an hour, which is, of course, low. It was found also that it takes 133.9 hours per year to milk a cow by hand as against 81.5 hours to milk with an electric machine.

What To Do With Wet Arguments

Of an eloquent prohibition orator it has been said, "He took wet arguments and wrapped around them the rope of irrefutable logic and incontrovertible facts, until they were as dry as a sponge." A picturesque way of describing what we are all trying to do! It is advisable for all lovers of good government to stock up with a goodly supply of facts concerning prohibition and logic as to the righteousness and value of the law, and to perfect themselves in the "drying out" process.

Almost every week one is met with the assertion that the Eighteenth Amendment is ruining the United States. Do not be afraid to handle this mis-statement. Wrap it around with convincing comparative facts and statistics of conditions in prohibition America and liquor cursed England, the working people of the former country employed at high wages, owing their own homes, and often their own cars; the labor element of the latter to a large extent out of jobs and supported by the dole system of the government, while the government, of England continues to saddle itself with a drink bill of over $1,500,000,000.

Or you are faced with the statement that prohibition by depriving the poor laborer of his liberty to drink is rendering him discontented and dissatisfied. Admit that this is true for a certain section of the workingmen from foreign wine drinking lands, then wrap it around with the statement of the Lomotive Engineers Journal, "The railroad brotherhoods with 85,000 members as well as hundreds of thousands of sober, industrious workingmen in the American Federation of Labor, are opposed to booze because they know it never made any man a better citizen, a better worker or a better husband and father." Then wrap it around with the statement of the Los Angeles Times which found as a result of a survey among employers and employees of one hundred of the largest industrial institutions of that city, that prohibition has improved the financial, social and industrial conditions of the average workingman at least twenty five percent.

Perhaps the next misleading and false accusation you will encounter will be the charge that the young people of the nation are all up in arms against prohibition, and have gone over to the illicit use of liquor on the hip pocket flask route. Wrap that bit of wild and wet gossip around with the news item, published widely recently, that delegates to the Midwest Students Conference, representing 123,000 college students in the south, east and middle west, went on record against drink, and put on several more layers of evidence that those great organizations—the Christian Endeavor Society, Epworth Lea. B. Y. P. U., Y. P. B. and many others are as dry in their habits and sympathies as the Sahara desert.

You may have to tackle the fallacy that the enforcing of prohibition is costing the nation so much that taxes are mounting terrifically. Wrap that around until it is bone dry, with the statement of Senator Wesley Jones, in the Congressional Record: "States that have compiled statistics as to the actual net cost of prohibition enforcement or the returns from fines imposed on violators of the laws, find that the bootlegger pays the cost of his own apprehension and conviction. Wisconsin spent $184,850 in four years for enforcement and collected in fines, $1,391,417; Wyoming spent $52,500 and assessed fines of $73,000 in twenty-one months; Ohio's expenditure was $105,202 for 1925 and her receipts were $2,202,764."

Every bit of wet sophistry can be squeezed dry as a sponge, and made to prove the value of prohibition, if subjected to the right kind of treatment.—Union Signal

Letter From A Log Cabin In Lenawee County

This begins a series of letters written by one Miss Chandler to relatives back in Philadelphia in 1832 when Michigan was only a territory:

Hazelbank, June 20th, 1832.

"My dear Aunt:

I had the pleasure about two hours since, of receiving thy letter after not a few unsuccessful walks over to Comstock's in pursuit of one; and as thee speaks of your feeling alarmed on account of the report respecting the hostile attitude of the Indians under Black Hawk. I have almost immediately sat down to answer thee that we have apprehended no kind of danger from them here, and it is thought there is no probability of their venturing as far eastward as Chicago. The reports respecting them have been exceedingly exaggerated. It is not supposed that they are within four or five hundred miles of this place, or ever have been much nearer in force, or that they could get much nearer if they wished to, which I do not believe they do.

The defeated militia mentioned in the papers, lost only eleven instead of fifty-two men, and the probability was that some of them were only missing. The settlers beyond Chicago, who on the first alarm had retreated to the forts, by the latest accounts, were reported as returning to their farms. Here, in the Territory, there has been at no time cause for terror, though the reports, it is true, on their first reaching here, wore a formidable appearance enough, and as our men were immediately called out and marched westward for a day or two, matters had quite a military aspect. First, came a report that our red skinned friends were ravaging the country between here and Detroit, but before people had time to be frightened, there came on the heels of it, a flat contradiction—Next it was said the Indians were in St. Joseph County with fire and tomahawks; then that they were assembled in a force of fifteen hundred to two thousand men at White Pigeon Prairie (about a hundred miles west of here); then that they had burned Chicago, etc., etc. Some few folks around Adrian and Tecumseh were rather scared, I suppose, but in our neighborhood no serious apprehension of danger appeared to be felt, except in one or two instances, and then not beyond the first alarm.

Immigrants are coming in fast. The land on the other side of the river, which hitherto has lain quite unoccupied, is now being taken up rapidly. Four families have purchased there within the last week or two, and an old friend from Massachusetts, an elder of the meeting, about the same time, took up seven lots there, and four in other places, with the expectation of moving here with all his children and grandchildren, amounting to forty persons.

I was at a "quilting" last week; there were about twenty girls besides myself, and in the evening about the same number of young men. Their dress and manners generally were such as I suppose would very little accord with the idea you city folks have formed of the people of the "backwoods." The young people in our neighborhood do not dress near so much as they do in Tecumseh, but in general well and frequently tastefully. And there are several of our plainer and older folks that might be seated down in any of the Philadelphia meetings on First day, without their being known from the dress to be strangers.

We have paid and received several visits since I wrote last.

An expression which caught my eye in thy letter, just now, put me to running over in my mind the number of families within about a mile of us. They muster fifteen and some of them not small ones either; but they are not all in separate houses, nor will they all remain within that distance. None of them are going very far off. One house not far from us consisting of but two or three rooms contains families to the number of twenty-seven persons.

The country at this time looks most beautiful. The openings are not covered so profusely as they were with flowers two or three weeks since, but they still are quite numberless, and I am never weary of admiring the beautiful green of the trees and openings. Brother's wheat is in head and looks fine.

I suppose our library will reach Adrian sometime this week. I want very much to know what books they have got, and how many. I think the selection will be a good one, Novels are excluded.

The character of the people here is decidedly intelligent, and that in no trifling degree. That they are a reading people may be inferred, both from the circumstance of their taking so early an opportunity to furnish themselves with material for it, and from the number of newspapers taken and supported in the Territory. There are five weekly papers published in the Territory, all of which have a general circulation here. Papers from Philadelphia, New York state and Boston are also taken by several. As a necessary consequence of this and the pains taken to secure a good education, bumpkins are very scarce, and the young people are growing up respectable and intelligent and with a far greater degree of intellectual superiority generally, than we meet with in many neighborhoods in Pennsylvania, where the advantages might be supposed to be greater. I have also noticed with pleasure the general absence of all petty meanness and closeness, and in several instances that have come under my notice of that, a disposition to take no advantage of the scarcity of an article to demand an exorbitant price for it.

Brother took about a day this spring for an exploration thru the woods in search of ornamental trees of several sorts, of suitable size, for planting around our cottage. He procured a number of the sugar maples, and some other very pretty trees, most of which look very flourishing, and will, when they grow a little larger be a great improvement to the looks of the house and if I could get anybody to send me a slip or two of honeysuckles (of which I believe there is not a bit in the Territory) to clamber about the door and windows, I think in the process of time it would look quite pretty. Tell Ann the robins' nest is gone, what destroyed it I know not, but I felt quite sorry about it.

In addition to the articles mentioned in my last letter, we should like to have a couple of schillings worth of free sewing cotton which I then forgot to mention. I should like to have fifty or a hundred quills; they are among the scarcest and dearest things in Michigan.

With much love to uncle and thyself. I remain, very affectionately thy niece.

E. M. C."

By far the worst piece of road in this vicinity is reputed to be the gravel highway east of this village in front of Sunnyside farm owned by George Holcomb & Son. For a few days every automobile, big or little that tried to pass there was mired, and one day it was necessary for Mr. Holcomb to keep his team harnessed most of the time to pull machines out of the mess. The County Highway department was summoned and they were able to repair the damage satisfactorily. We hear no more complaints, but this is sure some giveaway on the commissioners.

First Use of Army Khaki

Khaki is really a color and not a material, although the name is now given to a familiar army cloth; it is a Hindu word meaning dusty or dirty. Cloth of this color was first worn by British troops at the time of the Indian mutiny. Melton cloth was so named because the manufacturer, who had been asked to make a rough, unfinished material, deemed it unwise to invoice it as such, so he dubbed it Melton, the name being suggested by Melton Mowbray, where lived the tailor who first ordered this material.

"What would he be doing at Wailing River?" But Steele already half guessed.

"He cum once een de summer—he cum wid 'noder man to tak' her to Ogoke."

"What? You mean to say that Laflamme was crazy enough to try to take her by force? Nonsense, Michel! St. Onge would have had the police at Ogoke within a month."

"Eet was crazee t'ing to try—but he try eet."

"St. Onge never told me this," said the provoked American. "It explains her fear when she saw me that day."

"She nevaire know Beeg Antoine try to get her, but she have fear."

"So you have always taken care of her since the visit of Big Antoine? Tell me about it."

"Eet was las' June, after dat Indian carry letter from Laflamme. He tell me Laflamme was goin' to get ma'm'selle, sometam. So de nex' tam she go' to play at de rapide, Michel ees dere. After long tam I hear somet'ing move een de bush. I wait an' see dis Beeg Antoine—he watch her but she don' know; she play de feedle. I don' wan' to scare her as I walk on de portage wid de beeg whistle so dey hear me an' get out. I follow dem tru' de bush an' een little tam on de riviere 'bove de pos', see Beeg Antoine talk to 'noder feller."

Michel stopped, relit his pipe, and smiled tantalizingly at the interested Steele.

"For heaven's sake, go on! What did you do? Why didn't you drill both of them?"

Michel blew a cloud of smoke before he said:

"You see dis Beeg Antoine at Ogoke?"

"Yes."

"Wal, he move hees head when I shoot. Eet was bad shot."

"So it was you who gave him that scar?"

"Ah-hah!"

"What happened to the other man?"

"He did not move," said the Iroquois, grimly.

"You hit him?"

"Beeg Antoine go back to Ogoke alone."

"And they never came again?"

"No, but we had fear."

There was a hard glint in the eyes of Steele as he turned to David.

"David," he said. "I owe you an apology. When we had that snake in our hands we should have finished the job. It would have been held self-defense by any decent jury."

David lifted his wide shoulders "We feenish dat job sometam, boss."

* * * * * * *

As Steele had foreseen, the running down of a beast patrolling a country of the size of the Wailing River valley was clearly a matter of chance.

It was decided that Steele and David, with the bloodhound, which they were anxious to test on the snow at once, should work over to the Medicine hills and Phantom lakes district with the purpose of quieting the Indians, if possible, and holding them in the country, as well as of waiting the possible reappearance of the night wailer. Michel, with Little Jacques, a French-Cree, sent from Albany to work at the post after the loss of the fur canoe, and the sole Indian to volunteer for such dread duty, were to patrol the Portage Lake country as far as the traplines on the Little Current and the Drowning. Both parties were to report back at Wailing River in two weeks. In the meantime, a jack pine at the junction of the Stooping with the main stream was chosen as the message center to which a man from each party was to return in a week for news of the other, and whither St. Onge would send any information from the post down river. In this manner they could cover a great area of the lower Wailing.

The plan of campaign settled with the hearty approval of St. Onge, the traps were divided between the sleds, loaded with supplies for two weeks. If the beast, imitating that terror of the northern trapper, the wolverine, continued robbing the trap-lines, some night relentless jaws would yawn under the snow for his unwary feet—jaws, which, if once shut, would hold their victim in grip of steel until the freezing death brought swift relief.

Before he started, Steele returned to the house. At breakfast Denise had been gracious, affable, but impersonal, and Steele felt that the mood of the previous evening still possessed her. So, justly hurt, he made no attempt to plead his case or correct the impression she had patently suffered herself to nourish—the belief that he had lightly gone from her revelation of the secret places of her heart, that day on the beach, to a low intrigue at Ogoke; under the pretense of seeking information, had met Rose Laflamme secretly, only to escape surprise and detection by the alertness of his watch-dog, David. Thus the situation shaped itself in the mind of the smarting Steele; and, as it is ever with the unjustly suspected, he had, with a brave show of indifference, hardened his sore heart to the suffering girl whose burden was already sufficiently great.

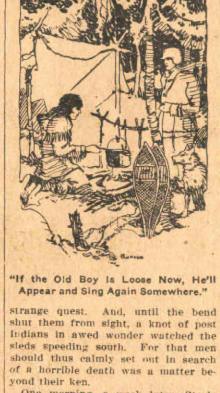
But her welfare demanded his early departure from the post and the man whose thoughts she filled, left her that morning without an attempt at defense or explanation.

"We were going up the river at once, mademoiselle. I want you to know—in case anything happens—and trouble, that I have done what I could."

The sober eyes of the girl grew wistful. She started as if to speak, then turned her head, while he watched the blood surge to her throat, her face, then fade. Never had she seemed more lovely—more exquisite. A mad desire urged him to take her in his arms—to make her see how deeply her self-inflicted hurt wronged his love for her; to tell her that it was all so futile—so useless, this suspicion of hers, which walled them off from each other. Then she said:

"You have been so good to us—are doing so much. We can never repay you. I wish you all success, monsieur, and a safe return."

That was all. Sick at heart he turned away to the waiting dog-teams, which, followed by the blanketed bloodhound, jingled out of the clearing and down to the river ice on their strange quest. And, until the bend shut them from sight, a knot of post Indians in awed wonder watched the sleds speeding south. For that men should thus calmly set out in search of a horrible death was a matter beyond their ken.



"If the Old Boy Is Loose Now, He'll Appear and Sing Again Somewhere."

One morning, a week later, Steele was frying moose steak in his camp in the spruce, on the Little Medicine river. Three days before, David had started with the dogs for the rendezvous at the mouth of the Stooping river where (from Portage lake) word would be left on a piece of birch bark by the partner of Michel. In the Medicine hills the friends had found most of the Indians back on their trap-lines, but uneasy and fearful of the early return of the Windigo, and the conditions along the Phantom chain of lakes were similar.

As Steele sat by his fire eating his breakfast of moose, bannock and tea, the nose of Windigo, the hound, lying at his side, lifted to sniff the air. Then a low rumble swelled his black throat.

"What's the matter, old boy? Smell something?" And Steele patted the dog's wrinkled forehead.

The wind blowing upstream again brought the message, and springing to his feet, the bloodhound ran toward the river, sucking in the biting air through quivering nostrils, then raised his head in a deep-throated bay.

Curious, Steele left his breakfast to follow the dog to the river ice, where already his heavy voice boomed out upon the silence of the frozen forest.

For a space he gazed downstream at a dark object moving up the white trail, then exclaimed:

"That's David! And he's pushing the dogs for all there's in them. News! He's heard from Michel."

Running to the tent, Steele hastily got his bags ready for a swift return downriver, then returned to the ice.

In a matter of minutes, David, with face circled by the frost from his hot breath, drove his light sled up to Steele, the noses of his dogs white with rime.

"Get de stuff on de sled, queek!" cried the excited Ojibway. "Here ees de word from Michel!" And he thrust into Steele's hands a roll of birch bark on which, in the syllabic writing of the woods Indian, was burned the message from Michel, in Ojibway, left at the jack pine by Little Jacques.

"Come to Portage lak', fas'," read David over Steele's shoulder. "Plentee work for de dog! Michel."

In his delight, Steele slapped the heavy caribou-skin capote of his friend. "The Windigo's loose over in the valley!" he cried. "When can we get there, if the snow holds off?"

"We camp at Portage lak' een t'ree sleep—mebbe two. De dogs ees tired. I leeve Wailin' Riviere onlee one sleep back," replied the Ojibway, making the bags fast with the sled lashings.

Through the day the team hurried past the silent spruce-clad hills of the valley of the Little Medicine. Through the day the men cast anxious looks at the black cloud-banks hovering in the north, for no snow had fallen in a week and it was overdue. To his delight, Steele had already learned that the dog could easily hold to a fresh trail over the ice or hard snow, packed by the wind. But a fall of new snow on a trail was another matter, and the Windigo might not stay in the country.

That night they camped on the Wailing, and in the morning pushed on up the Stooping river trail to Portage lake, following the sled tracks of Little Jacques. Still the snow held off, but Portage lake and Michel were fifty miles away.

In the early afternoon of the second day from the Wailing, when the narrowing of the river and the break in the hills ahead indicated their nearness to their goal, the snow they feared began to fall. Shortly Little Jacques' sled trail grew fainter and fainter on the wind-packed snow, and vanished. And by the time the team turned into Portage lake and sought a camping place in the thick scrub back from the shore, men and dogs were sheeted in white.

"Well, we've lost again!" said Steele, bitter with disappointment.

"We know bettair w'en we see Michel," replied the philosophic Indian.

Soon, as the early November night shut down, like a blanket, on the white lake, the birch logs blazed high before the shed-tent and the tea pail and the kettle of moose stew were simmering over red coals.

"If the old boy is loose now, he'll appear and sing again somewhere. There's some consolation in that," dropped Steele, as he filled his pipe.

"We strike hees trail yet, you nevaire—" David broke short off, to rise and peer suddenly into the wall of murk hemming in the fire in the scrub, then walked swiftly into the blackness beyond the circle of light from the fire.

"What is it, David?" called the man at the fire. But there was no response from the other who had faded into the night.

The excited dogs broke into a chorus of howls to the accompaniment of the bass of the hound. There was something out there in the snow-curtained gloom. Steele rose to his feet. Then a voice called: "Bo'-jo! Daveed!" And he knew that Michel had found them.

"Hello, Michel!" he cried, shaking the hand of the Iroquois, who preceded David to the camp-fire. "We did our best to beat the snow here but it was no use. Now tell us about it!"

Seated with his friends by the flaming birch logs, the headman told his story.

When he and Jacques reached the Little Current, he had found all but a few of the most timid hunters on their trap-lines. There had been rumors afloat in the valley of the howling of the beast at Big Feather, but the Portage lake hunters had refused to listen to an Indian who claimed that he had heard the Windigo, in September, on the ridge across from Wailing River post.

"Dat Pierre, he try do good job."

"It was Pierre, was it?"

"Yes; he try hard to scare dem on de Little Curren', too."

But to the surprise of Michel, he returned to Portage lake to find a camp of hunters he had left but two days before, wild with fear and preparing to leave the country. For, in his absence, the Windigo had filled the night with horror from a neighboring ridge. Michel had lost no time in finding the trail and following it down to a creek where he lost it on the ice, and although he followed the stream for miles, failed again to pick it up. Then he sent Little Jacques with the message which David found at the rendezvous.

"Well, he's in this country and we'll keep after him," said Steele, when the headman had finished his story.

There was nothing to do but patrol the country, following the trappers camps, in the hope that some night luck would strike them, and they should wake from their warm robes to hear the voice.

As Steele rolled himself in his blankets under the shed-tent by the fire he wondered if the girl at Wailing River, who had so lightly weighed him and found him wanting, had paused to consider whether the choice of a winter of toil with the dogs, on the snow of the Hudson's Bay watershed, rather than the alternative of the soft life of the city, bore any indication of the singleness of his heart.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Animal to Be Envied Is the Hippopotamus

An unnamed explorer is quoted in the Berliner Tageblatt as speculating on the relative happiness of men and hippopotamuses. Other animals, it appears, have their troubles.

"Many a believer in the transmigration of souls might like to be a magnificent bird of paradise fluttering from twig to twig in the tropic heavens when he returns to earth," he says. "But oh, how soon he would find himself in somebody's roaster or adorning the Sunday-go-to-meeting hat of some fat provincial lady!

"The great wild beasts, though they live in glorious freedom, suffer. Lions, leopards, tigers, elephants, eagles, have a hard life and a constant search for food, and many of them are destined for the lead of the human—or inhuman—hunter's rifle. Let us say nothing of the slavery of domestic animals, which are eaten in return for their services to men.

"There is only one free and fortunate beast, whom man leaves in peace because his skin is useless, his flesh repulsive, and hunting him dangerous. That is the hippo. He can spend his life in philosophic calm, live it out to the end, and grow to be a couple of centuries old—so at least learned men say."—Living Age.

It's poor consolation to the man who is hard up to know that the well-dressed man is compelled to keep a little behind the fashions.

Is your car a General Motors Car?

IF YOU own a Chevrolet, a Pontiac, an Oldsmobile, an Oakland, a Buick or a Cadillac, you own a General Motors car.

"But what," you may ask, "does that mean to me?" It means just this:

General Motors is a family of companies building motor cars and trucks and such other famous automotive products as Fisher Bodies, Delco and Remy electrical systems, Harrison radiators and AC spark plugs. Still other General Motors products are Delco-Light electric power plants and Frigidaire electric refrigerators. There are General Motors plants in 44 cities, employing 120,000 people; and sales and service organizations in 144 countries.

General Motors uses the combined resources of this great family for the benefit of each member. It effects great savings in the purchase of quality materials; it provides the best of engineering talent; it maintains the world's largest research laboratories and proving ground for automobiles; and it assures the permanence of its various divisions and the products which they make.

In other words, General Motors has every facility and every incentive to maintain quality and to offer value for the price; and the current models of General Motors cars are offered as the greatest values in the history of the automobile industry.

Gone to Davy Jones

The expression "Davy Jones' Locker," is used among sailors to denote the bottom of the ocean, especially as the grave of those drowned at sea. "Davy Jones" is the sailors' synonym for death, and hence to say of a person that is dead, that he has gone to "Davy Jones' locker."

"This same Davy Jones, according to the mythology of sailors, is the fiend that presides over all the evil spirits of the deep, and is seen in various shapes warning the devoted wretch of death and woe."—Smollett's Peregrine Pickle.

Shifting Gears on Lollipop

The great actress from her heights was trying to be patronizing. When the little laundry boy entered her dressing room and laid down the package of laundry, she noticed that several of his teeth were out. But she had better have remained silent when she asked him, "And how did you lose your teeth, my little man?" for he replied, "Shiftin gears on a lollipop!"—Bindery Talk.

Jeweled Nose Studs

Will the next fashion craze for women be jeweled nose studs? A London woman, Mrs. Muriel Blantyre, says they are wonderfully becoming. Her husband brought back from India a ruby nose stud such as is worn by men and women of that country. In a spirit of curiosity Mrs. Blantyre pierced her nostrils and inserted it. "I was surprised to discover how pleasing the effect yas. My friends who have seen it quite agreed."

The Stevensons are now getting along fine together

Mrs. Stevenson was crazy about motoring. But she was mad as a hornet over the way the old car looked and Dad had his troubles. Finally he got busy with some Acme Quality Motor Car Finish and now the "Missus" and the motor are both radiant. Finish is easy to apply. Makes new cars out of old. Any color.

North Adams, Mich.

Rev. Scott expects to deliver 2 stereoptican lectures soon.

Dr. Duffee, Supt. of the Albion District will preach Sunday evening at the M. E. church.

Leon Walworth and Elmer Ward were in Springfield Ohio one day last week where they purchased a truck to be used by Walworth and McGregor in their business.

Last week the Jonesville Theater sent a notice to Jerome advertising the coming exploits of Bill Hart in a picture to be shown in Jonesville. Bill is the idol of millions of American boys who delight to see him pull his shooting irons and in an unchristian manner massacre Mexicans, bandits, gamblers and others who disagree with his supposed ideas. Bill is also an adept at rescuing women from the hands of heartless villians. That is Bill Hart in reel life. But in real life Bill is a different fellow for Bill got married a few years ago but shortly thereafter deserted her and refused to come back when the doctors thought she was at death's door and wished to see him once more. That's Bill, the rescuer of women, not only that but Bill hates the Methodist church with a vengeance and makes no bones about his hatred. Yet there are people who wonder why Methodists cannot support the motion picture business.

Funeral services for Mrs. B. F. Merchant were held on Monday April 5th, at Jonesville. Those from this vicinity who attended were Mrs. Minnie Haskell, Howard Haskell and Mrs. Alice Gary.

Forrest Marvin who has been spending the winter at Waukesha Wisconsin at the Government Hospital returned home to North Adams on Sunday much improved in health. He now walks without cane or crutch.

Mrs. Addison Farmer formerly of this vicinity died at her home in Jackson recently and was brought here and interred in the Pease cemetery east of town Sunday afternoon. Funeral services were held at Wheatland Center church. Addison Farmer is a brother of Frank Farmer of near Osseo and well known in this village.

The Woman's Club as usual met Monday at the home of Josephine Jones with a nice program as follows: Roll call responded to with the name of some American who is doing things. Paper "Michigan Laws Women Should Know" Fannie Fowler; radio story "Hearts" was told by Eva Wolcott; piano solo, Elfrieda Calhoun. Next Meet will be devoted to a health program At the noon hour the ladies entertained their husbands at potluck dinner.

Dr. Silas B. Frankhauser of Hillsdale was elected mayor of the city at Monday's election over his Democratic opponent by 638 majority. The only Democrats who got anything were John Fitzsimmons who won over Glenn Miller by 33 majority and Dave Boag for Supervisor who beat the Republicans by a majority of 56. The City Council will not be allowed to finance the Hillsdale band by a special tax as advocated, so the organization is an orphan now and nobody knows just how it is to be maintained. The electorate snowed the proposition under by heavy majority. It looks as if the city of Hillsdale was in its for a bandless, musicless, soulless season.

The greatest temperance convention Michigan has ever known will convene at Detroit on April 22—26. Every man and woman who is interested in keeping the Volstead law intact ought to help by being present or sending a representative. Churches and civic bodies will begin at once to elect delegates for this important affair. All Michigan ministers of the gospel are especially urged to be in attendance and bring along their best Quaker Oats smile, as this will be the biggest temperance rally the United States has ever known. All Methodist churches are expected to send delegates.

"There's a Week's Work of Fencing—Done in a Day"

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

Sealing Wax Used as Paint

Painting with sealing wax is an interesting innovation. Break the sealing wax into small pieces, place in a pan and melt by holding over a flame. Remove from fire and add enough denatured alcohol to make of the consistency of paint. It can now be used very effectively to decorate toilet articles, household articles and various other things which make suitable gifts. As the sealing wax comes in all of the desired colors it is very adaptable for use in decoration.

Tanlac builds strong bodies

"A severe operation left me weak and wasted. I lost 20 lbs. After seven bottles of Tanlac I gained back my weight, strength and looks. Am now using Tanlac to build up against coming winter." Mrs. W. H. Packman, So. Milwaukee, Wis.

There's nothing like Tanlac to purify the blood, put the stomach and liver in working order and build up a run-down body.

Millions of men and women have been benefited by this great tonic and builder that is compounded after the famous Tanlac formula from roots, barks and herbs.

If you are nervous, suffer from indigestion; have rheumatism, torpid liver, buy a bottle of Tanlac at your drug store today. See how you start to improve right from the first. Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation.

Mussolini Shot in Nose by Eccentric English Woman; Wets Arraign Dry Act.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ANOTHER piece of good luck for Benito Mussolini, the redoubtable premier and dictator of Italy! Having just addressed the international congress of surgeons in the capitol of Rome, he was about to step into his automobile when Violet Albina Gibson, member of an eccentric family of Irish nobility, fired a small pistol at him. The bullet struck him in the nose, piercing both nostrils, but the wound was so trifling that Mussolini resumed his office work after it was dressed, and next day began his journey to Tripoli with the battle fleet. The assassin, who is an elderly woman, was rescued from the angry people by the police. Her motive has not been revealed. She is the sister of Baron Ashbourne and her relatives say she is half mad.

The immediate result of the attack was a great outbreak of enthusiasm for Mussolini by the Fascisti in Rome and other cities. The offices of several opposition newspapers were sacked, despite the premier's order that there be no acts of vengeance. The "duce" is now even more of a national hero than before, if that is possible. His departure for Tripoli was attended with great pomp. The fleet accompanying him was made up of a division of battleships, destroyers and submarines, together with large numbers of airplanes and seaplanes. Aboard the flagship Conte di Cavour he received the new directorate of the Fascisti and gave out the details of the party program for the change of Italy from a parliamentary to a syndicalist state. In his address he declared the Fascists had won their battle at home but that there was now the graver battle with foreign countries. It was natural that all countries upholding the principle of fraternity without real brotherhood of equality, without peace or liberty, and without independence would coalesce against Italy. The premier said he foresaw an attempt economically to isolate Italy, but he shouted, "We will win, because we have 3,000,000 youths ready."

Not a day passes without further evidence of the implacable determination of the Fascisti to have their own way. Tuesday they engaged in a pitched battle with their opponents in the province of Palermo, Sicily, and drove them into the mountains. In Naples the Jewish lawyer for the widow of Giacomo Matteoti, Sig Modigliani, was seriously wounded by a Fascist mob. Matteoti was the Socialist deputy who was kidnaped and murdered on June 10, 1924, by a Fascist group. John Amendola, the last important leader of the opposition to Mussolini, died in Cannes as the result of a beating he received from a Fascist mob in Italy several months ago.

Unconfirmed stories sent over by foreign correspondents tell of an attack by Fascisti in Venice on American sailors from the four destroyers that were there. This was due to resentment against the holding up of the Italian debt settlement in the senate. The navy officials in Washington said they had not heard of the event, but the destroyers left Venice suddenly.

EVERY ONE in the country, be he wet or dry, is following with interest the senate committee hearings on the bills for amendment or repeal of the Volstead act. Last week was given over to the wets, and they made the most of their opportunity, under the leadership of Senators Bruce and Edge and with the assistance of counsel for various wet organizations. General Andrews, chief prohibition enforcement official of the government, was the first witness. He told at length of the problems encountered by his forces and of their plans for more efficient work; of the amazing affrontery of the bootleggers and alcohol redistillers and the crookedness of many druggists and physicians. He said that captures made by his agents show that 98 per cent of the whisky Americans are drinking today is fixed, doped, poisoned, split, and otherwise adulterated.

At one point in his testimony General Andrews blamed "politics, the churches, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Anti-saloon league" for the presence in the federal prohibition enforcement organization of men either corrupt or stupid and inefficient. He was not, of course, a friendly witness for the wets, and declared that with more legislation and additional forces he believed he could finally control the situation.

United States District Attorney Buckner of New York followed with disclosures of the enormous quantities of industrial alcohol, much of it poisonous, diverted to the bootleggers and to the stomachs of the people. He estimated the total to be 60,000,000 gallons a year. Other parts of his testimony may be summarized thus:

Twelve hundred drug stores in New York city are selling 480,000 gallons of whisky a year, and that is precisely twice as much as could legally be sold if all the prescription blanks which the law allows the 7100 physicians in that area were legitimately used.

Analysis of 50,000 samples of bootleg whisky captured by federal agents in New York city in two years showed the captures not to be whisky at all, but redistilled denatured alcohol with traces of the poisonous denaturing fluid still in it.

So large and so flagrant is the diversion of industrial alcohol from legitimate channels that now it is being bootlegged into Canada, where the tax on alcohol is very high.

Thirteen months ago, when Buckner took office as United States district attorney for the Southern district of New York, he found the fifth floor of the federal building in New York city a seething mob of bartenders, waiters, liquor peddlers, petty bootleggers, fixers, and bond sharks openly trafficking with justice. They tried to bribe the jurymen even in the building.

Alfred J. Talley, former judge of the court of general sessions, New York city, swore that his court experience convinces him that prohibition is "the greatest single menace confronting the United States and the greatest cause of lawlessness among the most lawless people in the world," and that "for every saloon abolished three speakeasies have sprung up."

Among the many other witnesses heard were Hudson Maxim, Congressman Vare of Pennsylvania, Dr. William C. Woodward of Chicago, representing the American Medical association and Anton J. Cermak, speaking for a delegation of Chicagoans.

CORN-BELT leaders in Washington announce that the cotton growers of the South will support the surplus control bill designed to raise the prices of farm products on the domestic market above the export market price, and believe they will overcome the opposition of the administration to the measure. Secretary of Agriculture Jardine has been drafting a bill which makes some important concessions to the demands of the corn growers. His measure will provide for the creation of a farm board to deal with the surplus problem, as proposed by the farm organizations, but will omit any provision for collecting equalization fees from the producers. The corn belt would finance the price-boosting operations from a $250,000,000 revolving fund advanced by the government. Secretary Jardine will not provide for a revolving fund, but is working out a plan for a loan either by the government or private capital for financing operations in the orderly marketing of surplus products.

ACCORDING to a report of the Department of Agriculture, the farm population of the United States decreased nearly half a million during 1925. It estimates the number of persons living on farms January 1, 1926, to have been 30,655,000, compared with 31,134,000 January 1, 1925. The estimated net movement away from farms last year amounted to 901,000 persons, but there was an estimated excess of farm births over farm deaths amounting to 422,000, which reduced the loss due to cityward movement to 479,000. The estimated decrease in farm population in 1924 was 182,000.

ARGUMENTS in the Brookhart-Steck contest occupied considerable time in the senate last week and it did not appear that an early decision was likely. There was a report that President Coolidge had intimated to Senator Butler, chairman of the Republican national committee, that in his opinion the majority report of the elections committee, which recommended the seating of Steck, Democrat, should be approved. If this is done it is a certainty that Brookhart will oppose Senator Cummins for the nomination in the next Republican primaries. That might result in the election of a Democrat, and the prospect is rather worrying the Republicans.

PROSPECTS are good for settlement of the Tacna-Arica dispute between Peru and Chile in accordance with a plan submitted to the representatives of the two republics by Secretary of State Kellogg. The nature of the proposals was not made public except that they would be substituted for the plebiscite. Ambassadors Cruchaga of Chile and Velardi of Peru both expressed the hope that the new negotiations would succeed.

RAUOL PERET, finance minister of France, won a big victory when the parliament adopted his measures after a week's consideration. Figures issued Tuesday showed that France's budget was balanced for the first time since the beginning of the World war, without including of the country's 52 per cent of the reparations paid by Germany under the Dawes plan.

NEGOTIATIONS for peace in Morocco on the basis of autonomy for the Riffians were proceeding nicely in Paris when a semiofficial announcement from Madrid virtually ended them. This was to the effect that Spain would not accept the terms offered by Abd-el-Krim. Consequently a strong French offensive in the near future is predicted unless Krim is willing to consider new terms offered by France and Spain.

In Syria the French are still fighting the Druses, and a recent dispatch says Prince Hamad Atrash, son of Sultan el Atrash, leader of the tribesmen, was killed in battle at Maarba.

FOUR hundred men and women, fugitives from Russia, met in Paris in the first Pan-Russian congress of emigrants and exiles and laid plans for an early attempt to win back their country from the Bolshevists. Prof. Peter Strouve was elected president of the congress and roused intense enthusiasm when he called on Grand Duke Nicholas, uncle of the late czar, to become grand chieftain of national Russia, assume command of the army and liberate the country from communist oppression. How all this might be accomplished was considered in secret sessions of the conference.

RELIGIOUS warfare between the Moslems and Hindus in India, always smoldering, has broken out in Calcutta and other cities and the British authorities are having a hard time trying to restore order. Mosques and temples are destroyed and many persons are being killed or wounded in the wild street fighting.

Another cause of anxiety to the British in India is the demand of the nazim of Hyderabad that he be given Berar, which was ceded to the English 150 years ago. The nazim has armed forces and might lead a revolt of other dissatisfied Indian princes. British troops have been concentrated in Secunderabad to keep the nazim quiet.

AIRPLANES from the army of Marshal Chang have been bombing Peking, despite the protests of the foreign diplomats. The real battle for the possession of the city seems to have begun. It is reported there that a coalition has been formed between the forces of Feng Yu-hsiang, Wu Pei-fu and the governors of Shansi and Kiangsi provinces for the destruction of the Chili and Shantung armies that are besieging the capital.

Anti-Foreign Feeling Spreading in China

Fort Worth, Texas.—Anti-foreign and anti-Christian feeling in China is strong and is ever increasing, according to Bishop H. A. Boaz, who is here, his former home.

This attitude of the Orient is due, for the most part, he said, to the un-Christian attitude of persons from Christian countries.

Bishop Boaz was sent to the Orient four years ago by the Southern Methodist church to take charge of the work in the field. His official episcopal residence was maintained at Shanghai, China, and Seoul, Korea. His duties extended over these two countries, and Japan and Manchuria as well.

"The Chinese have come to the belief," he said, "that their country has been and is being exploited and that treaties have been formed that have worked to the detriment of China. Members of their race who have been educated in Christian countries are also incined to the same opinion.

"Unless we give to China a fair deal, these conditions will continue to exist. In a measure I fully appreciate the attitude of the Chinese and believe they are partly right in their belief.

"This dissension among the military leaders of China right now will not guarantee protection to life and property, and until the country again becomes stable no faction or group of factions can assure peace and happiness to foreigners."

Had Him Puzzled

The teacher was showing the children how to form the figures from 1 to 12. After writing them on the blackboard several times she told the children to write them in their exercise books from memory.

When, later, she looked at the books she found that one little boy had written the numbers correctly up to ten, but instead of the figure 11, he had written only 1.

"Why, what is the meaning of this, Jackie Jones?" she asked, pointing out the solitary figure.

"Please, teacher," he said, "I didn't know on which side of the 1 to put the other 1."—Pearson's.

New Use for Masks

Gas masks of the type that protected soldiers during the World war were pressed into service by a crew of workers in London while hunting leaks in the city gas mains. The hazard of the job was increased by the necessity of working in deep trenches where vapors had insufficient chance to escape in case flows of considerable pressure were encountered. With the masks, the workers were able to make a thorough search.

STATE NEWS IN BRIEF

Battle Creek—In a resolution adopted by the Battle Creek Ministerial Association, the board of education has been called upon for the second time to place the Bible in the curriculum of the high school. Members of the board of education recently denied a similar request by the ministers.

East Lansing—A better understanding between the real estate men and the farmers in disposing of farm or improving farm properties was the aim of a two-day conference held at Michigan State College, April 9 and 10 by the Michigan Real Estate Board and the college. Many farmers were present for the meetings.

Grand Rapids—All records of snow fall in Grand Rapids were broken during the past winter, according to William H. Tracy, meteorologist at the Grand Rapids Weather Bureau office. Thus far 88.3 inches of snow has fallen. Previous to this winter, the winter of 1889-1900 held the record with a snow fall of 78.7 inches.

Cadillac—Mrs. Lydia Mansfield was defeated by her husband, Wilbur Mansfield, in the race for constable in Boon township. E. V. Morgan, manager of Caberfae Ranch, will be the only new member on the Wexford County board of supervisors when it next convenes here. He defeated William McNitt, Jr., by five votes.

Lansing—Some of the largest oil companies are obtaining leases on Michigan land, according to R. A. Smith, State geologist. The tapping of several oil wells near Saginaw has caused the companies to come into the state to experiment and to make arrangements to get in on the ground floor in case extensive oil fields should be located, he said.

Grand Rapids—Co-operation of the police department, motor clubs and other organizations with the Grand Rapids Safety council has placed the community in the lead among cities of its size in safety matters, according to W. H. Cameron, Chicago, managing director of the National Safety council. Cameron was here to address groups interested in safety work.

Flint—Edward F. Malloska, owner of the Lincoln Oil Co., distributors of gasoline and other petroleum products, who was arrested on a charge of violating the State lottery law by giving away an automobile each month through drawing of chances by tickets given purchasers of his products, will have an examination April 20 in the court of Justice Edwin D. Mallory.

Benton Harbor—Six hundred Western Michigan Rotarians from 29 cities held a two-day conference here April 6-7. The business session was featured by addresses by Paul King, of Detroit, and Arthur Sapp, first vice-president of Rotary International. Sessions the first day were devoted mostly to social activities, with a grand ball and banquet in the evening.

Ann Arbor—That youth is in revolt against the dissension and strife rampant in the modern church and is seeking a "living vessel" or religion was the opinion expressed by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, founder and head of the Free Synagogue, of New York City, in an address on "The Revolt of Youth—Against What?" before an audience of students, faculty members and townspeople.

Lansing—Carl Boehringer and Robert Powers, two former students of Michigan State college, now on a world tour, have reached New York and are waiting for a boat to take them across the Atlantic. According to the boys, their expenses from Lansing to the eastern seaboard totaled $3 each. They received lifts from motorists. They plan to work their way across the water by making themselves useful on the boat.

Grand Rapids—The centennial celebration of the arrival of Louis Campeau, first white settler here, will be held late in September, the exact date to be determined at a meeting April 21 of Mayor Elvin Swarthout's committee which is in charge of the program. The desire of the committee to use school children in the pageantry makes it necessary to hold the celebration after school opens. Charles W. Garfield is chairman of the general committee.

Lansing—Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield in a recent address from the Michigan State College radio station, urged rural beautification. He advocated landscaping on farms and along highways. Rural schools, church buildings and meeting halls should be made attractive, he said. "Rural landscaping has to do with appropriate planting of flowers, shrubs and trees, the layout of the farms, the arrangement of the fields and buildings and preservation of trees," he declared.

Owosso—Competition between doctors has disappeared and today physicians are doing their best to avoid taking on additional practice, Dr. J. J. Haviland, of Owosso, told the Kiwanis Club here recently. He said the reason was that physicians were dying off twice as fast as they were being graduated and added that the time is coming soon when the only place that a sick person will be able to get proper care will be in a hospital, because physicians will not have time to make calls at the homes.

Lansing—Judge Charles B. Collingwood, of the Ingham county circuit court, speaking at Michigan State College pictured the newest model of the arch criminal, the bandit who is filling United States prisons almost to capacity as the youth who, emboldened by drinks from his hip pocket flash, menaces society and threatens to disrupt the social institution, unless some means is taken to curb his activities. He laid the situation to the present disregard of inhibition and the fact that the youth of today has not been taught what "thou shalt not" means.

Painting by Titian Found in Berlin Shop

After remaining for an incalculable number of years nameless and covered with grime, an apparently genuine Titian has been turned up in an antique shop in Berlin.

The subject—one that Titian painted more than once—is "Venus, Cupid and the Organ Player," and, though the Venus is evidently an idealized figure, the organist has been identified as the youthful Philip, later Philip II of Spain, and the Cupid as one of Titian's own infant sons.

Philip met Titian at Milan in 1548 and again at Augsburg two years later, and so might have sat for the likeness. The painting, after treatment, proved to be in almost perfect preservation, and the blue of the sky in the background is exceptionally intense.—The Living Age.

The Vision For Youth

The great field of education is with youth. Here are those who must bridge the period between their fathers' prohibition of the liquor traffic to that of coming generations. Will they continue to build intelligently and securely or, lacking instruction and experience, will they be mislead by the arguments or example of opposing interests into thinking that prohibition has not bettered alcoholic conditions. This has happened in the past. It will not happen again if those entrusted with their training, see to it that they understand the historical and scientific reasons for and advantages of personal abstinence and prohibition.

The answer to the question whether youth will "carry on" the century long labor of their fathers for freeing the United States from the burden of alcoholic drinks and the liquor traffic, depends on the pains we take to teach them all the facts and to give them the vision of the objectives of prohibition. Youth should be taught the modern scientific facts showing the deleterious effects of even moderate amounts of alcohol on physical and working ability; the relation of these effects to the demands of modern industry and transportation; the dangers in even fermented beverages; the evidence that alcohol acts as a narcotic and not as a stimulant; the social results of alcohol in losses to the home and the community through impaired working ability, the disturbance of home life, insanity, poverty, crime. Youth should be given a vision of the world it must help make; of the need of health, vigor unimpaired powers, high ideals, and of the importance of avoiding whatever will handicap in doing the tasks that will be in its hands.

Youth needs to understand that these are the reasons for government interference with the liquor traffic. The individual, not the government, has "an inescapable responsibility," has said President Coolidge, "for the development of character, industry, thrift, and self-control."

"But," he added, "the government can and should always be expressive of steadfast determination, always vigilant, to maintain conditions under which these virtues are most likely to develop and secure recognition and reward. This is the American policy.

"It is in accordance with this principle that we have enacted laws for the public health and generally have adopted prohibition of narcotic drugs and intoxicating liquors."

In this educational training program, home, day school and church school all have a part. Here are certain questions that we might well put to our communities:

Are your superintendents of schools expected and encouraged to provide this training with adequate helps for teachers? Are the teachers in public and private schools supported and encouraged in efforts to train their pupils to ideals of total abstinence and to understand their nation's action in this matter? Are they provided with the up-to-date information that will give variety, richness and depth to this instruction? Are parents cooperating with schools in safeguarding the social activities of youth where youthful bravado and recklessness sometimes still find expression in unlawful or undesirable practices? Are church and school planting in the spirit of youth those ideals and that fundamental knowledge, and are they developing the impulse to act upon knowledge and ideals which will enable youth not only courageously to resist temptation but to help others to withstand it? "The challenge of youth," of which the question of alcoholic liquors is only a small part, summons every agency however remotely connected with the training of youth to serious consideration of methods by which youth may be taught why and how to safeguard himself and his fellows.

The whole matter of education as it relates to the alcohol question may be reduced to a few simple but far-reaching principles: Emphasize the facts that are essential and fundamental to intelligent understanding, and that appeal to human motives of action. Reach the leaders of today and tomorrow.—(From an address—Prohibition and Youth, July 4, 1925.)

Name Good Crops For Coming Year

Michigan crops which seem destined to find a good market demand in 1926, and are therefore most likely to prove financially successful this year, are named by Prof. J. F. Cox, head of the farm crops department at M. S. C.

Professor Cox points out the need for farmers to study the probable market demands in selecting their "cash" crops. Crops in which surpluses now exist, or are likely to exist, are most likely to meet with low prices.

"Alfalfa heads the list as the most dependable crop to be grown in Michigan", says Cox, "It is exceedingly unlikely that surpluses of alfalfa hay will exist for the next ten years. There are few cash crops which will pay as much as alfalfa, but, of course, most farmers can make more out of feeding this cheap supply of protein hay.

"Sweet clover and clover from domestic grown red clover seed are in the same class. With sweet clover seed cheap and plentiful, much is being planted in Michigan.

"Sugar beets are a certain crop for Michigan farmers this year, since the sugar factories are offering the same contracts as prevailed last year, and growers can be assured of a minimum of seven dollars per ton. Sugar beet growers who prepare land carefully and use fertilizer to give the crop a good start and increase its yield are the ones who make the most money. A big tonnage pays.

"Red kidney beans still bring about twice as much as white pea beans. There was a large acreage of white pea beans last year; hence it would not be advisable to increase the bean acreage beyond the average. Red kidneys, on the other hand, are still in strong demand. Care should be taken to get seed which is free of the trouble some 'sport' which is bothering red kidney bean canners. This is a red bean which turns light colored in the canning process."

Farmers Seek New Markets

For several moons now owners of milk producing herds in northern Hillsdale county have been canvassing the idea of improving their facilities of handling the product to and from distant markets, where a number of them have seen fit to ship lately. As the years have come and gone Hillsdale county farmers have drifted automatically into dairying in a larger sense of the word. They have discovered that the better breeds of cows are machines of tremendous value for increasing the monthly receipts

As a matter of fact the succulent pastures of Hillsdale county are as congenial to the dairy cow as fleas to an emaciated pup. The owner can be reasonably sure that his silage, bran mashes and grains are utilized to the fullest extent. All that remains after producing butter fat, becomes high grade fertilizer outclassing all other soil stimulants Nature and man work together on this system of returning to the soil from whence it came, the elements to produce a sweeter pasturage. The dairy idea has already obsessed two-thirds of our farming population, and although the average hired man confesses he hates to milk, yet he can in most cases, attend to a large herd, in any event the milking machine plays a part. The problem could easily be solved by returning to the old-time practice of allowing the hired girl to assist. There would be an abundance of men quickly on hand to milk without complaining. We hear little about milking machines here because the herds are so small, or the farm boys are more willing. Which?

However this may be, we believe in the dairy possibilities of this county, but we deplore the growing tendency to go away for a market.

You have read our mention of the Milk Producers Association—they are doing things. Last Monday a specially appointed committee consisting of J. M. Williams, James Post, Manley Brown, County Agent Sheap, Louis Matthias met Ed Cook and Mr. Bissell, superintendent of the Lansing division of the New York Central lines at Hillsdale to talk up ways and means of getting the producers and consumers in closer touch. The railroad can hardly afford to ignore the dairymen. They're going to cut a mighty figure in shipping circles erelong, whether Mr. Bissell and Mr. Cook believe it or they don't. The shippers of gilt edge butter and dairy products in this county are speaking with a loud voice that will jar things one of these days. We are getting a reputation for thoroughbred stock that reaches the Atlantic Coast, and we are going to get a companion piece for it in the shape of butter fat. Watch our smoke!

We want it made possible to ship our stuff right to the base in Detroit and Chicago, and we mean business! If the head noises of the rails don't come across—well, then there's the highway and the gas buggies—you bet we'll get it.

The Meddler Who Thinks It's A Joke

The other day one of our citizens complained to us that things were not as they should be on Main street. This complainant wanted to know what or why such mischief-makers were so mean and sordid that even the Devil would refuse to chum with them. Why were some folks so dirty as to come to the property of others in the owner's absence, and commit depredations so despicable that even a criminal would not condone them

We could not tell why such work had been done, but we did mention a few things that might happen if we discovered the offender, and the more we ponder, the uglier we get; already we have said a lot which is not fit to print. If there is a resident of this village who commits such crimes for a joke or for downright cussedness, he or she ought to receive the limit of the law provided in such cases. If the law fails, the old-time stocks and whipping post would come in very nicely. The old saying about being "mean enough to steal the pennies off a dead man's eyes" is so nicely put in this case that no more is necessary.

But the world after all, is full of degeneracy, which is a species of insanity. The person or thing who committed the outrage mentioned probably dwells in our midst and for aught we know, may smilingly pass the time of day to us often on the street. To such skunks we have only this to say: "Watch your step—your sins will find you out" and then—Jackson reaches out with its soulless paw and gathers you in.

Letter From E. E. Cole

"Hudson, Michigan.
April 12, 1926.

Editor of "The Advocate" North Adams, Michigan.

Dear Sir:

My attention was called to an article in your paper of recent date, concerning Florida, and having spent the last two winters there and feeling that the writer of the above mentioned article presented only one side of the case, I wish to state some facts on the other side, as it is only fair for both sides to be represented.

Perhaps if your correspondent were to view Florida through the same rose colored spectacles that he did the incidents connected with his trip down there, he would had less to condemn and more to praise.

Florida, as well as Michigan and all other states, has some good qualities and some bad ones, thus carrying out the law of compensation. True, Florida has sand, especially along the coast, so has Michigan on the lake shore; and we would consider it unjust if visitors to our beloved state should tell only of its sand, failing to mention the diversity of its soil and products. I will quote Rex Beach in his splendid article on Florida, as he describes it so much more beautifully than I am able to; but will add that I can verify the most of his statements, for I have been to many of the places he mentions and have seen the things he tells about.

"One has only to go to Sanford to see the celery fields as beautiful and extensive as are to be found anywhere and you don't have to be told that Sanford is the celery center of the south, you can smell it before you come in sight of the town. It shipped $4,000,000 worth last season. So too, at Hastings, where the Irish Potato attains its greatest size and ferocity and where you can see immense fields in all stages of development.

Plant City specializes in strawberries, 10,000 quarts having been raised on a single acre and sold for forty-five cents a quart.

Near Quincy, a great poultry and dairy center, a tobacco grower reported last year a net profit of $2,000 an acre from forty acres of tobacco.

Sumatra wrappers are being worn extensively this season.

There are more than one hundred different qualities of soils in the state, each suitable for something and there are 20,000,000 acres, a large part of which can be made to yield, for God made every thing for a purpose.

Pineapple, and pecans, citrus and celery, cattle and cantaloupes, egg plants of the hen and vegetable variety, almost anything can be made to pay. South of Miami lies the Redland district, an astonishly fertile truck gardening region where 16,000 acres of early tomatoes are raised, besides tropical fruits, such as the avocado pear, mango, papaya, rose apple, pomegranate, sugar apple, chiramaya, sapadillo and many others, one grower alone reporting 271 varieties of tropical fruits which can be grown successfully in this region.

Perhaps you don't know that Florida is a cow country but it is. The largest cattle ranch east of the Mississippi lies on the Kissimmee river, 220,000 acres under fence, where they have the year round natural forage of luxuriant tropical grasses.

Extending north and south thru the center of the state like a back bone, is the ridge country, in some respects the fairest section of all Florida. It is a range of low hills made up of that sandy soil so favorable to citrus growing and nestling between the hills are myriads of friendly blue lakes of clear soft water. Orange and grapefruit groves are everywhere, their undulating rows marching away to the horizon. From the crest of every ridge other groves appear and other lakes smile through the pines. Central Florida is the Land of Ten Thousand Lakes, and it has a shore line sufficient to afford waterfront homes for a million families. Sebring, Lakeland, Kissimmee, Orlando, Sanford, Mt. Dora, each is "the lovelist spot in Florida. Here you will see as fine farming land as can be seen anywhere; to be sure, they do not raise wheat, oats or much corn, neither do we raise cotton, tobacco citrus fruits, bananas or pineapple, nor vegetables every month in the year, but we are glad to exchange our products for their's.

But all of this is aside from the Everglades, which is only a small part of Florida, but contains great possibilities. It is a vast plain, its mellow, fertile soil laid over a foundation of porous lime rock. Canals run through it and the rock taken out is utilized for road building; wherever the land is drained it will raise crops to astonish the northern gardener. This drainage problem is not so simple as it sounds, for danger comes with its over, doing, for when it is well dried out the soil will burn. Successful reclamation, therefore, involves scientific water regulation as well as disposal. This the state of Florida is working out in co-operation with the Federal Government and once it is effected it will render available an enormous acreage. Already millions of dollars have been invested in sugar plantations and mills and a beginning has been made to manufacture and make use of the many tropical fiber plants and grasses which can be raised thereon. Also rubber, which is indigenous to this country, is being raised extensively and a northern paper Co. is planting 100,000 acres to peanuts just for the oil, which is needed to use up the hydrogen gas which is a by product of their Maine pulp mills. The finished product is a hard, white fat. This is vegetable land.

Everglades dirt is shipped for fertilizer and .08 percent of the nations phosphate is mined in Florida. She can easily ship half a billion dollars of farm produce every season aside from her livestock, her fish, her phosphate rock, her lumber and naval stores. She markets a billion feet of lumber annually and out of her standing pines, in summer, drips $50,000 a day. On an average, she ships a carload of fruit and vegetables every 3 minutes every day in the year. A new industry which was of much interest to the writer is the growing of Tung oil trees in the northern part of the state. They are grown by the American Varnish Co. and the oil is used in making paint and varnish.

A striking natural advantage of the south is the long growing season as compared with other sections of the country. In the north and west there are only from 150 to 160 growing days in the year, while the south enjoys from 300 to 365 according to location.

As to investment opportunities in Florida that is a matter of personal opinion, governed by individual experience. Men of national prominence, men of achievement, men whose judgment is accepted as correct, are predicting that Florida's growth will continue until it is one of the most populous states in the Union, and one of the wealthiest. Although growing with tremendous rapidity she is still in the pioneer state, with all the lure, the charm, the fascination and possibilities of a new country. Florida offers health, comfort, prosperity, to youth; it offers adventure, wholesome recreation, unlimited opportunities. To those advanced in years, it offers comfort, happy pastime, longevity.

Again quoting from Rex Beach who says, "It so happens that I know the state reasonably well for when I was a small boy my parents took me by the hand, or it may have been by the scruff of the neck, and snatched me thither in a determined effort to escape the snows of Michigan and to disappoint the pneumonia and other germs which lend such an exciting element of uncertainty to a continual residence in any northern clime My father had grown sick of chilblains and was completely fed up on a climate consisting of three parts winter and one part late-in the-fall, so he went as far south as the map permitted. I grew up in Florida and feel that I can talk with the authority of an intimate acquaintance and the freedom of a friend.

Based not alone upon my own knowledge and observation but also upon the opinions of others, I claim that Florida has two assests either of which is sufficient to more than warrant the growth she is undergoing. Her climate is one her soil is the other. She has an inexhaustible pay streak, not in her sand but in her sky; and so long as snow flies further north, so long as the sun shines and the Gulf stream flows that pay streak will return steady dividends. Mines can be worked out and oil wells run dry; her sun will never cool. The gold in her flaming sunsets is real gold."

Very truly yours,
E. E. Cole, Hudson, Michigan."

North Adams Degenerating

We hate to say it, but there are a bunch of pessimists here who try to make folks believe the town is doomed to slow death, when exactly the opposite is the case. Postmaster Claude VanWert dug up an ancient village directory of North Adams and we say candidly we experienced heart failure when we noted the difference between the number of real business places of then and now. But on second thought, we decided that some things we had back there, we are now much better off without. Blacksmith shops, livery stables and saloons just naturally evoluted out, and they left no mourners. Thirty years ago North Adams was quite a thriving village. Following is a list of the firms doing a good business here: Lucius Russ, justice of peace; Levi Rickerd Groceries; Winnie Morrow millinery; Mae Werner millinery; Corbett & Haskell shoes and furnishings; E. W. Werner harnesses and buggies; O. C. Smith cobbler; Art Corbett barber; Grant Rickerd livery stable; McLouth & Gilmer feeds and flour Maggie Kinney millinery; Ben Corey meat market; Ed Buck groceries; Robert Clark implements; Austin Eyer woodworking shop; Henry Foote blacksmith; E. Salter peppermint distillery; cider mill; Dr. Sabin physician; Dr. Ditmars physician; Dr. Noyes physician; Z. Schaad carriage builder; George Scrivens tailor; Taylor & Brayton blacksmiths; John Williams hardware; H. E. Young undertaking, furniture; Mrs. Will Russ dressmaking; Harry Holcomb bed springs; Ed Hathaway groceries produce; Ed Knowles & Son, carriages harness and implements; Eugene Jackson hardware; Frank Holcomb, groceries produce; C. J. Knapp drugs groceries; Gabe Morehouse & Sons, drugs and liquors; groceries; Andrew Fuller dry goods clothing, furnishings; a grand total of 34 businesses and professional men, and we are quite positive that some are not included in this list as all cannot be traced.

At the present time the list includes Fred Williams & Son feeds and seeds; Parish wood worker; Walters garage; Sharp's Garage; Wheaton auto repairing; Keefer plumber; Ed Blackmer poolroom; Greendale Creamery; Graves and Ford coal and lumber; Barnhardt blacksmith; John Williams hardware, implements; Rex Northrup groceries; Raymond Barber groceries; Will VanAken barber; Will Corey batteries and tires; A. Dietz groceries, medicines; Benge meat market; Citizens Bank; Clyde Wertz groceries, drugs; Harold Young furniture and undertaking; A. J. Carpenter shoe repair; Payne and Green hardware; North Adams Advocate newspaper; Dr. McFarland; Ettie Corey millinery; Crater and Edinger eggs and poultry; Perkins restaurant; Frederick telephone exchange; Dr. Caswell veterinary; Ike Starr shoe repair; Harley Fry real estate; Dr. Ulrich non-resident dentist; a total of 23 which is after all better than one could expect. It will be seen that in 1895 the town contained no less than four millinery and dress making establishments (all doing well) seven groceries, two drug stores, two blacksmith shops; three physicians, which at the present time the town could never support. Owing to the advent of good roads and automobiles our village has gone down and down in the business scale and we shudder to think of what the next thirty years will bring.

An Irish Joke On Masonry

Luther Burbank, greatest naturalist and inventor of 37 different varieties of new vegetables, passed away at his home in Santa Rosa, California. on Sunday, but his works will go on forever.

He had directed that his funeral obsequies be conducted by an old friend, Judge Ben Linsday, and a Unitarian minister of the gospel, Rev. Caleb Dutton. The remains and casket were not to be shown, and the services conducted in the public park at Santa Rosa—thus proving his contempt for churches.

His funeral sermon he commanded, should be the oration used by the great Infidel, Robert G. Ingersoll, at the funeral of his brother. Thus closes the life of one of America's greatest citizens, but it was not generally known that Mr. Burbank was a thirty-third degree Mason, which lodge positively excludes Infidels. Until a few hours previous to his death, the naturalist kept this fact locked in his own chest. Some joke, we'd say.

What the world would like explained now is: How did Luther get by the Imperial goat leader at the time of his initiation?

WOULD CUT FARM COSTS

Electricity Will Tend to Decrease Human Labor Charges.

Great opportunities exist for reducing farm operation costs through reduction in labor and better power application, the Department of Agriculture declared.

Only about 19 per cent of the country's land area is utilized for crops, the department said, and it has been estimated that perhaps 50 per cent can be utilized when population increases make it necessary.

Much farm work now done by human labor, it added, will be replaced by mechanical power.

Power and labor together account for about 60 per cent of the total cost of farming, the department found, and predicted that a better knowledge of the power requirements and adoption of more efficient types of power would do much to cut production costs.

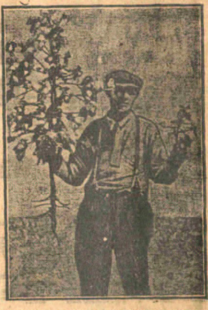
IRRIGATION ON FARMS

Electricity Strongly Endorsed by Texas Professor of Agriculture.

The importance of irrigation to farm lands is vividly shown in the above picture. T. H. Claypool, professor of agriculture of Baylor University, Waco, Tex., shown holding two cotton plants from the same field, is so firmly convinced of its value that he made this statement to a General Electric representative last fall:

"From my 29 acre farm I expect to receive a net profit of $2,500 this year due entirely to electrical irrigation."

Without irrigation this field of cotton would probably have been a complete loss.



HOW IRRIGATION HAS HELPED

Both cotton plants are from the same field, the larger plant from a section irrigated and the other from a section not irrigated.

ELECTRIC HEATER

Not all farm homes are equipped with furnaces, and as a result the use of small electric heaters is increasing. The electric heater can be connected to a current outlet and gives a strong, concentrated heat wherever it is wanted. It is of particular value in heating a small room which is to be used for a limited time.

ON BLUE MONDAYS

Personal Farm Recollections of a Man in Electrical Industry.

Blue Monday on the farm, in the days before anyone even hinted that electric power might remove the blueness, is vividly recalled by Owen D. Young, a high official of the General Electric Company, who was raised on a farm and still owns one near Herkimer, N. Y. Says Mr. Young.

"Blue Mondays were rightly termed 'blue' in the old days, with the milk coming into the house from the barn; with the skimming to be done, and the pans and buckets to be washed: with the churn waiting attention; with the wash-boiler on the stove while the wash-tub and that back-breaking device, the wash-board, stood by; with the kitchen full of steam, the breakfast cooking in progress, and one pale, tired, and discouraged woman in the midst of this confusion. Hungry men were at the door meanwhile, anxious to get at the day's work. Blue were those Mondays indeed!"

LIGHTING FARM BUILDINGS

Proper lighting in barns and outbuildings is as essential as in the farm home. It is often necessary to do work before or after daylight, and the unsafe oil lantern is not satisfactory for this purpose, principally because of the limited range of light.

In wiring farm buildings conduit or armored cable should be employed. While there is no likelihood of fire with insulated electric wires, moisture or ammonia fumes may rot the insulation, rubbing against walls may wear it or rats and mice may gnaw it, causing live wires to be exposed. Where the wires are run through conduit or a lead sheathing the insulation will not wear off or leave live wires exposed.

ELECTRIC FANS ON FARMS

A surprisingly large number of farm homes use electric fans for keeping the kitchen cool while cooking and other daily work is being done. Fans are also used for drying fruits and vegetables, drying clothes indoors and for similar purposes requiring a strong, direct breeze.

A Slide for Life

One day last summer as a couple was enjoying an automobile trip through the southern part of the state, with its elevated hills and deep ravines, it was in wonder that they noticed a man slowly climbing out from beneath a clump of thickly-foliaged shrubs.

Immediately they stopped their auto and anxiously inquired of the stranger, "What do you think you are doing?"

Soon, calmly gazing at the hill above him, he smilingly replied, "This is the fourth time I've fallen off my farm today."—Indianapolis News.

In the morning, Little Jacques was sent back to the post with a letter from Steele informing St. Onge of the reappearance in the Portage lake country of the night wailer. He expressed the hope of being able, with the help of the hound, to obtain a shot at the creature if it remained near the lake. Denise, he did not mention.

With David and Michel breaking trail through the foot of new snow which had fallen over night, the party started on the ice for the mouth of Still river, a small tributary of the lake on which there was a trappers' camp which Michel had not yet visited. Arriving at the tipi of the Ojibways, they found them loading their sled preparatory to making a hasty departure, the dark faces of two men and a boy, marked with fear, while from the interior of the lodge rose the low pitiful wailing of women.

"What are you doing? Why do you leave good otter and mink water and the ridges which have given you many pelts of the silver and the black fox? There is much flour and sugar and tea; there are many trade goods, at the post, which wait for you to come with your pelts at New Year's. Where are you going?" he asked in Ojibway.

Opening his arms in a dramatic gesture the older of the men replied: "How can we stay? The Windigo howls at night from the ridges and robs our trap-lines. He wailed and wept last night when the snow covered the moon. Our women will not pass another sleep here; we fear he will find and kill us."

"Where was he?"

"On the ridge there."

"No good!" Michel turned to Steele. "De snow cover hees track." Then he asked: "You say he robbed your traps? Did you see the trail?"

"Oh, yes, his trail was everywhere. One sleep before the new snow fell, he followed my fox and marten traps, and ate two foxes—the snow was red with blood. They were large—the tracks of the man-eater, very large, and we ran when we saw them."

"Will you stay tonight in your tipi, if we camp here? This is a great shaman from the south." Michel pointed to Steele. "He has a dog that hunts the Windigo—he has a magic howl, and the Windigo fears him. He has bewitched many Windigoes in his own country with his great voice. Tomorrow we will go with you to your trap-lines. No harm can come to you, because of this medicine man and his shaman dog."

The Ojibways gazed in awe and wonder at the great hound, strange to the north, with the pendulous ears and the furrowed forehead, then argued rapidly among themselves, finally calling their women from the tent.

"The Windigo will not come tonight, for he knows the shaman dog can follow his trail even through water, and in his voice there is death," said Michel gravely, to the impressed Indians. "If you will unload your sleds and camp here, near us, we will bring the skin of the Windigo to hang from your lodge poles before the moon changes."

After considerable discussion with his people the older Indian replied: "We do not wish to leave the hunting ground of our fathers. As you say, there is game on the ridges and in the creek bottoms. If you will camp here with the white medicine man and the shaman dog with the voice of the thunder, we will stay."

"We will camp here and keep the Windigo away," answered Michel, trusting that the beast would prove him a false prophet.

In the morning—leaving David at the camp to ease the fear of the women, Steele and Michel slipped into their snow-shoes and taking the hound, drove their sled with the traps to the first lines of marten and fox sets on the neighboring ridges. There, along the line which the Windigo had robbed, Michel set the six double-spring wolf traps under the new snow near the marten cabanes, chaining them to spruce logs, which he buried. Farther on, at two of the fox sets, Michel and Steele brought from their sled the two bear traps. These, also, were buried in the snow where an animal approaching the baited fox trap would step on the pan, releasing the yawning jaws.

It would take six days for Little Jacques to make the round trip to the post, and that night over the fire, while the Ojibways cowered in their tipi, the three men talked of what message he might bring. They wondered in what way Laflamme would show his teeth—for strike he would before the long snows faded; if he would dare again to send men to the post. It seemed unlikely, for he did not know that the head man was absent, the Iroquois, from Nipissing, who was known the length of the Wailing and the great Albany for the sureness of his eye over the sights and the possession of a stone-hard nerve. No, Laflamme would not send men to the post on so desperate a venture.

Five uneventful days passed. Confident of the supernatural powers of Steele and his strange dog whom they now heard in full voice in the forest following the trail of Michel, the Indians again began to travel their lines of traps. However, it was clear that a few more nights of the Windigo at Portage lake would mean a general exodus.

On the afternoon of the sixth day of Little Jacques' absence a dog-team limped slowly up the Still river trail.

"There he is!" cried Steele. "Now we'll hear how things have been going down below." And he hurried to the ice to meet the half-breed.

"Bo'-jo', Jacques! What's been driving you so hard. Your dogs are all in."

"Dere ees bad news down riviere."

"What's happened, quick? What is it?" Steele's heart skipped a beat, then started to pound, as he flinched from the answer to his question, when David and Michel, with anxious faces, joined him

"De night we leeve Wailing Riviere to hunt de Windigo, he holler on de ridge. De peopl' are ver' scare'."

Steele glanced at his friends to find them nodding in quiet satisfaction, then clapping the astonished half-breed on the back, burst out with:

"Jacques, that's not bad news; that's good news! He's moving around and we'll hear him yet. Where's the letter?"

The dog-runner handed Steele a letter wrapped in oil-skin which ran as follows:

"Monsieur Steele:

"Jacques brought your note. I am glad to learn that you have hope of the hound. On the night you left, the Windigo wailed again on the ridge opposite us.

"I am in fear that something has happened to Tete-Boule. He left for the caribou barrens a week before you reached us and is long overdue. Jacques tells me you did not find my message at the rendezvous. I sent Gaspard but he may have feared the Windigo and lied to me. My daughter and I are well and send our felicitations. Hilaire St. Onge."

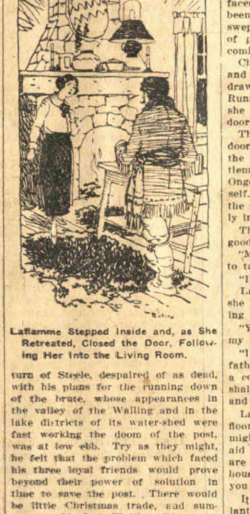
"Well, what have you got to say, Michel?" demanded.

"I say w'en de dog res', Jacques go down riviere an' breeng up grub. De Windigo ees on dis lak' now. We hear heem soon."

David nodded in acquiescence.

* * * * * * *

The day that Little Jacques left the post on his return to Portage lake with the letter to Steele from St. Onge, the factor sat in his trade-room staring with unseeing eyes at the wall. The hope inspired by the return of Steele, despaired of as dead, with his plans for the running down of the brute, whose appearances in the valley of the Wailing and in the lake districts of its water-shed were fast working the doom of the post, was at low ebb. Try as they might, he felt that the problem which faced his three loyal friends would prove beyond their power of solution in time to save the post. There would be little Christmas trade, and summer would find Wailing River deserted.



Laflamme Stepped Inside and, as She Retreated, Closed the Door, Following Her Into the Living Room.

As he sat brooding with his pipe, the jingle of dog bells brought him to his feet. Could it be Jacques returning for something he had forgotten? St. Onge threw on his duffle capote and went out, to meet a panting team of huskies, the steam of their hot breaths rising in clouds in the biting air.

"Tete-Boule! We thought something had happened!"

"I see Michel at de fork of de Stoopin'. He geeve me dis for you." Teta-Boule produced from his sled a roll of birch-bark, on which were traced with a charred stick syllabic characters in Ojibway.

St. Onge translated: "Come to fork Stooping river quick when you get this from Tete-Boule. Michel."

"You met Michel upriver?" asked the surprised factor.

"Yes, he cum dere at daylight, w'ere I camp. Hees dog can travel no more. He geeve dis to me so you get dere before sun go down, and he res' hees dog. He go back Portage lak' dis sleep."

"Did he say what had happened? He gave you no letter from Steele?"

"M'sieu Steele ees ovair on de Leetle Current wid Daveed."

"But why does he want to see me tonight?"

"He foun' somet'ing on de Portage lak'. He not tell me."

Of course, thought St. Onge, Michel would not confie in the medicine man he hated. But what could they have found? If he were to make the fork before dark, there was no time to waste. Ordering his own team harnessed and provisions and blankets put on the sled, St. Onge hurried to the house.

"Denise, my dear! Tete-Boule 's back with a message from Michel, whom he met at the fork. I must start at once. You may expect me back tomorrow afternoon."

"Monsieur Steele sent you no message?"

"No! They are all well. I've got to travel to make the fork before dark, so au revoir, my dear girl!"

He kissed her and left. From the window she watched his dogs take the river trail at a wild gallop. The hooded driver turned and waved back at the girl at the window, and shortly, the sled reached the bend and was gone.

"It will be lonely here tonight, but I have dear old Charlotte. I shall play her to sleep in her chair."

Denise took the violin from its case and laid her cheek caressingly on the strings. "What would I do here without you?" she whispered. "Father and you! Once I thought he had joined us—was one of us. But after his admission, and this—" She took from a drawer in a desk a letter, and read it slowly. And in her face was anguish. Then she replaced it in the drawer.

The letter had been given to her in person by the Indian who stopped on his way from Ogoke to Albany in October—the Indian who had told Michel of the drowning of Steele and David in the rapids of the Jackfish. And the signature at the end of the letter addressed to Denise St. Onge was that of—Rose Laflamme.

Later, Denise and Charlotte were finishing the luncheon dishes, when their attention was attracted by dog-bells in the clearing.

"Could father have turned back?" she remarked.

The women went to a window and looked out to see a group of men and two teams of dogs in front of the trade-house.

"Who can it be? I cannot see their faces! The large man has never been here before!" cried Denise, swept by a wild fear—a premonition of personal peril. "One of them is coming here!"

Charlotte hastily left the window and shuffling to a table, took from a drawer a sinister-looking meat knife. Running a hard thumb over its edge, she calmly said: "I weel stay by de door."

There was a loud knock on the door of the factor's quarters. Then the blood of French soldiers and gentlemen in the veins of Denise St. Onge flamed in her face—proved itself. With a firm step she went to the door and opening it, looked proudly into the eyes of Louis Laflamme.

The free-trader had made his threat good.

"Mademoiselle St. Onge, I have come to talk with you."

"It is evident, monsieur."

Laflamme stepped inside and, as she retreated, closed the door, following her into the living-room.

"You will pardon me if I throw off my coat," he said.

"I do not desire trouble here in my father's absence," she protested with a confidence she did not feel, "but I shall send Charlotte to call our men and force you to leave this post."

Laflamme laughed, as he paced the floor nervously. "Your men? You might better call on your women to aid you. Two of your brave retainers are under guard now, in the trade house. We couldn't find the others, if you have them."

It was clear to the girl, who gallantly fought with her fear of Laflamme's purpose in coming to the post when she was alone—helpless, that he controlled the situation, and would be heard.

"What have you come here for, monsieur?" she began.

The bold face of the trader flushed as he gazed at the girl whose memory had taken his peace of mind. The hardness of the mouth softened, in the dark eyes was the look of a boy as he answered:

"It is a story you have heard before, mademoiselle. But I am here to tell it at a time when you will be wise to listen. This is a ruined fur post. Your father will be forced to leave in the spring. What does that mean to you?"

Speaking Plainly

A farmer who had married a rich woman was constantly irritated by having the fact of his wife's wealth thrown up at him by the wife herself and by her relatives. Whenever he bought anything, or made any improvement on the farm, it was always, "If it wasn't for my money you wouldn't have been able to do that." One day the farmer brought back from market a fine cow that he had bought for a mere song. While he was exhibiting the animal to an admiring group of farm-hands, his wife came on the scene. "Well, Nellie," he said proudly, "isn't this a splendid cow?" "Yes," she replied coldly, "but if it wasn't for my money it wouldn't be here." Exasperated, the farmer yelled out, "No, woman, and if it hadn't been for your money you wouldn't have been here yourself."

Foretell Weather by Watching the Birds

That birds are able to perform feats that are impossible to human beings has long been known to science, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. They have, for instance, a most marvelous sense of direction. This cannot be put down to memory, for young birds reared in England will go straight to the same African haunts to which their parents went weeks before them.

But it is as weather prophets that birds excel, according to an English naturalist. Swallows, martins and swifts, he says, will tell if the following day is to be fine. If they are flying really high, say, 500 to 1,000 feet above the ground, a whole week of sunshine may be expected. If they are only 50 feet high, the outlook is doubtful. But if they skim a few feet above the ground, rain is certain.

A tame raven invariably slept on the southwest porch of a home. Twice in two years it changed to the northwest side, and both times a terrific gale blew from the southwest. When a wood filled with singing birds is suddenly silenced a thunderstorm is usually due. It often is observed, too, that if migrating birds fly north instead of south late in fall a mild winter may be expected.

Faults are easier seen than virtues.

Muskegon Heights—For the seventh time during his 45-year residence here, Martin Schoenberg has been elected mayor of Muskegon Heights, defeating Mrs Kaja Lindland.

Detroit—Michigan's gasoline tax of 2 cents a gallon raised $8,236,078 revenue last year, which was the fourth highest amount accruing to any state according to figures made public by the United States Bureau of Public Roads.

Detroit—Removing ice and snow from city streets during the winter cost Detroit taxpayers $127,000, according to a report to the Council by John W. Reid, commissioner of Public Works. The recent heavy snow fall cost the city $12,000.

Wyandotte—Formal opening of the filtration and electric plant of Wyandotte was held Easter Sunday, when more tha n500 visitors inspected the establishment. The plant has been in partial operation since 1919. During the last three years $300 000 has been expended in adding to its facilities.

Ypsilanti—Miss Marcia V. Hall, local clubwoman and Democratic candidate for mayor, was defeated in the recent election by Hugh Van de Walker, Republican incumbent, by a vote of 600 to 419. Miss Hall had conducted an energetic campaign and carried one of the five wards in the city by a slight majority.

Flint—With a prospective record enrollment of 600 students the Flint Institute of Technology, educational division of the Industrial Mutual association, commenced the spring term of school Monday evening, April 5, authorities said. Many of the students of the winter course continued their work for the spring session.

Dowagiac—Fred Cross, 28 years old, Michigan's youngest mayor, was defeated for re-election recently by a majority of only six after one of the hottest elections in the history of the city. A. O. Neidner, his opponent, running on a platform favoring expansion of the municipal lighting plant, polled 877 votes to Cross' 871.

Grand Rapids—Grand Rapids will henceforth not employ any married women as teachers in the public schools, the board of education has decided. At the end of each semester, all women teachers who have married before the expiration of their contracts will be placed automatically on the substitute list under substitute salary regulations. The edict does not affect married teachers now employed.

Owosso—Seth Q. Pulver, of Owosso, a member of the Republican state central committe, has declared that he is not a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor. He was mentioned recently by a Grand Rapids paper as one of several possibilities to oppose Governor Groesbeck for renomination. Pulver is a candidate for the Republican nomination for state senator in the Eaton-Shiawassee-Clinton county district.

Flint—Police are searching for the murderer of Drury Banks, Negro, who was shot and instantly killed when two shotgun charges struck him in the chest and face at close range in the dining room of his rooming house at 1703 Elm street. Patrolmen Ben Baker and W. A. Davis found Banks' body on the floor of his home. A shotgun, with the barrel bent and ripped, was found on the floor with two empty shells and one full one.

Pontiac — Two hardy Pontiac youths recently broke the ice, literally, for the 1326 swimming season, when they chopped a hole through the frozen surface of Elizabeth lake and took the first swim. Snow was falling and there was little to suggest the settings for the popular summer resort. A number of witnesses were on hand to see that the boast of the pair, that they would be the first to go swimming this year, was carried out.

Lansing—The city of Lansing will be enriched about $85,000 by the terms of the settlement of the George E. Ranney estate, and reduction of fees claimed by the executors, which had promised to be a long fought court duel between the city and two heirs and the administrators. The value of the estate, originally $200,000, has increased to $440,000. The reduced fee will be paid by the two heirs. The city is given one-sixth of the value of the property.

Ishpeming — Ishpeming's "Easter parade" consisted of a procession of residents carrying bottles, jugs and pails. The city's water supply was cut off at noon the day before by a break in the lead water main. The situation was critical for a time, when the home of Mrs. Mathilda Holmgren, on Strawberry Hill, caught fire. The firemen were forced to stand around helplessly and watch the building burn. Two others were damaged and a general conflagration was feared.

Monroe—Agents of the Detroit & Ironton railroad, property of Henry Ford, recently bought 200 acres of land lying along the right-of-way of the railroad at the southern outskirts of Petersburg, it has been announced through an official source. It is understood the owners received from $200 to $500 per acre. Options also have been secured for a half section of land, one and a half miles long and approximately a half mile wide, adjacent to the right-of-way. It is stated that railroad shops and factories will be erected.

Saginaw—Members of the Saginaw County Bar association have been informed by the Detroit bar that delegations of attorneys from eastern Michigan are to be urged to go to Washington, D. C., in the immediate future, to aid the bill introduced recently, providing for an additional United States district judge in this section of Michigan. It is believed that although he has made no announcement so far, Circuit Judge C. M. Browne will, in the event the bill becomes a law, be a candidate for the appointment.

MIDDLE AGE BRINGS NEW INTERESTS

For Women in Good Health

MRS. HARVEY TUCKER
408 WALKER STREET, SHELBYVILLE, IND.

"Grow old along with me,
The best is yet to be"

With her children grown up, the middle-aged woman finds time to do the things she never had time to do before—read the new books, see the new plays, enjoy her grandchildren, take an active part in church and civic affairs. Far from being pushed aside by the younger set, she finds a full, rich life of her own. That is, if her health is good.

Thousands of women of middle age, say they owe their vigor and health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Those who have learned through their own experience the merit of this dependable medicine are enthusiastic in recommending it to their friends and neighbors.

"I had been in bad condition for three months. I could not do my work. One day I read what your medicine had done and just had a feeling that it would help me, so I sent and got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I had only taken half a bottle when I got up and started to do my work. It gave me an appetite, and helped me wonderfully. I can not praise this medicine highly enough. I surely will advise all women and girls to take it, and they don't have to use rouge to look healthy. My two daughters are taking it now and one is also using the Sanative Wash. I am willing to have you use this testimonial and I will answer letters from women asking about the medicine."—Mrs. Harvey Tucker, 408 Walker St., Shelbyville, Indiana.

"I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the little books you give away and began to take the medicine. After the first few bottles I began to feel better and could eat better and had fewer headaches. I feel like a different person. At anytime that I don't feel good I take the Vegetable Compound again, as I always keep a bottle on hand. You may use this letter for every word is true. I will answer any letters sent to me."—Mrs. Jennie Bollerman, 516 Smith St., West Hoboken, N. J.

Got Heat From Engine

When the heating plant of the Nashua (N. H.) railroad station went on a strike, a passenger engine was used to supply heat temporarily. The locomotive was run on a side track and connections were made with the steam pipes of the station.

Canadians Egg Eaters

Canadians last year ate an average of 312 eggs apiece, according to statistics made public by the Dominion department of agriculture. Domestic production totaled 237,000,000 dozen, representing an increase of 10,000,000 over the previous year.

"Always tell the truth," is time old slogan which elders are always pleased to keep dinning in the ears of young people from one generation to another. It is a good slogan but difficult to follow for the world in which people are brought up, is one which tends to produce hypocrites instead of truth tellers and worst of all the grown ups are to a great extent responsible. At 5 years children are honest in expressing their likes and dislikes, at 10 a little less honest and at 16 or 17 years young people while often times desiring to approve of the best thing have learned that "Discretion is the better part of valor" and that soft soap is more to be relied upon than straight, forward opinions. Many examples could be given for instance the murder a short time ago of two Pennsylvania young people a boy and a girl, whose only crime was that of working against the whisky guzzlers. Let the adults think it over.

What Does It Cost To Manufacture

We doubt if the majority of maple syrup producers in this part of Michigan have figured out their expenses in the business and for the benefit of such we are giving a few statistics as put out by the Agricultural College at Lansing. This institution maintains a bush consisting of over 600 mature trees, and this is about the run of cost per gallon figuring man labor at 40 cents per hour and horse labor at 20 cents per hour.

Cost per gallon;

Washing buckets	15c
Tapping	.09c
Gathering sap	.71c
Boiling sap	.53c
Taking up buckets	.06c
Fuel	.42c
Containers	.20c
Drawing Water	.03c
Drawing wood	.02c
Depreciation of plant	.14c

Total cost of gallon $2 35

Perhaps the average farmer does not figure his costs so much as he supposes he would otherwise be idle at this season of the year and he can hire dependable help in this vicinity at 25c per hour, and his fuel is the trimmings of the wood-lot not considered fit for stove wood The above is possibly a little high for this community, but the producer's profit is only about 20 cents per gallon which is not nearly as much as it should be. He should receive not less than $3.00 per gallon which should give him a profit of not less than 75c per gallon.

E. R. Benson, who lives alone on his farm south-east of town, finds considerable enjoyment in passing his evenings fashioning articles with the pocket knife. He recently exhibited a specimen of his work which certainly required skill and patience. From a bass wood stick one inch in square he has whittled a series of eight cages containing eight balls perfectly round, one inch in diameter

The County Highway Department were in the vicinity recently doing road repair work both east and north of the village. We note with satisfaction that the village street commissioner, Harley Fry has caused our back streets to assume a good surface by use of the floater, where at one time this spring it seemed as if the street had no bottom.

New York Central's first hundred years

New York Central this year joins that growing company of American institutions with hundred-year records of service.

It was on April 17, 1826, that New York State granted the charter for the construction of the first link in the New York Central Lines—the pioneer Mohawk and Hudson Rail Road, over which was first operated in 1831 the historic De Witt Clinton train, from Albany to Schenectady.

That courageous experiment of a century ago became the nucleus of the 12,000-mile railroad system that now stretches across the richest industrial region in the world, from the Mississippi Valley and the Great Lakes region to the Atlantic seaboard, and carries one-tenth of the rail-borne commerce of the nation.

New York Central enters its second century of service with a record of achievement that is an inseparable part of the story of American progress.

Pyrotol, war salvage explosive, will again prove a valuable servant for Michigan farmers this spring and summer. More than 150,000lbs. has already been ordered for spring delivery in the state, according to N. A. Kessler, M. S. C. extension specialist. Orders for this cheap explosive, which is particularly valuable as an aid in clearing stumps and boulders from farm land, are pooled by the county agricultural agents of the state. Pyrotol is delivered at cost, thru government and state cooperation. While it is not known just how long the supply will last, Mr. Kessler says that orders can be accept-safely until about July 1.

Patron-Teacher's Meeting

Again last Monday evening the Association met at the High School building with a good program of vocal music, Margaret Meeks rendering some solos with her mother at the piano. Lantern slides on the sanitary up-keep of the home and the common house fly were given and much that was instructive, was gleaned. The audience, while not large, was appreciative.

Insect Lantern Trap Called Not So Good

That more harm than good will follow the use of "lantern traps" to capture noxious insects is the word given out here this week by Prof. R. H. Pettit, head of the entomology department at M. S. C.

The lantern trap has been recommended recently by some agencies in the state, but Professor Pettit draws on the experience of more than a quarter century to warn against the use of the "trap" This manner of killing insects is said actually to work in a way, but the joker is that parasitic and other forms which are distinctly beneficial are also destroyed by the lantern trap.

"As far back as 1890", says Professor Pettit, experiments at Cornell University showed that while some few noxious insects were captured in this way, many more times the number of beneficial kinds were destroyed at the same time.

Trap lanterns were advertised and sold years ago in the hope that they would do some good. However, long experience and careful counts have shown that the practice, if generally adopted, would do more harm than good.

They Don't Understand The Law

The old saying that ignorance excuses no one who breaks the law is exemplified in the new rulings which have recently been put out by the Law makers at Lansing relative to Township boards publishing full itemized accounts of their financial condition just before election. Adams township did not do this nor did Moscow. Both are liable to prosecution for this oversight. The law will be enforced without fail and we might say this is not for the benefit of the printers either; it is for the good of the community at large.

"There's a Week's Work of Fencing—Done in a Day"

A good many of our customers have made that very remark after they tried out the Red Top Steel Fence Post.

For instance, you can drive over 200 of these posts in a day without a helper. Some have driven as high as 300. The One-Man Driver makes this possible. What a difference from the old back-breaking method of setting wood posts. No post hole digging and no tamping with Red Tops. This saving on labor costs makes the price on Red Tops installed very low.

That's not the only saving you'll make. One Red Top will outlast at least two wood posts. And there is very little fence repair work required with Red Tops. The Handy Fence Fasteners which come free with the posts can't loosen up and let go of the wire, so there isn't this constant restretching, restapling and upkeep.

We've picked the Red Top line because we know it is the leader and we believe it to be the biggest value for the money. One of our main policies is to pick goods that are bound to please our customers. We want you to feel that no matter what you buy of us you are getting as much or more for your money than you get anywhere.

Come in and look over our stock of Red Tops. Prices are mighty reasonable now.

TWO HOMES MADE HAPPY

By Women Who Used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I think it is the most wonderful medicine I ever tried," is the statement made by Mrs. Goldie Shoup of May View, Illinois. She declares that after taking the Compound she is in better health than before.

Mrs. J. Storms of 29 Lane Street, Paterson, N. J., writes: "I can not speak too highly of your medicine and I recommend it to all my friends."

These statements were taken from two enthusiastic letters which tell of the help that has been received from using the Vegetable Compound. Both Mrs. Shoup and Mrs. Storms were in a run-down condition which caused them much unhappiness. When women are suffering from lack of strength and from weakness, their own life and that of their family is affected. When they feel well and strong and are able to do their housework easily, happy homes are the result.

Thousands of testimonial letters have been received from women in different walks of life, stating that the Compound has helped them.

Muffler Changes Gas

One of the most serious perils of the automobile, carbon-monoxide gas, is reported to have been eliminated in a special muffler devised by a Paris engineer, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. It not only does away with all traces of smoke but destroys the poisonous gas by transforming it into harmless carbon dioxide. This is done by a heating element in the muffler which completes the combustion of the vapor.

Sick bodies made strong

"Before taking Tanlac I was badly run down. Used to toss in a cold sweat at night, couldn't sleep. Was irritable and weak. I now sleep and eat naturally, have gained 15 lbs. Would not be without Tanlac." Mrs. Casper Janicki, 1102 Broadway, Superior, Wis.

After a spell of Grippe or flu, when your system is all run down and your legs are so weak they can hardly hold up your body, start right in taking Tanlac.

It's wonderful how soon you really do improve! Tanlac sails right in and puts the system in fighting trim. It cleans the blood, revitalizes the digestive organs, gives you an appetite for solid food and makes you feel like a new person.

Nothing will turn the trick quite as fast as Tanlac, made after the famous Tanlac formula from roots, barks and herbs. Buy a bottle today and get started back to full strength and vigor. Take Tanlac Vegetable Pills for constipation.

After using one box of Doan's Pills, I was rid of the trouble."

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

What Senator McKinley's Defeat in Illinois Republican Primaries Means.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

ILLINOIS Republicans administered a severe jolt to the World court last week, and the opponents of American adhesion to that tribunal are correspondingly elated. Senator William B. McKinley was a candidate for renomination in the primaries and the fight against him was based solely on the fact that he voted for American membership in the World court. He was defeated by Frank L. Smith of Dwight by about 125,000 votes. Washington was watching the contest with intense interest, and such men as Senators Borah of Idaho and Reed of Missouri professed to see in the result a portent that other senators who supported the World court proposition would be retired and that ultimately the act of American adhesion would be repealed. Though there was no statement forthcoming from the White House, the administration forces were plainly somewhat disconcerted and the World court senators who come up for re-election this year did not conceal their anxiety. Norbeck of North Dakota and Ernst of Kentucky already have been renominated, but the list also includes Bingham (Rep., Conn.), Broussard (Dem., La.), Butler (Rep., Mass.), Cameron (Rep., Ariz.), Caraway (Dem., Ark.), Cummins (Rep., Iowa), Curtiss (Rep., Kans.), Dale, (Rep., Vt.), Fletcher (Dem., Fla.), George (Dem., Ga.), Gooding (Rep., Idaho), Jones (Rep., Wash), Lenroot (Rep., Wis.), Means (Rep., Colo.), Oddie (Rep., Nev.), Overman (Dem., N. C.), Pepper (Rep., Pa.), Shortridge (Rep., Cal.), Smith (Dem., S. C.), Smoot (Rep., Utah), Stanfield (Rep., Ore.), Wadsworth (Rep., N. Y.), Watson (Rep., Ind.), Weller (Rep., Md.), Willis (Rep., Ohio).

"Illinois," said Senator Borah, "has indexed the sentiment in this country against the League court. The campaign against the court will go forward as promised immediately after the vote in the senate. We have no intention of ceasing efforts until the matter is settled in the forum from which there is no appeal—until it is settled and settled right."

George E. Brennan, Democratic committeeman, running on a wet platform, easily won the Democratic senatorial nomination in Illinois, which was highly pleasing to all wets. They also professed to see, in the fact that Chicago voted in favor of boxing exhibitions, an assurance that the people were beginning to revolt against all sumptuary laws.

There is a lot of vague talk to the effect that the defeat of Senator McKinley, one of the strongest supporters of President Coolidge, indicates loss of prestige and popularity by the Chief Executive. The political guessers said if Republicans of other states followed the lead of those in Illinois there would be no lack of men to contest with Mr. Coolidge the presidential nomination in 1928. Chief of these, it was believed, would be Senator Borah.

SMITH W. BROOKHART was unseated by the senate as senator from Iowa and his place was given to Daniel F. Steck, who was immediately sworn into office, the first Democrat to represent Iowa in the senate since the Civil war. The vote was close—45 to 41. Fifteen Republicans voted to seat Steck, and nine Democrats and one Farmer-Labor senator lined up with the Republicans who stood by Brookhart. As has been said in this column before, it is understood that Brookhart will enter the Republican primary in June as an opponent of Senator Cummins for the nomination.

AN AGREEMENT was reached in the senate to vote on the Italian war debt settlement on April 21, and the administration forces were confident that the house bill approving the settlement reached by the commissioners would be passed.

The senate passed a house bill to increase pensions of veterans of the Spanish war, Philippine insurrection and the Boxer rebellion and their widows and dependents in an aggregate of $18,500,000 annually. The measure went to conference for adjustment of differences between the house and senate provisions.

The senate judiciary committee, considering a resolution which seeks information regarding the prosecution of Senator Wheeler last summer, was balked by the refusal of Attorney General Sargent to answer Senator Walsh's questions. Mr. Sargent's refusal was based on the ground that the resolution was improper and that the information desired by Senator Walsh should not be disclosed because "publication would be incompatible with the public interest."

COMPROMISE has been reached in the controversy over the proposed Great Lakes-Atlantic canal. Both sides have agreed that the army engineers shall survey both the all-American route and the St. Lawrence route and report to congress next fall.

BEN W. HOOPER, W. L. McMenimen and Samuel Higgins were reappointed to the federal railroad labor board by the President. Their terms will probably be short, as it seems certain the Watson-Parker bill abolishing the board will be passed.

TWO measures contemplating development of naval and commercial aviation were passed by the house. One authorizes the $100,000,000 five-year naval aircraft program which would give the navy 1,614 new planes. The other creates the office of second assistant secretary of commerce for the regulation of commercial air transportation systems.

CHURCH, labor and peace organizations through their spokesmen attacked the Capper-Johnson bill for universal man power and complete government control of industry in time of war, before the senate military affairs committee. The measure has the backing of the secretary of war and the American Legion.

"WHAT we want is the strongest thing in enforcement and the weakest thing in liquor" was the statement of Mrs. Henry Peabody of Boston before the senate committee when the prohibition hearing was resumed last week, and it summarized the pleas of the 64 women who were with her as representatives of numerous organizations. Stepping forward in rapid succession, they presented their arguments succinctly and effectively, and if they were rather lacking in statistics, they made up for this by their fervor and by the realization that they were speaking for great bodies of women firmly united in opposition to any change in the Volstead act unless it were to make it more drastic.

Having yielded this day to the dry women, the wets took charge again. Father Kasaczun, a priest of the Pennsylvania anthracite region, and Mrs. Viola Andrews, chief of probation officers in New York, told of the evil effects of the Volstead law as observed by them in their respective territories; and the Moderation league of New York offered a huge mass of statistics and graphs. Then Gen. Lincoln C. Andrews, chief dry enforcer, was recalled to the stand and under questioning admitted that in his opinion the enforcement of the liquor laws would be easier if beer of a low alcoholic content were distributed under government supervision for home consumption. He said the sale of such beer in saloons should not be permitted as it might serve as a blind for bootlegging of hard liquor. Having brought out a lot of information as to the vast number of stills that are being operated, Senator Reed continued:

"Now, I want to ask you, as a man and a citizen, don't you think that the manufacture of liquor in the homes has a tendency to put the American home into direct and intimate contact with liquor?"

"Of course it does," replied Andrews.

"Is not this," questioned Reed, "bringing millions of families into contact with the manufacture and drinking of liquor; this secrecy, this contact with the police—is not all this utterly destructive of the morals of the home in which this goes on?"

"Unquestionably, it is seriously injurious," admitted the general.

All of which caused elation among the wets and led the dry leaders to say unpleasant things about Andrews, some even demanding his removal by the President.

With completion of the wets' case, the board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal church resumed the presentation of testimony in behalf of the drys' contention that the Volstead act not only should not be weakened but should be made more rigid than it is, if changed at all.

In the senate Bruce and Edge, wet leaders, prodded Borah until the Idahoan indulged in a dry outburst that brought the galleries to their feet with shouts of applause despite the efforts of Vice President Dawes to maintain order. Borah denounced the proposals of the wets to modify the Volstead act as schemes to evade the Constitution and therefore treasonable and tending to legal chaos, constitutional anarchy and the breakdown of constitutional government.

MUSSOLINI'S visit to Tripoli was watched with great interest. The premier was given a reception worthy of an emperor and his speeches there continued to suggest that the plan is to form a new Roman empire, though he is careful not to intimate that Italy seeks to acquire any more territory in Africa. Correspondents with his expedition seem to think no more land is needed as Libya's coastal plain is a valley 800 miles long and 200 miles wide, with more cultivable land than there is in all Italy. If properly developed it will furnish an outlet for Italy's surplus population. The land is very cheap now and does not need irrigation. Mussolini is the first chief of the Italian government to realize fully the possibilities of this region.

FRANCE and Spain called the Riffians to a peace conference at Oudja and handed them an ultimatum. If their terms are not accepted they are ready to launch a combined offensive that probably will wipe out the rebels. These terms include the abdication and virtual exile of Abd-el-Krim and the disarmament of the tribes. The allies offer to restock the herds of the tribesmen and to supply funds for the development of the country. Krim will be provided for suitably if he will give in.

FOR the second time Russia has unofficially declared it will not participate in the preliminary disarmament conference called for May 18 in Geneva, and it will not be asked again. Reports in London are that the conference may be postponed or abandoned, the French move to this effect now having the support of Poland, Rumania and some other states on the Russian border.

France and Germany have concluded negotiations abrogating most of the clauses of the Versailles treaty restricting German aviation development and have signed an accord permitting commercial flying without hindrance over both countries.

LATEST reports from China were that the Manchurian troops of Marshal Chang had broken the lines of the national army commanded by Feng and were about to attack Peking itself. It seemed likely they would soon be in possession of the city. Marshal Wu Pei-fu, who had been invited by the national army leaders to take supreme command at the capital, had made no move to accept, but was waiting with his army west of Peking, ready to take advantage of the situation, whatever it might be.

LUTHER BURBANK, the world's most eminent horticulturist and a great benefactor of mankind, died at his California home and his body lies at the foot of a cedar of Lebanon in the garden where he carried on many of his most notable experiments in the development of fruits, flowers and vegetables.

BLOODY Herrin, in Williamson county, Illinois, was in the hands of the state troops again after a renewal of the klan warfare at the primaries. Six men were killed and many wounded before the guardsmen gained control of the situation. Further fighting on election day was predicted.

Plan Pan-American Journalistic Body

Washington.—The organization of a pan-American association of journalists was approved in one of the resolutions adopted at the pan-American congress of journalists. The purpose of the permanent organization would be to "investigate and report upon the practicability of the interchange of news between the constituent members of this organization in both American continents."

The congress declared in the first of a series of some twenty resolutions adopted that "its fundamental purpose is to create bonds of sympathy and closer understanding among the nations here represented; to secure a fuller interchange of news; to guard against misrepresentation of the peoples concerned and to establish a code of ethics which shall be acceptable and binding upon publications here represented."

Another resolution recommended resort to arbitration for the settlement of all disputes between American republics, not only of political character, but all disagreements which affect the interests or harmony between the nations of the Western hemisphere.

Still another resolution recommends the establishment in New York city of a salon for the promotion of artistic production in the Western hemisphere. This suggestion was advanced by Dr. Jorge Mitre, editor of La Nacion, Buenos Aires, and is well supported.

"Smokeless" Soft Coal

An invention is being tried out to make soft coal burn without emitting any considerable quantity of smoke. By first thoroughly wetting the coal, even of the cheapest grade, and then burning it under a forced draught, it is said much of the smoke is eliminated. The coal thus burned is said to be more efficient as the smoke represents a waste of carbon. More air helps combustion.
